It has been remarked by some that there is a great deficiency of timber in this country, but this assertion later travellers deny. Taking the whole country together, there is an abundance of timber for all useful purposes, particularly when the mildness of the climate is considered, fuel never being necessary for purposes of comfort.—The climate is perpetual spring, neither the heat of summer or the coldness of winter is experienced. The country is sufficiently well watered, and its commercial advantages cannot be surpassed. The Bay of St. Francisco, for extent of anchorage and extent of harbor, is unparalleled. Besides this, there are several bays affording very commodious and safe anchorage, those for instance of Monterey, San Diego, and Bodega. At each of these towns have been commenced. Monterey is the seat of government.

The population of Upper California is about seven or eight thousand, about two thirds of whom are native Indians; the other portion is composed of the mongrel species of humanity called Mexican, being a mixture of Indian, Negro, and Spaniard, there being, however, a few foreigners principally American. The government of course, is Mexican. All foreigners can obtain lands by becoming citizens. The number of foreigners at present, is said to be about five hundred.

CAUTION.

HAVING once notified the Public against receiving a certain currency, called 'Kirkland Safety Society,' I again caution all persons against receiving of, or trading in, said paper money as all that was issued as genuine was redeemed; after the first officers who signed said bills retired, a new set of officers were appointed, and the result of the institution was broken open and robbed of several hundred thousand dollars the signatures forged upon the said stolen bills, and the said bills are being shilly bartered or had in trade for the purpose of willful and malicious prosecution and collection. In the first place, the bills are not collectable by law in an unchartered institution; in the second place they are spurious, the signatures being a forgery, and every person passing or trading a bill in guilty of passing counterfeit money, besides the barefaced act of swindling. And lastly, he that uses said bills in any way as a medium of trade, is guilty of fraud and shows a wicked and corrupt determination to willfully, maliciously, and feloniously rob the Latter Day Saints; and if the executors of the laws, are as ready to mete out even handed justice to such men as to the Mormons, more indictments, will indicate more honesty. Time will show.

with ships; navigate the lakes and rivers for convenience and dam the lesser streams for mills; establish slaughter houses, meeting houses, convents, printing presses, &c.; and all is well, unless they infringe upon others' rights, or the peace, or injure the reputation or happiness of community, or disturb the general peace of society: in which case, says Judge Kent, 'The government may, by general regulations, interdict such uses of property as would create nuisances, and become dangerous to the lives, or health, or peace, or comfort of the citizens.' [See page 276, Con.]

Nuisances are of various kinds; and any thing that destroys life, injures health, reputation, or the common happiness of man; must be so considered, and can be abated or removed by authority. Mill dams, slaughter houses, presses that issue libels upon community or individuals, and even men and women, (by insamy and intemperance,) may become nuisances, and Congress has no right to make any law touching the freedom of these, or religion, the right is reserved to corporations, or states; where the power not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states or the people, the people have a right to judge by legal legislation their own grievances, correct the abuse, and guard against the evil for the future.

The tenor by which charters are granted and continued, need not in this place be discussed. Every charter must be interpreted according to the reading, and must continue according to its stipulations.

The charter of the Constitution of the United States, as well as the several states, is perpetual succession, and the charters of all cities are the same, and together with the reserved rights, embrace every thing above and below. As far as the grant extends, with the exception of the jurisdiction of the authority to try transgression, or adjudicate in larger sums, and this is a matter of mere superiority delegated to the few, against the integrity of the many; for who does not know, that municipalities, with four or five judges, would be more apt to come to the real merits of the case than one judge.

To conclude, the intent, aim, and essence of all the constitutions and laws of our country, are to give every person an equal right and privilege in religious belief and worship; and the enjoyment and possession of property, and the enjoyment and happiness of life. These facts of themselves, are sufficient reasons then, to warrant us in saying: the nearer you can bring courts and justice to the people, the better; the sooner administered, the better, and at the least expense the better, whether the remedy is found in the justices', municipal or supreme courts.

There is a noble and independent spirit it breathed through the following article. If every editor had the boldness to take the same stand relative to our home disturbances in Hancock county, much trouble, turmoil and excitement would be saved the country. If law has been violated by the citizens of this city, the law provides a remedy—let that have its course and we are content. We are a tion. Cannon arms, and military stores have gone forward as we are informed, from this city. We doubt it very much. We cannot think we have men amongst us so fool-hardy; besides, where did the cannon come from? Are they the property of the State or of the United States? We hope for the sake of poor human nature, that there is more smoke than fire about this third Mormon war. All parties concerned in the other two, disgraced themselves and the State. We hope hereafter, there is to be no blood spilt in these Mormon crusades. We cannot see what monstrous peculiarities there are in a community of Mormons, that cannot be made amenable to law. When a difficulty occurs with the Mormons, all seem to grasp the rifle instinctively, as though no law but the club law was ever heard of among us. Let the hostile pause and enquire of the oracles of humanity, of religion, of civil liberty, and of law, before they become the assassins of their fellow citizens.

The public arms held by the Nauvoo Legion, was, on the 24th inst., given up to the State, by order of the Governor.

For the Neighbor.
Wonderful things in Nauvoo! Terrible things from the great Mormon Empire! Church and State! Religion and Politics! The modern PROPHET, a Candidate for President!!! Such are the exclamations of some of the remarkably intelligent citizens of our enlightened Republic. They seem thunderstruck at our audacity, in nominating a righteous man for the Presidency. All the great Reformers and learned Doctors have told us, that ecclesiastical and civil government must never be united; and warned us to be careful how we mingle religion with politics. Therefore we must have a Deist and Infidel, or an Atheist, at the head of the government: lest forsooth, if we have a Christian, Church and State will be United. Great God! what an idea!!! We must have a wicked man for President, lest a righteous man should mingle religion with politics. When such is the policy of a nation, we cannot wonder, that its citizens are oppressed, and its government dwindles away into insignificance.

If the advocates of such a wretched sentiment, had examined their Bibles, the foundation of all law, they would have discovered that such were not the opinions which governed the councils of heaven. For the Almighty continually revealed his will unto his people, and gave them directions, with regard to the management of their government; their wars, their conduct to other nations, and all affairs of a temporal nature. And when we examine the history of the Jews, the chosen people of God, we find that when they were governed by such righteous men as Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, and Solomon; they enjoyed the smiles of heaven, they conquered all their enemies, they flourished at home and abroad, they citizens have been arrested and placed in irons and the stocks, whom we have every reason to believe innocent. They are arrested merely on the single accusation or extorted evidence of the slave, under the torture of the lash. The most trifling conversation, or the least suspicious act, is sufficient to send one to prison, where he is neither allowed opportunity for defence, nor the consolation or sympathies of his friends or countrymen. There is a strong feeling against Americans, under the impression that the Government will seek no redress, which I most heartily hope may prove without foundation. Fear and terror are depicted on the countenances of all foreigners, and every one expects that he may be the next victim."

We have been furnished with the sub joined list of foreigners imprisoned at Cardenas, near Matanzas, for alleged or supposed complicity in the plot:

From Key West.—We have the 'Light of the Reef,' of the 13th and 20th ult.—The former states that the long continued drought at that place still continues, and that there has been no rain of importance for three months past. The 'Reef,' of the 20th, contains the following particulars received by an arrival from Havana, of the late negro conspiracy, which was to begin at Mantanzas and to be followed up throughout the entire Island of Cuba.

It is calculated (says that paper-) that upwards of 3,000 negroes have been killed, and they are actually strangling 25 daily, by the public executioners of Mantanzas. There were, besides, upwards of 3,000 confined in the jails of Havana, Mantanzas and Cardenas; amongst whom were 80 white women in the jail of Havana, who had agreed to marry the chiefs of the negroes. A mulatto was to be made President, and in his house was found a picture representing him in full uniform, with the daughter of the Marquis Arquois as his wife, and the Marchioness of Arquois washing the feet of the couple—he with a poniard, threatening her if she would not perform that office.

One of their plans was to put poison in the bread, and to fall upon the troops afterwards, and after killing or dispersing them, they would fall upon the white men and black women. The white children were to be thrown into pots of boiling oil, and only a few of the white and mulatto women were to be reserved for servants. The whole of the white women were to be killed excepting those of between 15 and 30 years of age, who were to be kept for their wives.

state of forwardness, under the superintendence of our scientific countryman, Major George Whistler, and will probably be completed in three years from this date.

Upper California is said to be the most fertile spot of earth known. It produces spontaneously oats, clover and flax, in great abundance and of an excellent quality. It is generally covered with a sort of short, fine grass, of which horses and cattle are very fond. The oats in many parts of the country are found 5 or 6 feet in height. The clover generally grows two or three feet high, and resembles our common red and white clover. The flax is of excellent quality. The soil is generally a black, deep vegetable loam; that of the hills and mountains is usually a light brown loam, or vegetable earth. The sub soil is generally gravel and sand, or uncultivated clay.

The principal grain grown as yet in California is wheat, which is raised in great abundance throughout the country. The crop ranges between 30 and 60 bushels to the acre, or to a bushel of sowing. As high as 133 fold has been produced; the spontaneous growth of the next year being 61 bushels the acre! The wheat raised in California is of a very different kind from the American; one stalk producing several stalks or heads. It is of an excellent quality and makes very superior flour. Indian corn, beans, peas, tobacco and all kinds of vegetables are grown with great success in all parts of the country. There is no part of the world, perhaps, more favorable to the growing of rice, cotton, and cane than California. Apples, pears, peaches, figs, almonds, olives, dates, oranges, lemons, citrons, pomegranates and grapes, may all be produced in great abundance. In fact, all the tropical fruits are, or may be produced in this climate.

In many parts of the country timber is very abundant, especially on the coast, where oak, ash, arbutus, arbutus vitæ and several species of cedar and pine are found. In the interior the timber is principally confined to the streams; but there are many sections of the streams which are well timbered. Both on the coast and in the interior is found the most admirable timber for ship-building.

It has been remarked by some that there is a great deficiency of timber in this country, but this assertion later travellers deny. Taking the whole country together, there is an abundance of timber for all useful purposes, particularly when the mildness of the climate is considered, fuel never being

It breathed through the following article. If every editor had the boldness to take the same stand relative to our home disturbances in Hancock county, much trouble, turmoil and excitement would be saved the country. If law has been violated by the citizens of this city, the law provides a remedy—let that have its course and we are content. We are a law abiding people, desirous to live in peace with our neighbors, and the only pretext that men have to excite them to hostilities and "extermination" is our religion. This is a truth to which we bear record to the world and we call on all honorable men, who honor the constitution and laws of their country, to see us protected in the exercise of these sacred rights. Let a healthy public sentiment be expressed denunciatory of the spirit of mobocracy, and the hydra-headed monster will hide itself forever beneath the overwhelming wave of shame and honest indignation.

Why all this commotion because a certain nuisance has been removed in our city? The Mayor and city council have been twice tried & acquitted, and are now having their third trial at Carthage, in compliance with the requisition of the Governor. They deliver themselves up to the law, and let the law settle the matter—law is the best conservator of the peace. All law abiding men will be satisfied with this.

From the People's (St. Louis) Organ.

THE MORMONS.

It would seem from the newspaper noise, that we are to have the scenes of Jackson county in 1833, and Caldwell county in 1838, re-enacted again at Nauvoo. It seems that a schism has been effected in the city of Zion, among the followers of the Prophet, and they are some interlopers, procured a press, and poured out their wrath upon the Prophet and his party. This wrath was highly tinged with slanderous charges against male and female, together with such noxious epithets as are calculated to stir up the blood.

The blood of the Prophet and his city dignitaries was set in motion, and by color of their law and in their municipal corporate body, made a descent upon this public nuisance as they declared it, and totally demolished the scandalous machine, the printing press. Now if it be true that there is a schism in the church of the latter day saints, why not let them alone to devour each other? What business have the Gentiles to interfere in this matter? Some of our equanimous editors bawled out lustily about the liberty of the press. What have they to do with the liberty of the press of Nauvoo? Let the saints settle between themselves. How long would a scurrilous press exist in this community, our neighbors are stumbling over beams to get at their neighbors' noses. Have we no civil law in this land? Nothing seems to satisfy the enemies of the Mormons but an immediate resort to arms, to bloodshed, to massacre, and extermination.

his will unto his people, and gave them directions, with regard to the management of their government; their wars, their conduct to other nations, and all affairs of a temporal nature. And when we examine the history of the Jews, the chosen people of God, we find that when they were governed by such righteous men as Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, and Solomon; they enjoyed the smiles of heaven, they conquered all their enemies, they flourished at home and abroad, they increased in numbers, wealth, honor and glory; and they lived in contentment, peace and happiness. But when they were ruled by such wicked men as Saul, Rehobah, Ahaz, Manasseh and Zedekiah, we see them decreasing in wealth and power, overcome by their enemies, divided among themselves, oppressed by their rulers, their country destroyed, themselves taken captive, and suffering the vengeance of a just God, offended by the depravity of their rulers. Truly "when the wicked rule the people mourn."

But our citizens seem to be ignorant of these facts, and to be determined to try the same course of conduct. Indeed they have tried it, until we are now on the very verge of anarchy and ruin; and the people smarting under their wrongs and oppression, are sounding, throughout the length and breadth of the land, the trumpet of Reform. From the north to the south, from the east to the west, the cry is heard in tones of thunder, Retrenchment and Reform!!! The time has come: we have long enough suffered under the rule of wicked men. Let us now have a righteous man at the head of the government. Citizens of the United States awake! be no longer trampled upon; make an effort now for your redemption. Arise in the majesty of your strength and shake off the chains which have so long fettered you; we have, long enough, had a president over a party; we have long enough, had a president over office holders and Aristocrats. Let us now have a President over the whole people.—We can expect no reformation under such rulers, as have disgraced the country for the last ten years; we must look for a different man. Let us have a man of pure and upright principles—of an independent mind—of true patriotism—a man who will execute the laws with justice and equity, regardless of consequences—a friend to the poor—an advocate of liberty—in short a Christian and a man of God. But where shall we find such a man? who is there possessed of such a character in this degenerated age? where is the man that will carry out such principles? Let the Latter day Saints answer—let all patriotic men answer—let all honest, upright lovers of their country answer—and let all the citizens of this vast republic answer, at the polls next fall, GEN. JOSEPH SMITH.

The Servile Insurrection in Cuba.—We are permitted to make the following extract from a letter of a recent date written by an American gentleman in Cuba to his friend in this city:

"At this time we are under very great excitement, in consequence of a servile insurrection having recently been discovered in the island, and particularly in this vicinity. Whites and blacks are alike implicated, and many American men and black women. The white children were to be thrown into pots of boiling oil, and only a few of the white and mulatto women were to be reserved for servants. The whole of the white women were to be killed excepting those of between 15 and 30 years of age, who were to be kept for their wives.

Fire in Waterbury, Ct.—The extensive Rolling Mills. Fire works, Pin Factory, &c. of Messrs. Brown and Elton, in the village of Waterbury, were destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning last. It is impossible to impure accurately the real loss—but it is probably in the neighborhood of $20,000—insurance, it is said, is effected on the property for $15,000.

From Havana.—Verbal intelligence to the 29th of April has been received at New York, by the barque General Harrison. The tenor is the same as for some time past—continual arrests at Havana and Matanzas, and a fearful frequency of executions. Four lawyers had been arrested, implicated, it was said, by the confession of some blacks under torture of the lash.

An order had been issued by the Government, ordering all coloured persons to leave the island in fifteen days, under a heavy penalty, which will be rigidly enforced. It was rumoured at Havana, the day before the General Harrison left, that one of the foreign consuls had been killed, together with six colored females at the city of St. Domingo. All was consternation at that place.

Mr. Clay's Democracy.—"If the gentlemen will not allow us to have black slaves, they must have white ones: for we cannot cut our firewood and black our shoes and have our wives and daughters work in the kitchen." [Henry Clay.]

Gen. Harrison's opinion of Mr. Clay.—"I will do my duty, even if Mr. Clay, is to be benefited by it, for I have experienced only ungenerous treatment in requital for years of devoted service.

[Gen. Harrison.]

American Enterprise.—Largest Contract ever Made.—The Emperor of Russia has contracted with Mr. Ross Winans, of Baltimore, and Messrs. Eastwick & Harrison, of Philadelphia, for the construction of one hundred and sixty-two Locomotives, with tenders for each, and five thousand three hundred burthen cars, together with duplicates of such parts of the machinery as may require to be renewed. Thirty locomotive engines, and one thousand car trucks are to be finished in 1845, and the like number is to be completed in each subsequent year to 1848, inclusive. The whole cost of the machinery here contracted for will be more than four millions of dollars! The locomotives and cars are intended for the Railroad between St. Petersburg and Moscow, which is four hundred miles in length. The whole line of road is now in a great terior is found the most admirable timber for ship-building.

It has been remarked by some that there is a great deficiency of timber in this country, but this assertion later travellers deny. Taking the whole country together, there is an abundance of timber for all useful purposes, particularly when the mildness of the climate is considered, fuel never being necessary for purposes of comfort.—The climate is perpetual spring, neither the heat of summer or the coldness of winter is experienced. The country is sufficiently well watered, and its commercial advantages cannot be surpassed. The Bay of St. Francisco, for extent of anchorage and extent of harbor, is unparalleled. Besides this, there are several bays affording very commodious and safe anchorage, those for instance of Monterey, St. Diego, and Bodega. At each of these, towns have been commenced. Monterey is the seat of government.

The population of Upper California is about seven or eight thousand, about two thirds of whom are native Indians; the other portion is composed of the mongrel species of humanity called Mexican, being a mixture of Indian, Negro, and Spaniard, there being, however, a few foreigners principally American. The government of course, is Mexican. All foreigners can obtain lands by becoming citizens. The number of foreigners at present, is said to be about five hundred.

Recipe for Curing Hams.—We have been handed the following recipe for curing hams by one of the most eminent practitioners in this city; the salaratus is at least new to us, and we therefore publish it, although it may not be a new ingredient in the recipe to others. In Cincinnati, where large quantities of hams are annually cured, pepper, allspice, cloves, nutmeg, cinnamon, and other little ingredients are usually added; but to the recipe.

Cover the bottom of the cask with coarse salt, lay on the hams with the smooth or skin side down; sprinkle over fine salt, then another layer of hams; and so continue until the cask is full. This ought to be the larger kind. A cask holding 64 gallons is small enough, and it would be better if it held 120 gallons. Make a brine in the following proportions:—6 gallons water, 9 pounds salt, 4 pounds brown sugar, 3 ounces saltpetre, 1 ounce salaratus. Scald and scum, and when cold pour the brine into the cask until the hams are completely covered. The hams should remain in this pickle at least three months, and a little longer time would do them no harm.—Amer. Agriculturist.

BUTTER WITHOUT CHURNING.—The Stamford (Eng.) Mercury says, that a cow belonging to Mr. Smith of that place, has been regularly milked for the last twelve months, but during the last thirteen weeks after standing for two meals as usual the cream when taken off has changed gradually to butter, without the assistance of churn of any description, and when made up is considered firmer than any other butter at this season of the year. Strange as this may appear it is an indisputable fact.

Currents.—We have noticed that considerable has been said of late, in recommendation of the growing of currants as standards or trees. We have heard it said that the fruit would be much larger, more plenty, and of better flavor. Such, however, has not been the result of our observation. We took notice of them in several gardens last season, where they were cultivated in both ways; and in every instance the experiment was greatly in favor of the old fashioned method of bush growing. When they are cultivated as trees, as the sun and air have free access to them, the fruit will ripen earlier. But the currant seems to be fond of moisture, which in the latter is too soon evaporated. We noticed some, in fact, which were partly shaded by a building, last season, which produced twice the quantity of fruit grown in the same number of bushes not so shielded. When the sun and air have free access to the fruit, it may be somewhat larger and sweeter; though we have not yet seen difference enough in this respect to compensate for the diminished quantity.

To destroy Bed Bugs.—As the hot season approaches, there will be desperate endeavors on the part of the vermin nations to extend their settlements. Nor will domestic affairs be at all neglected by them. But as their interests generally clash with those of the tenants of buildings, closets, and particularly of beds, a contest for superiority frequently takes place. In these contests it is very desirable to be armed with proper appliances, as on that the success of war mainly depends. Hot water, pepper, tobacco, and smart-weed are frequently relied on; but we believe that in such cases the victory is very generally, finally, with the biting and odor-bearing party. We advise the use of mercury or quicksilver, as the most effective instrument that can be employed. It is not material in what form it is applied; provided it is strong enough; but we believe the pure article beat into the white of an egg is perhaps as cheap and effective as any. We have tried this, and have found that the vermin cannot endure it at all. A very small quantity is sufficient to ensure an immediate surrender.

Young Poultry.—A correspondent of the Massachusetts Ploughman gives the following as his mode of raising turkeys. He hatches them under hens excepting the second or third laying, which is usually after June. He coops the hen for five or six weeks—the bottom of the coop boarded to prevent them from sitting on the ground—feeds them with fresh corn, mixed with a little meal—when very young with curd alone. He gives them some fresh boiled meat (two or three times a week) and supplies them constantly with fresh water—and is very careful not to let them out of the coop until the dew is dried off in the morning, nor when it rains.

He prefers the black ones as the white are so tender, that it is almost impossible to raise them.

Surprise.—The popular melody of "Dance, dance, dance," danced all night till broad daylight and he home with the birds in the morning, is thus rendered into verse:

Foreign News.

GREAT BRITAIN AND TEXAS.

The Boston Post of the 15th brings up a very interesting reminiscence. "The politicians of Great Britain look upon Texas with an interest that is little dreamed of in this country. It is viewed as of double importance to England: first, as destined to furnish an immense market for her manufactures, not only for its own consumption, but by smuggling for the Western country; Texas said a recent number of the Edinburgh Review, 'will either repeal the tariff of the U. S. or nullify its operations; and second, as furnishing an ample field for emigration, the fertile territory of Texas creates a demand for labor, said the same journal, which Great Britain alone can supply.' Hence it was that the British exerted so loudly at the treaties that were concluded with her by Lord Palmerston," said the same journal, "has given us an alliance of the greatest value." They excited, also, that the foundations of the new Republic, were laid on free trade principles, its exports for years, would be manufactured goods."

In proportion as this importance was magnified, was the satisfaction with which the rejection of Texas, by the administration of 1837, was viewed.

The Edinburgh Review of 1841 says:—"The United States, in refusing to admit Texas into their confederation, have rejected an offer, which, in all probability will never again be made to them; and Texas becoming, as years pass by, more and more attached to its own institutions, its own distinct policy, and its own national character, will speedily regard the United States with some of those feelings of jealousy, which nations always learn to entertain towards their nearest and most powerful neighbor. The commercial interests of Texas, and the antipathy to the northern portion of the U. S. States which she inherits from her kindred of the Southern states, will always tend to unite her with Great Britain."

And after detailing the advantages of a close alliance between Texas and Great Britain, the Review adds:

The bonds of ancient kindred may thus be knit with fresh strength, and the independence of Texas create only a wider diffusion of the British race and British sympathies."

From Mexico.—Advices from Mexico had been received at Havana to the 17th April and from Vera Cruz to the 23d. The Mexican Congress adjourned on the 31st March. On the 30th an act was passed extending the time to three years for the sale or re-shipment of goods in Art. 4 of the Decree of the 14th of August last.

A battle was fought near Alamos, in Sonora, between a gang of robbers and a company of militia, from that place. The militia were cut to pieces and hung on trees.

The Navahoe Indians have been beaten severely in New Mexico. The Mexicans took from them 500 horses and mules, and 1600 head of cattle.—Cir. Commercial.

Highly Important from Mexico.—Advices from the city of Mexico to the 25th ult., have been received at Savannah. From an article in the Diario, it appears that just about the time that President Tyler signed the treaty of Texas, the Diario del Gobierno Mexico remarked as follows: "What the Hesperia and the Correo Franceses, of to-day, say in regard to the annexation of Texas to the United States, cannot be true, and we have reason for believing it is not so." Our government has received its official correspondence from Washington, the contents of which are just the contrary of what these papers say. But be it as it may, our Government is determined not to lose the unwarped territory, and to that end she will use her best efforts to recover it, that the honor and dignity, and good name of the nation shall not suffer it. [Mis. Report.]

THE NATION ARISING FOR TEXAS.

Every mail brings us glowing accounts of the popular movements in all parts of the Union in favor of annexation. The excitement upon this great question of American liberty is spreading, and deepening in the public mind into an intense and burning interest. It is already sweeping like a mighty tempest from one end of the Union to the other. The people, the unfettered freemen of America, the worthy descendants of our glorious revolutionary sires, are rising up in one majestic, and resistless mass, and demanding that the young republic, severed from the Nation, and dismembered of freedom by traitorous hands, be re-admitted to her rightful place in the republican Union. Immense, and enthusiastic meetings of the people have been held in New Orleans, Mobile, Charleston, Raleigh, and throughout the whole South. Nor is the excitement confined to the South. The people of the North are moving boldly upon the subject. Meetings have been held in many parts of New England, and in New York a mass meeting was recently held at which, according to the papers of that city, ten thousand people attended, glowing with enthusiasm for immediate annexation. In vain do the vile satelites of Federalism endeavor to repress the rising excitement upon this momentous question by denouncing it a party hobby. They might as soon arrest the tides of the Ocean as stop the swelling march of annexation to its accomplishment. It is a question of American liberty and American humanity, and worthy and generous souls will be faithful to the cause.

Fire.—The Pittsburgh Spirit of the Age says: On Sunday morning, about half past 12 o'clock, a fire broke out in the warehouse of Messrs. Shoenberger's, in the Fifth ward, and was consumed before the progress of the flames could be arrested. Supposed to be the work of an incendiary. The firemen were on the ground, and prevented the further spread of the devouring element—they deserve much praise for their vigilance.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them. CAMPOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

Recipe for Curing Hams.—We have been handed the following recipe for curing hams by one of the most eminent practitioners in this city; the salaratus is at least new to us, and we therefore publish it, although it may not be a new ingredient in the recipe to others. In Cincinnati, where large quantities of hams are annually cured, pepper, allspice, cloves, nutmeg, cinnamon, and other little ingredients are usually added; but to the recipe.

Cover the bottom of the cask with coarse salt, lay on the hams with the smooth or skin side down, sprinkle over fine salt, then another layer of hams, and so continue until the cask is full. This ought to be the larger kind. A cask holding 64 gallons is small enough, and it would be better if it held 120 gallons. Make a brine in the following proportions:—6 gallons water, 9 pounds salt, 4 pounds brown sugar, 3 ounces saltpetre, 1 ounce salaratus. Scald and scum, and when cold pour the brine into the cask until the hams are completely covered. The hams should remain in this pickle at least three months, and a little longer time would do them no harm.—Amer. Agriculturist.

BUTTER WITHOUT CHURNING.—The Stamford (Eng.) Mercury says, that a cow belonging to Mr. Smith of that place, has been regularly milked for the last twelve months, but during the last thirteen weeks after standing for two meals as usual the cream when taken off has changed gradually to butter, without the assistance of churn of any description, and when made up is considered firmer than any other butter at this season of the year. Strange as this may appear it is an indisputable fact.

Currants.—We have noticed that considerable has been said of late, in recommendation of the growing of currants as standards, or trees. We have heard it said that the fruit would be much larger, more plenty, and of better flavor. Such, however, has not been the result of our observation. We took notice of them in several gardens last season, where they were cultivated in both ways; and in every instance the experiment was greatly in favor of the old fashioned method of bush growing. When they are cultivated as trees, as the sun and air have free access to them, the fruit will ripen earlier. But the currant seems to be fond of moisture, which in the latter is too soon evaporated. We noticed some, in fact, which were partly shaded by a building, last season, which produced twice the quantity of fruit grown on the same number of bushes not so shielded. When the sun and air have free access to the fruit, it may be somewhat larger and sweeter; though we have not yet

Foreign News.

GREAT BRITAIN AND TEXAS.

The Boston Post of the 15th brings up a very interesting reminiscence:

"The politicians of Great Britain look upon Texas with an interest that is little dreamed of in this country. It is viewed as of double importance to England: first, as destined to furnish an immense market for her manufactures, not only for its own consumption, but by smuggling for the Western country; 'Texas' said a recent number of the Edinburgh Review, 'will either repeal the tariff of the U. S. or nullify its operations;' and second, as furnishing an ample field for emigration, 'the fertile territory of Texas creates a demand for labor,' said the same journal, 'which Great Britain alone can supply.' Hence it was that the British exulted so loudly at the treaties that were concluded with her by Lord Palmerston," said the same journal, 'has given us an alliance of the greatest value.' They exulted, also, that the foundations of the new Republic were laid on free trade principles, its exports for years, would be manufactured goods."

In proportion as this importance was magnified, was the satisfaction with which the rejection of Texas, by the administration of 1837, was viewed.

The Edinburgh Review of 1841 says.—"The United States, in refusing to admit Texas into their confederation, have rejected an offer, which, in all probability will never again be made to them; and Texas becoming, as years pass by, more and more attached to its own institutions, its own distinct policy, and its own national character, will speedily regard the United States with some of those feelings of jealousy, which nations always learn to entertain towards their nearest and most powerful neighbor. The commercial interests of Texas, and the antipathy to the northern portion of the U. States which she inherits from her kindred of the Southern states, will always tend to unite her with Great Britain."

And after detailing the advantages of a close alliance between Texas and Great Britain, the Review adds.

"The bonds of ancient kindred may thus be knit with fresh strength, and the independence of Texas create only a wider diffusion of the British race and British sympathies."

From Mexico.—Advices from Mexico had been received at Havana to the 17th April, and from Very Cruz to the 23d. The Mexican Congress adjourned on the 31st March. On the 30th an act was passed extending the time to three years for the sale or re-shipment of goods in Art. 4 of the Decree of the 14th of August last.

A battle was fought near Almos, in Senora, between a gang of robbers and a company of militia, from that place. The militia were cut to pieces and hung on trees.

The Navaho Indians have been beaten severely in New Mexico. The Mexicans took from them 500 horses and mules, and 1600 head of cattle.—Cir.

Fire.—The Pittsburgh Spirit of the Age says: On Sunday morning, about half past 12 o'clock, a fire broke out in the warehouse of Messrs. Shoenberger's, in the Fifth ward, and was consumed before the progress of the flames could be arrested. Supposed to be the work of an incendiary. The firemen were on the ground, and prevented the further spread of the devouring element—they deserve much praise for their vigilance.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPHOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally, Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

used as trees, as the sun and air have free access to them, the fruit will ripen earlier. But the current seems to be fond of moisture, which in the latter is too soon evaporated. We noticed some, in fact, which were partly shaded by a building, last season, which produced twice the quantity of fruit grown on the same number of bushes not so shielded. When the sun and air have free access to the fruit, it may be somewhat larger and sweeter; though we have not yet seen difference enough in this respect to compensate for the diminished quantity.

To destroy Bed Bugs.—As the hot season approaches, there will be desperate endeavors on the part of the vermin nations to extend their settlements. Nor will domestic affairs be at all neglected by them. But as their interests generally clash with those of the tenants of buildings, closets, and particularly of beds, a contest for superiority frequently takes place. In these contests it is very desirable to be armed with proper implements, as on that the success of war mainly depends. Hot water, pepper, tobacco, and smart-weed are frequently relied on; but we believe that in such cases the victory is very generally, finally, with the biting and odor-bearing party. We advise the use of mercury or quicksilver, as the most effective instrument that can be employed. It is not material in what form it is applied, provided it is strong enough; but we believe the pure article beat into the white of an egg is perhaps as cheap and effective as any. We have tried this, and have found that the vermin cannot endure it at all. A very small quantity is sufficient to ensure an immediate surrender.

Young Poultry.—A correspondent of the Massachusetts Ploughman gives the following as his mode of raising turkeys. He hatches them under hens excepting the second or third laying, which is usually after June. He coops the hen for five or six weeks—the bottom of the coop boarded to prevent them from sitting on the ground—feeds them with fresh curd, mixed with a little meal—when very young with curd alone. He gives them some fresh boiled meat two or three times a week and supplies them constantly with fresh water—and is very careful not to let them out of the coop till the dew is dried off in the morning, nor when it rains.

He prefers the black ones; as the white are so tender that it is almost impossible to raise them.

Paraphrase.—The popular melody of "Dance, boatmen dance—dance all night till broad daylight and go home with the girls in the morning," is thus rendered into prose:

"Mingle in the mazes of the dance, thou knight of the oar, while the resplendent luminary of the day has withdrawn his light from the earth, till bright Aurora gilds the eastern sky with golden light and then with thy characteristic gallantry accompany the fair and unsophisticated participants of thy pleasures to their paternal mansions."

A battle was fought near Almos, in Senora, between a gang of robbers and a company of militia, from that place. The militia were cut to pieces and hung on trees.

Highly Important from Mexico.—Advice from the city of Mexico to the 25th ult., have been received at Savannah. From an article in the Diario, it appears that just about the time that President Tyler signed the treaty of Texas, the Diario del Gobierno Mexico remarked as follows: "What the Hesperia and the Correo Frances, of to-day, say in regard to the annexation of Texas to the United States, cannot be true, and we have reason for believing it is not so. Our government has received its official correspondence from Washington, the contents of which are just the contrary of what these papers say. But be it as it may, our Government is determined not to lose the usurped territory, and to that end she will use her best efforts to recover it, that the honor and dignity, and good name of the nation shall not suffer it." [Mis. Report.]

THE NATION ARISING FOR TEXAS.

Every mail brings us glowing accounts of the popular movements in all parts of the Union in favor of annexation. The excitement upon this great question of American liberty is spreading, and deepening in the public mind into an intense and burning interest. It is already sweeping like a mighty tempest from one end of the Union to the other. The people, the unfettered freemen of America, the worthy descendants of our glorious revolutionary sires, are rising up in one majestic, and restless mass, and demanding that the young republic, severed from the Nation, and dishonored of freedom by traitorous hands, be re-admitted to her rightful place in the republican Union. Immense, and enthusiastic meetings of the people have been held in New Orleans, Mobile, Charlestown, Raleigh, and throughout the whole South. Nor is the excitement confined to the South. The people of the North are moving nobly upon the subject. Meetings have been held in many parts of New England, and in New York a mass meeting was recently held at which, according to the papers of that city, ten thousand people attended, growing with enthusiasm for immediate annexation. In vain do the vile satellites of Federalism endeavor to repress the rising excitement upon this momentous question by denouncing it a party hobby. They might as soon arrest the tides of the Ocean as stop the swelling march of annexation to its accomplishment. It is a question of American liberty and American humanity, and worthily and generously will the American freeman decide it.—Kentucky Democratic Rally.

NAUVOO NEIGHBOR, EXTRA;
June 29th, 1844.

Proclamation.

Head Quarters, June 28, 1844,
4 o'clock, A. M.

To the citizens of Carthage and Hancock county:

In pursuance of an order from Gov. Ford, instructing me to the exercise of such discretionary powers as I may deem necessary for the preservation of the public safety, and the lives and property of our citizens; I hereby invite all citizens to remain at their several homes in Hancock county and co-operate with me in establishing tranquility and safety throughout the county. The most efficient means have been put in requisition for concentrating the military force of the neighboring counties at Carthage, and in 12 hours there will be a sufficient force for the protection of every citizen in the country.

I confidently believe there is no just apprehension of an attack upon any place by the Mormon citizens of our county. And I hereby strictly command all citizens of Hancock county to abstain from violence towards the Mormon population, under penalty of the severest inflictions of military law, and act in no case, only on the defensive.

The corpses of the murdered men will be forthwith removed to Nauvoo, under an escort from Head Quarters.

Given under my hand this 28th June 1844,
4 o'clock A. M.

M. R. DEMING, Brig. Gen.,
4th Brigade and 5th Division.

It is hoped and expected that the Governor will be at Head Quarters in a few hours.

Awful Assassination! The Pledge faith of the State of Illinois stained with innocent blood by a Mob!

On Monday the 24th inst., after Gov. Ford had sent word, that those eighteen persons demanded on a warrant, among whom were Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, should be protected, by the militia of the State, they in company with some ten or twelve others, started for Carthage. Four miles from that place, they were met by Capt. Dunn, with a company of cavalry, who had an order from the Governor for the "State Arms." Gen. Smith endorsed his acceptance of the same, and both parties returned to Nauvoo to obtain said arms. After the arms were obtained both parties took up the line of march for Carthage, where they arrived about five minutes before twelve o'clock at night. Capt. Dunn nobly acquitting himself, landed us safely at Hamilton's Hotel.

In the morning we saw the Governor and he pledged the faith of the State, that we should be protected. Gen. Smith and his brother Hyrum were arrested by a warrant founded upon the oaths of H. O. Norton and Augustine Spencer, for treason. Knowing the threats from several persons, that the two Smiths should never leave Carthage alive, we all began to be alarmed for their personal safety. The Gov. and Gen. Deming conducted them before the McDonough troops and introduced them as Gen. Joseph Smith and Gen. Hyrum Smith. This maneuver came near raising a mutiny among the "Carthage Greys," but the Governor quelled it.

In the afternoon, after great exertions on the part of our counsel, we dispensed with an investigation, and voluntarily gave bail for our appearance to the Circuit Court, in answer to the case of abducting the Nauvoo Expositor, as a nuisance. At evening the Justice made out a mittimus, without an investigation, and committed the two Gen. Smiths to prison until discharged by due course of law, and they were safely guarded to jail. In the morning the Governor went to the jail and had an interview with these men, and to every appearance all things were explained on both sides.

The constable then went to take these men from the jail, before the Justice for examination, but the jailor refused to let them go, as they were under his direction until discharged by due course of law; but the Governor's troops, to the amount of one or two hundred, took them to the Court House, when the hearing was continued till Saturday the 29th, and they were remanded to jail. Several of our citizens had permits from the Governor to lodge with them, and visit them in jail. It now began to be rumored by several men, whose names will be forthcoming in time, that there was nothing against these men, the law could not reach them, but powder and ball would! The Governor was made acquainted with these facts, but on the morning of the 27th, he disbanded the McDonough Troops, and sent them home; took Captain Dunn's company of Cavalry, and proceeded to Nauvoo, leaving these two men and three or four friends, to be guarded by eight men at the jail; and a company in town of 60 men, 80 or 100 rods from the jail, as a corps in reserve.

About six o'clock in the afternoon the guard was surprised by an armed Mob of from 150 to 250, painted red and black and yellow, which surrounded the jail, forced in—poured a shower of bullets into the room where these unfortunate men were held, "in defiance vile," to answer to the laws of Illinois; under the solemn pledge of the faith of the State, by Governor Ford, that they should be protected; but the mob ruled! They fell as Martens amid this tornado of lead, each receiving four bullets! John Taylor was wounded by four bullets in his limbs but not seriously. Thus perishes the hope of law; thus vanishes the plighted faith of the State; thus the blood of innocence stains the constituted authorities of the United States, and thus have two among the most noble martyrs since the slaughter of Abel, sealed the truth of their divine mission, by being shot by a Mob for their religion!

Messengers were dispatched to Nauvoo, but did not reach there till morning. The following was one of the letters:

12 o'clock at night, 27th June, Carthage, Hamilton's Tavern.

TO MRS. EMMA SMITH,

AND MAJ. GEN. DUNHAM, &c—

The Governor has just arrived; says all things shall be inquired into, and all wrong measures taken.

I say to all the citizens of Nauvoo, my brethren, be still, and know that God reigns! Don't rush out of the city—don't rush to Carthage; stay at home, and be prepared for an attack from Missouri mobbers. The Governor will render every assistance possible—has sent out orders for troops—Joseph and Hyrum are dead, but not by the Carthage people—the guards were there as I believe.

We will prepare to move the bodies as soon as possible.

The people of the county are greatly excited, and fear the Mormons will come out and take vengeance—I have pledged my word the Mormons will stay at home as long as they can be informed, and no violence will be on their part, and say to my brethren in Nauvoo, in the name of the Lord, be still—be patient—only let such friends as choose come here to see the bodies—Mr. Taylor's wounds are dressed & not serious—I am sound.

WILLARD RICHARDS,
JOHN TAYLOR,
SAMUEL H. SMITH.

Defend yourselves until protection can be furnished necessary, June 27th, 1844.

THOMAS FORD, Governor

and Commander-in-chief.

Mr. McDonough,

Dear Sir—Please inform on this matter prudently any persons who are in possession of arms, and who are not in the military service, to surrender them to the proper authorities.

births of the citizens of the county—be quiet, you will be attacked from Missouri.

M. R. DEMING.

The Governor, as well as the citizens of Carthage, was thunder struck! and

The Legion in Nauvoo, was called out at 10 A. M. and addressed by Judge Phelps, Col. Buckmaster, of Alton, the Governor's aid, and others, and all excitement and fury allayed and preparations were made to receive the bodies of the noble martyrs. About 3 o'clock, they were met by a great assemblage of people, east of the Temple on Mulholland street, under the direction of the City Marshal, followed by Samuel H. Smith, brother of the deceased, Dr. Richards and Mr. Hamilton, of Carthage. The vaggons were guarded by 8 men. The procession that followed in Nauvoo, was the City Council, the Lieut. Gens. Staff, the Major Gen. and staff, the brigadier and staff, commanders and officers of the Legion and citizens generally, which numbered several thousands, amid the most solemn lamentations and wailings that ever ascended into the ears of the Lord of Hosts to be avenged of our enemies!

When the procession arrived the bodies were both taken into the Nauvoo Mansion; the scene at the Mansion cannot be described; the audience addressed by Dr. Richards, Judge Phelps, Woods and Reed Esqs. of Iowa and Col. Markham. It was a vast assemblage of some 8 or 10,000 persons, and with one united voice resolved to trust to the law for a remedy of such a high handed assassination, and when that failed to call upon God to avenge us of our wrongs! Oh widows and orphans! Oh Americans weep for the glory of freedom has departed!

STATEMENT OF FACTS!

At the request of many persons who wish that the truth may go forth to the world in relation to the late murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, by a band of lawless assassins, I have consented to make a statement of the facts so far as they have come to my knowledge, in an authentic shape, as one of the attorneys employed to defend the said Smiths against the charges brought against them, and other persons at Carthage, in the State of Illinois.

On Monday the 24th inst., at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith I left Fort Madison in the Territory of Iowa and arrived at Carthage where I expected to meet the General, his brother Hyrum and the other persons implicated with them. They arrived at Carthage late at night and next morning voluntarily surrendered themselves to the constable, Mr. Bettersworth, who held the writ against them on a charge of riot for destroying the press, type and fixtures of the Nauvoo Expositor the property of William and Wilson Law, and other dissenters, charged to have been destroyed on the 10th inst.

Great excitement prevailed in the county of Hancock, and had extended to many of the surrounding counties. A large number of the militia of several counties were under arms at Carthage, the Head Quarters of the commanding Gen. Deming, and many other troops were under arms at Warsaw and other places in the neighborhood. The Governor was at Head Quarters in person, for the purpose of seeing that the laws of the land were executed and had pledged his own faith and the faith of the State of Illinois that the Smiths and the other persons concerned with them should be protected from personal violence, if they would surrender themselves to be dealt with according to law. During the two succeeding days his Excellency repeatedly expressed to the legal counselors of the Smiths his determination to protect the prisoners and to see that they should have a fair and impartial examination so as depended on the Executive of the State. On Tuesday morning soon after the surrender of the prisoners on the charge of riot, Gen. Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both arrested in a charge of treason against the State of Illinois. The affidavits upon which the writs issued were made, by Hyrum Norton and Augustine Spencer.

On Tuesday afternoon the two Smiths and other persons on the charge of riot appeared before R. F. Smith, a Justice of the peace residing at Carthage, and by advice of counsel in order to prevent, if possible, any increase of excitement, voluntarily entered into recognizance in the sum of five hundred dollars each with no exceptionable security, for their appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court for said county. The whole number of persons recognized is fifteen, most if not all of them leading men in the Mormon church.

Making out the bonds and justifying bail necessarily consumed considerable time, and when this was done it was nearly night and the Justice adjourned his court over without calling on the Smiths to answer to the charge of treason or even intimating to their counsel or the prisoners that they were expected to enter into the examination that night. In less than an hour after the adjournment of the court, constable Bettersworth who had arrested the prisoners in the morning appeared at Hamilton's Hotel, at the lodgings of the prisoners and their counsel and insisted that the Smiths should go to jail. Mr. Woods of Burlington, Iowa, and myself, as counsel for the prisoners, insisted that they were entitled to be brought before the Justice for examination before they could be sent to jail. The constable, to our surprise, thereupon exhibited a mittimus from said Justice as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

Hancock County,

The people of the State of Illinois

to the keeper of the Jail of the said county greeting:

Whereas Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith of the county aforesaid have been arrested upon the oath of Augustine Spencer and Henry O. Norton, for the crime of treason, and has been brought before me as a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, for trial at the seat of justice thereof, which trial has been necessarily postponed by reason of the absence of material witnesses, to wit: Francis M. Higbee and others; therefore I command you in the name of the people to receive the said Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith into your custody in the jail of the county aforesaid, there to remain until discharged by due course of law.

(Signed,) R. F. SMITH, J. P. [L.S.]

His Excellency did not think it within the sphere of his duty to interfere, and the prisoners were removed from their lodgings to jail. The recitals of the mittimus so far as they relate to the prisoners having been brought before the Justice for trial, and it there appearing that the necessary witness of the prosecution were absent, is wholly untrue, unless the prisoners could have appeared before the Justice without being present in person or by counsel; for is there any law of Illinois within my knowledge which permits a Justice to commit persons charged with crimes, to jail without examination as to the probability of their guilt.

On Wednesday forenoon the Governor in company with one of his friends, visited the prisoners at the jail, and again assured them that they should be protected from violence, and told them that if the troops watched the next morning to Nauvoo as his Excellency then expected they should be taken along in order to insure their personal safety.

On the same morning, some one or more of the counsel for the prosecution, expressed their wish to me, that the prisoners should be brought out of jail for examination; they were answered that the prisoners had already been committed, and that the Justice and constable had no further control of the prisoners; and that if the prosecutors wished the prisoners brought out of jail, they should bring them out on a writ of Habeas Corpus or some other due course of law. The constable after this conversation went to the jail with the following order:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

Hancock County,

To David Bettersworth, constable of said county:

You are commanded to bring the bodies of Joseph Smith & Hyrum Smith from the jail of said county, forthwith before me at my office for an examination on the charge of treason, they having been committed for safe keeping until trial could be had on such examination and the state now being ready for such examination.

Given under my hand and seal this 26 day of June, 1844.

(Signed,) R. F. SMITH, J. P. [L.S.]

And demanded the prisoners, but as the jailor could find no law authorizing a Justice of the peace, to demand prisoners committed to his charge, he refused to give them up, until discharged from his custody by due course of law. Upon the refusal of Carthage Greys marched to the jail, by whose orders I know not, and compelled the jailor against his will and conviction of duty, to deliver the prisoners to the constable, who, forthwith, took them before Justice Smith, the Captain of the Carthage Greys. The counsel for prisoners then appeared, and asked for subpoenas for witnesses on the part of the prisoners, and expressed their wish to go into the examination, as the witnesses could be brought from Nauvoo to Carthage; the Justice thereupon fixed the examination for 12 o'clock, on Thursday the 27th inst.; whereupon the prisoners were remanded to prison. Soon after a council of the military officers was called by the Governor, and was determined to march on the next morning, the 27th inst. to Nauvoo, with all the troops, except one company which was to be selected by the Governor from the troops whose fidelity was more to be relied on to guard the prisoners, whom it was determined should be left at Carthage. On Thursday morning, another consultation of officers took place, and the former orders for marching to Nauvoo with the whole army, were countermanded. One company were ordered to accompany the Governor to Nauvoo; the Carthage Greys, who had but two days before, been under arrest for insulting the commanding General, and whose conduct had been more hostile to the prisoners, than that of any other company, were selected to guard the prisoners, and the other troops including those recruited at Golden's Point, from Warsaw, and who had been promised that they should be marched to Nauvoo, were disbanded. A guard of only eight men was stationed at the jail, whilst the rest of the Greys were in camp at a quarter of a mile's distance, and whilst his excellency was haranguing the peaceable citizens of Nauvoo, and asking them to give up all their own arms, the assassins were murdering the prisoners in jail, whom the Governor had pledged himself and the faith of the State to protect.

H. T. REID.

At the request of the friends of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, I have consented to give a statement of such matters as I have knowledge of in relation to their murder at Carthage, and what occurred under my observation. I arrived in Nauvoo from Burlington, Iowa, on Friday, June 21st, inst., about 9 o'clock. P. M. found all things quiet, had an interview on Saturday morning the 22nd, with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who were in consultation with some of their friends in relation to a communication from Gov. Ford, during interview heard Gen. Joseph Smith give orders to disband the Legion, and withdraw the guards and sentinels, who were co-operating with the police to preserve the peace of the city, as he said by order of Gov. Ford; that I went from Nauvoo to Carthage, on the evening of the 22d, when I had an interview with Gov. Ford, assuring him as to the quiet of Nauvoo, and that Smith and his friends were ready to obey the laws. (I was told that the Constable with a posse and that evening gone to Nauvoo with a writ for Smith and others, and that nothing short of an unconditional surrender to the laws could allay the excitement.) I was then informed by Gov. Ford he was pledged to protect all such persons as might be arrested and that they should have an impartial examination, and that if Smiths and the rest against whom warrants had been issued, would come to Carthage by Monday the 24th inst., it would be a compliance on their part, and on Sunday morning the 23d, Gov. Ford pledged his word that if Gen. Smith, would come to Carthage, he should by him be protected, with such of his friends as might accompany him, and that I as his counsel should have protection, in defending Smith, that I returned to Nauvoo, on Sunday evening the 23d, and I found Gen. J. Smith and Hyrum Smith, making preparation to go to Carthage on Monday, and on Monday morning the 24th I left the city of Nauvoo in company with Jos. and Hyrum Smith, and some fifteen other persons, parties and witnesses for Carthage, that about four miles west from Carthage, we were met by a company of about 60 men under Capt. Dunn, that at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith, I advanced and communicated with the Commander of the company and was informed, he was on his way to Nauvoo, with an order from Gov. Ford, for the State Arms at that place, that it was agreed by myself on behalf of Gen. Smith, that the order for the arms should be endorsed by Gen. Smith, and that he should place himself under the protection of Captain Dunn, to return to Nauvoo and see the Governor's order promptly obeyed and return with Capt. Dunn to Carthage; Captain Dunn, pledging his word as a military man, that Smith and his friends should be protected, that the order was endorsed by Gen. Smith, which was communicated by Captain Dunn, to Gov. Ford, with a letter from Gen. Smith informing the Gov., that he would accompany Captain Dunn to Carthage. I left the company and proceeded to Carthage, that about 12 o'clock at night of the 24th Capt. Dunn returned with the State Arms from Nauvoo accompanied by Joseph and Hyrum, with some 13 others, who were charged with a riot in destroying the Printing Press of the Nauvoo Expositor, that on the morning of the 25th, Joseph and Hyrum Smith with the others charged, surrendered themselves to the Constable, and at the same time Joseph and Hyrum Smith were arrested on a charge of Treason against the State of Illinois; that about 3 o'clock P. M. on the 25th the Justice, proceeded to the examination in relation to the riot and after a good deal of resistance on the part of the prosecution, we were permitted to enter into a recognizance; to answer at the next term of the Circuit Court, that we were engaged, until dark, in making out and giving our recognizances, that in consequence of the rumors as to the excitement at Warsaw and other points and to allay the fears of the citizens of Nauvoo, I requested Governor Ford to detail a company to Nauvoo, to protect the city, which request was promptly complied with, and that night Capt. Singleton, with a company of men from McDonough county marched to Nauvoo and took possession of the city and remained until the evening of the 27th, when they took up their line of march for Carthage.

After the matter of the riot was disposed of, the Justice left without saying any thing in relation to the examination for treason, and in about one hour, the constable returned with a mittimus, a copy of which accompanies the statement of my colleague, H. T. Reid, a copy of which was demanded and refused; that I requested the officer to wait until I could see Gov. Ford, and was told he would wait five minutes, and as I went to the door I met Capt. Dunn, with some twenty men to guard the prisoners to jail; that I accompanied Gov. Ford to the Justice, R. F. Smith, who gave as a cause for issuing the warrant of commitment; that the prisoners were not personally safe at the hotel.

I then requested the Governor to have a company detailed to guard the jail, which was done, and they arrived at the jail about the same time as the prisoners. On the morning of the 26th, the Governor visited the jail in company with a friend, at which interview the Governor again pledged himself for their personal safety, and said if the troops went to Nauvoo, as was then contemplated, that they should go along to ensure their protection, that after the interview at the jail, the counsel for the prosecution wanted the prisoners brought to Carthage for the purpose of an examination, to which the counsel for the prisoners refused, that they were committed until discharged by due course of law, and that we could do nothing until the prisoners were legally before the Justice.

Gen. Smith gave the constable an order (a copy of which accompanies the statement of H. T. Reid, Esq.) for the jailor to deliver the prisoners, which the jailor refused to do, that the constable then returned to the jail with a company called "Carthage Greys," of whom the Justice, R. F. Smith, was the captain, but not in command; and by intimidation and force, forced the jailor to give up the prisoners to the constable, who took them before the Justice, R. F. Smith, at the Court House, that on the motion of the counsel for the prosecution the examination was postponed until the 27th, 12 o'clock, and witnesses were then summoned to the defense. The two Smiths were then remanded to jail and others were taken for a consultation of the officers, with the commandant of the Legion, and it was determined that the troops should take up a line of march at 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 27th, for Nauvoo, and after the consultation, the Justice, who was one of the officers in command, altered the return of the subpoenas until the 29th, and continued the hearing until that time, without consulting either their prisoners or the counsel; that on the morning of the 27th, the order for marching to Nauvoo, was countermanded, and all the troops disbanded but the company under Capt. Singleton at Nauvoo, Capt. Dunn's company of horse, and the Carthage Greys, that the Governor determined to visit Nauvoo, escorted by Capt. Dunn's company, and the Carthage Greys were left as a guard for the prisoners at the jail, that after the troops were disbanded, I requested Gov. Ford to detail some men to guard the route to Warsaw, as I apprehended much danger from that place, but I do not know whether it was done or not, as I left Carthage about 11 o'clock, A. M., and came to Nauvoo; that Gov. Ford and his aid, Col. Buckmaster, escorted by Capt. Dunn's company, arrived in Nauvoo about 5 o'clock, P. M., where he addressed the citizens, and promised them protection, and a just execution of the laws, and immediately left the city for Carthage.

JAMES W. WOODS,

Attorney at Law, of Burlington, Iowa.

BY EXPRESS!

Sunday morning 9 o'clock.

The following proclamation has just reached us from head quarters. We assure the governor, if he can manage human butchers, he has nothing to fear from armless, timid, and law abiding Latter day Saints:

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS.

I desire to make a brief but true statement of the recent disgraceful affair at Carthage, in regard to the Smiths, so far as circumstances have come to my knowledge. The Smiths, Joseph and Hyrum, have been assassinated in Jail, by whom is not known, but will be ascertained.—I pledged myself for their safety, and upon the assurance of that pledge, they surrendered as prisoners. The Mormons surrendered the public arms in their possession, and the Nauvoo Legion submitted to the command of Capt. Singleton, of Brown County, deputed for that purpose by me. All these things were required to satisfy the old citizens of Hancock, that the Mormons were peaceably disposed; and to allay jealousy and excitement in their minds. It appears however that the compliance of the Mormons with every requisition made upon them, failed of that purpose. The pledge of security to the Smiths, was not given upon my individual responsibility. Before I gave it, I obtained a pledge of honor by an unanimous vote from the officers and men under my command, to sustain me in performing it. If the assassination of the Smiths was committed by any portion of these, they have added treachery to murder, and have done all they could do to disgrace the State, and sully the public honor.

On the morning of the day the deed was committed, we had proposed to march the army under my command into Nauvoo. I however discovered on the evening before, that nothing but utter destruction of the city would satisfy a portion of the troops; and that if we marched into the city, pretenses would not be wanting for commencing hostilities. The Mormons had done every thing required or which ought to have been required of them. Offensive operations on our part would have been as unjust and disgraceful as they would have been impolitic; in the present critical season of the year, the harvest and the crops. For these reasons I decided, in a council of officers, to disband the army, except three companies, two of which were retained as a guard for the jail. With the other company I marched into Nauvoo, to address the inhabitants there, and tell them what they might expect in case they designedly or imprudently provoked a war. I performed this duty, as I think plainly and emphatically, and then set out to return to Carthage. When I had marched about three miles a messenger informed me of the occurrences at Carthage. I hastened on to that place. The guard is said, did their duty but were overpowered. Many of the inhabitants of Carthage had fled with their families. Others were prepared to go. I apprehended danger to the settlements from the sudden fury and passion of the Mormons and sanctioned their movements in this respect.

General Deming volunteered to remain with a few troops, to observe the progress of events; to defend property against small numbers, and with orders to retreat if menaced by a superior force. I decided to proceed immediately to Quincy, to prepare a force, sufficient to suppress disorders, in case it should ensue for the foregoing transactions or from any other cause. I have hopes that the Mormons will make no further difficulties. In this I may be mistaken. The other party may not be satisfied. They may recommence aggression. I am determined to preserve the peace to the breakers of the same, at my own expense. I think present circumstances warrant an examination of having competent force at Nauvoo, in readiness to march to the city, and to the settlements. My position at Quincy will enable me to get the earliest intelligence, and to communicate it with greater celerity.

I have decided to issue the following general orders:

HEAD QUARTERS,

Quincy, June 29, 1844.

It is ordered that the companies of regiments in the counties of Adams, Hancock, Pike, Brown, Schuyler, Morgan, Scott, Cass, Fulton, and McDonough, and the Regiments composing General Shreve's Brigade, will call their respective Regiments and Battalions together immediately upon the receipt of this order, and proceed by voluntary enlistment to enrol as many men, as can be armed in their respective regiments. They will make arrangements for a campaign of twelve days, and will provide themselves with arms, ammunition, and provisions accordingly, and hold themselves in readiness immediately to march upon the receipt of further orders.

The independent companies of Riflemen, Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery in the above named counties and in the county of Sangamon will hold themselves in readiness in like manner.

THOMAS FORD,

Governor and Commander-in-chief.

Proclamation.

Head Quarters, June 28, 1844.

4 o'clock, A. M.

To the citizens of Carthage and Hancock county: In pursuance of an order from Gov. Ford, instructing me, to the exercise of such discretionary powers as I may deem necessary, for the preservation of the public safety, and the lives and property of our citizens; I hereby invite all citizens to remain at their several homes in Hancock county and co-operate with me in establishing tranquility, and safety throughout the county. The most efficient means have been put in requisition for concentrating the military force of the neighboring counties at Carthage, and in 12 hours there will be a sufficient force for the protection of every citizen in the county.

I confidently believe there is no just apprehension of an attack upon any place by the Mormon citizens of our county. And I hereby solemnly command all citizens of Hancock county to abstain from violence towards the Mormon population, under penalty of the severest inflictions of military law, and act in no case, only on the defensive.

The corpses of the murdered men will be forthwith removed to Nauvoo, under an escort from Head Quarters.

Given under my hand this 28th June 1844, 4 o'clock A. M.

M. R. DEMING, Brig. Gen.

4th Brigade and 4th Division.

It is hoped and expected that the Governor will be at Head Quarters in a few hours.

Head Quarters, Carthage,

June 29th, 4 o'clock, a. m.

Fellow citizens of Hancock County:—

Every prospect of danger from the Mormon population of this county is removed and those who have retired from their homes in its apprehension, are requested forthwith to aid in allaying public excitement by a speedy return. A communication, this a. m. received from the authorities of Nauvoo, brings the most satisfactory assurances that no retaliation or aggression will be resorted to by their citizens upon any part of the county. The butchery of the prisoners at Carthage has the execrations of the great mass of our citizens. The humane and patriotic of Adams co. are gathering at Carthage for the maintenance of our laws against the violators of law of any party. The command of Col. Flood consisting of 224 well-armed and efficient men will be at Carthage this a. m. for the preservation of order. The Governor's return from Adams is hourly expected. It is believed that no other forces will be necessary for the public safety.

M. R. DEMING,

Brig. Gen.

Head Quarters,

Carthage June 29th 1844.

Dr. Willard Richards.—

Your note by the return of the escort has been received with the request for Mr. Taylor and lady; considerations of prudence, should I think delay Mr. Taylor's return. I fear it would prove fatal to his recovery. He will receive every attention that my power or the sympathies of many kind persons can furnish. I send you this communication with my last order by the hands of Messrs. Wood and Conyers who are highly respectable citizens of Quincy—Mr. Woods is the Mayor of that City and a decided friend of law. Mr. Conyers was formerly the Mayor of the City. A safe conduct of troops that can be relied upon—in great haste.

Very respectfully yours,

M. R. DEMING,

Brig. Gen.

NAUVOO NEIGHBOR,--EXTRA:

Sunday, 3 o'clock, P. M., June 30th, 1844.

Awful Assassination! The Pledged faith of the State of Illinois stained with innocent blood by a Mob!

On Monday the 24th inst., after Gov. Ford had sent word, that those eighteen persons demanded on a warrant, among whom were Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, should be protected, by the militia of the State, they in company with some ten or twelve others, started for Carthage. Four miles from that place, they were met by Capt. Dunn, with a company of cavalry, who had an order from the Governor for the "State Arms." Gen. Smith endorsed his acceptance of the same, and both parties returned to Nauvoo to obtain said arms. After the arms were obtained, both parties took up the line of march for Carthage, where they arrived about five minutes before twelve o'clock at night.—Capt. Dunn nobly acquitting himself, landed us safely at Hamilton's Hotel.

In the morning we saw the Governor, and he pledged the faith of the State, that we should be protected. Gen. Smith and his brother Hyrum were arrested by a warrant founded upon the oaths of H. O. Norton and Augustine Spencer, for treason. Knowing the threats from several persons, that the two Smiths should never leave Carthage alive, we all began to be alarmed for their personal safety. The Gov. and Gen. Demming conducted them before the McDonough troops and introduced them as Gen. Joseph Smith and Gen. Hyrum Smith. This manoeuvre came near raising a mutiny among the "Carthage Greys," but the Governor quelled it.

In the afternoon, after great exertions on the part of our counsel, we dispensed with an investigation, and voluntarily gave bail for our appearance to the Circuit Court, to answer in the case of abating the Nauvoo Expositor, as a nuisance.

At evening the Justice made out a mittimus, without an investigation, and committed the two Gen. Smiths to prison until discharged by due course of law, and they were safely guarded to jail. In the morning the Governor went to the jail and had an interview with these men, and to every appearance all things were explained on both sides.

The constable then went to take these men from the jail, before the Justice for examination; but the jailor refused to let them go, as they were under his direction "till discharged by due course of law;" but the Governor's troops, to the amount of one or two hundred, took them to the Court House, when the hearing was continued till Saturday the 29th, and they were remanded to jail. Several of our citizens had permits from the Governor to lodge with them, and visit them in jail. It now began to be rumoured by several men, whose names will be forthcoming in time, that there was nothing against these men, the two could not be proved to be murderers and ball would! The Governor fourths of the citizens of the county—be quiet or you will be attacked from Missouri.

M. R. DEMING.
The Governor, as well as the citizens of Carthage, was thunder struck! and fled.

The Legion in Nauvoo, was called out at 10 A. M. and addressed by Judge Phelps, Col. Buckmaster, of Alton, the Governors aid, and others, and all excitement and fury allayed and preparations were made to receive the bodies of the noble martyrs. About 3 o'clock, they were met by a great assemblage of people, east of the Temple on Mulholland street, under the direction of the City Marshall, followed by Samuel H. Smith, the brother of the deceased, Dr. Richards and Mr. Hamilton, of Carthage. The waggons were guarded by 8 men. The procession that followed in Nauvoo, was the City Council, the Lieut. Gens. Staff the Major Gen. and staff, the brigadier and staff, commanders and officers of the Legion and citizens generally, which numbered several thousands, amid the most solemn lamentations and wailings that even ascended into the ears of the Lord of Hosts to be avenged of our enemies!

When the procession arrived the bodies were both taken into the 'Nauvoo Mansion'; the scene at the Mansion cannot be described; the audience addressed by Dr. Richards, Judge Phelps, Woods and Reed Esqs. of Iowa and Col. Markham. It was a vast assemblage of some 8 or 10,000 persons, and with one united voice resolved to trust to the law for a remedy of such a high handed assassination, and when that failed to call upon God to avenge us of our wrongs! Oh widows and orphans! Oh Americans weep for the glory of freedom has departed!

STATEMENT OF FACTS!

At the request of many persons who wish that the truth may go forth to the world in relation to the late murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, by a band of lawless assassins, I have consented to make a statement of the facts so far as they have come to my knowledge. In an authentic shape, as one of the attorneys employed to defend the said Smiths against the charges brought against them, and other persons at Carthage, in the State of Illinois.

On Monday the 24th inst., at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith I left Fort Madison in the Territory of Iowa and arrived at Carthage where I expected to meet the General, his brother Hyrum and the other persons implicated with them; they arrived at Carthage late at night and next morning voluntarily surrendered themselves to the constable, Mr. Bettersworth, who held the writ against them on a charge of riot for destroying the press, type and fixtures of the Nauvoo Expositor, the property of William and Wilson Law, and other dissenters, charged to have been destroyed on the 10th inst.

to the keeper of the Jail of the said county greeting:

Whereas Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith of the county aforesaid have been arrested upon the oath of Augustine Spencer and Henry O. Norton for the crime of treason, and has been brought before me as a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, for trial at the seat of justice thereof, which trial has been necessarily postponed by reason of the absence of material witnesses, to wit: Francis M. Higbee and others; therefore I command you in the name of the people to receive the said Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith into your custody in the jail of the county aforesaid, there to remain until discharged by due course of law.

(Signed,) R. F. SMITH, J. P. [L.S.]

His Excellency did not think it within the sphere of his duty to interfere, and the prisoners were removed from their lodgings to jail. The recitals of the mittimus so far as they relate to the prisoners having been brought before the justice for trial, and it there appearing that the necessary witness of the prosecution were absent, is wholly untrue, unless the prisoners could have appeared before the justice without being present in person or by counsel; nor is there any law of Illinois within my knowledge which permits a justice to commit persons charged with crimes, to jail without examination as to the probability of their guilt.

On Wednesday forenoon the Governor in company with one of his friends, visited the prisoners at the jail, and again assured them that they should be protected from violence, and told them that if the troops marched the next morning to Nauvoo as his Excellency then expected they should be taken along in order to insure their personal safety.

On the same morning, some one or more of the counsel for the prosecution, expressed their wish to me, that the prisoners should be brought out of jail for examination; they were answered that the prisoners had already been committed, and that the justice and constable had no further control of the prisoners; and that if the prosecutors wished the prisoners brought out of jail, they should bring them out on a writ of Habeas Corpus or some other due course of law.—The constable after this conversation went to the jail with the following order to the jailor:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, } ss.
Hancock County. }

To David Bettersworth, constable of said county:

You are commanded to bring the bodies of Joseph Smith & Hyrum Smith from the jail of said county, forthwith before me at my office for an examination on the charge of treason, they having been committed for safe keeping until trial could be had on such knowledge of in relation to their murder at Carthage, and what occurred under my observation. I arrived in Nauvoo from Burlington, Iowa, on Friday, June 21st, inst., about 9 o'clock, P. M. I found all things quiet, had an interview on Saturday morning the 22nd, with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who was in consultation with some of their friends in relation to a communication from Gov. Ford, during interview heard Gen. Joseph Smith give orders to disband the Legion, and withdraw the guards and sentinels, who were co-operating with the police to preserve the peace of the city, as he said by order of Gov. Ford; that I went from Nauvoo to Carthage, on the evening of the 22d, when I had an interview with Gov. Ford, assuring him as to the quiet of Nauvoo, and that Smith and his friends were ready to obey the laws. I was told that the Constable with a posse had that evening gone to Nauvoo with a writ for Smith and others, and that nothing short of an unconditional surrender to the laws could allay the excitement. I was then informed by Gov. Ford he was pledged to protect all such persons as might be arrested and that they should have an impartial examination, and that if Smiths and the rest against whom warrants had been issued, would come to Carthage by Monday the 24th inst., it would be a compliance on their part, and on Sunday morning the 23d, Gov. Ford pledged his word that if Gen. Smith, would come to Carthage, he should by him be protected, with such of his friends as might accompany him, and that I as his counsel should have protection, in defending Smith, that I returned to Nauvoo on Sunday evening the 23d, and I found Gen. J. Smith and Hyrum Smith, making preparation to go to Carthage on Monday, and on Monday morning the 24th I left the city of Nauvoo in company with Jos. and Hyrum Smith, and some fifteen other persons, parties and witnesses for Carthage, that about four miles west from Carthage, we were met by a company of about 60 men under Capt. Dunn, that at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith, I advanced and communicated with the Commander of the company and was informed, he was on his way to Nauvoo, with an order from Gov. Ford, for the State Arms at that place, that it was agreed by myself on behalf of Gen. Smith, that the order for the arms should be endorsed by Gen. Smith, and that he should place himself under the protection of Captain Dunn, to return to Nauvoo and see the Governor's order promptly obeyed and return with Capt. Dunn to Carthage; Captain Dunn, pledging his word as a military man, that Smith and his friends should be protected, that the order was endorsed by Gen. Smith, which was communicated by Captain Dunn, to Gov. Ford, with a letter from Gen. Smith informing the Gov., that he would accompany Captain Dunn to Carthage. I left the company and proceeded to Carthage, that about 12 o'clock at night of the 24th Capt.

threats, forced the jailor to give up the prisoners to the constable, who took them before the justice, R. F. Smith, at the Court House, that on the motion of the counsel for the prisoners, the examination was postponed until the 27th, 12 o'clock, and subpoenas issued for witnesses on the defence. The two Smiths were then remanded to jail and orders were issued for a consultation of the officers, with the commander-in-chief, and it was determined that the troops should take up a line of march at 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 27th, for Nauvoo, and after the consultation, the justice, who was one of the officers in command, altered the return of the subpoenas until the 29th, and continued the hearing until that time, without consulting either their prisoners or the counsel; that on the morning of the 27th, the order for marching to Nauvoo, was countermanded, and all the troops disbanded but the company under Capt. Singleton at Nauvoo, Capt. Dunn's company of horse, and the Carthage Greys, that the Governor determined to visit Nauvoo, escorted by Capt. Dunn's company; and the Carthage Greys were left as a guard for the prisoners at the jail, that after the troops were disbanded, I requested Gov. Ford to detail some men to guard the route to Warsaw, as I apprehended much danger from that place, but I do not know whether it was done or not, as I left Carthage about 11 o'clock, A. M., and came to Nauvoo; that Gov. Ford and his aid, Col. Buckmaster, escorted by Capt. Dunn's company, arrived in Nauvoo about 5 o'clock, P. M., where he addressed the citizens, and promised them protection, and just execution of the laws, and immediately left the city for Carthage.

Several of our citizens had permits from the Governor to lodge with them, and visit them in jail. It now began to be rumoured by several men, whose names will be forthcoming in time, that there was nothing against the prisoners, and that the law could not be enforced. The Governor was made acquainted with these facts, but on the morning of the 27th, he disbanded the McDonough Troops, and sent them home: took Captain Dunn's company of Cavalry and proceeded to Nauvoo, leaving these two men and three or four friends, to be guarded by eight men at the jail; and a company in town of 60 men, 80 or 100 rods from the jail, as a corps in reserve.

About six o'clock in the afternoon the guard was surprised by an armed Mob of from 150 to 250, painted red and black and yellow, which surrounded the jail, forced in—poured a shower of bullets into the room where these unfortunate men were held, "in durance vile," to answer to the laws of Illinois; under the solemn pledge of the faith of the State, by Governor Ford, that they should be protected; but the mob ruled!! They fell as Martyrs amid this tornado of lead, each receiving four bullets! John Taylor was wounded by four bullets in his limbs but not seriously. Thus perishes the hope of law; thus vanishes the plighted faith of the State; thus the blood of innocents stains the constituted authorities of the United States, and thus have two among the most noble martyrs since the slaughter of Abel, sealed the truth of their divine mission, by being shot, by a Mob for their religion!

12 o'clock at night, 27th June,
Carthage, Hamilton's Tavern.
TO MRS. EMMA SMITH,
AND MAJ. GEN. DUNHAM, &c.—

The Governor has just arrived; says all things shall be inquired into, and all wrong measures taken.

I say to all the citizens of Nauvoo, my brethren, be still, and know that God reigns. Don't rush out of the city—don't rush to Carthage; stay at home, and be prepared for an attack from Missouri mobbers. The Governor will render every assistance possible—has sent out orders for troops—Joseph and Hiram are dead, but not by the Carthage people—the guards were true as I believe.

We will prepare to move the bodies as soon as possible.

The people of the county are greatly excited, and fear the Mormons will come out and take vengeance—I have pledged my word the Mormons will stay at home as soon as they can be informed, and no violence will be on their part, and say to my brethren in Nauvoo, in the name of the Lord—be still—be patient—only let such friends as choose come here to see the bodies—Mr. Taylor's wounds are dressed & not serious—I am sound.

WILLARD RICHARDS,
JOHN TAYLOR,
SAMUEL H. SMITH.

Defend yourselves until protection can be furnished necessary, June 27th, 1844.

THOMAS FORD, Governor
and Commander in chief.

MR. ORSON SPENCER,

Dear Sir:—Please deliberate on this matter; prudence may obviate material destruction. I was at my residence when this horrible crime was committed. It will be condemned by three meet the General and the other persons implicated in them; they arrived at Carthage late at night and next morning voluntarily surrendered themselves to the constable, Mr. Bettersworth, who held the writ against them on a charge of riot for destroying the press, type and fixtures of the Nauvoo Expositor, the property of William and Wilson Law, and other dissenters, charged to have been destroyed on the 10th inst.

The commitment prevailed in the county of Hancock, and had extended to many of the surrounding counties. A large number of the militia of several counties were under arms at Carthage. The Head Quarters of the commanding Gen. Deming; and many other troops were under arms at Warsaw and other places in the neighborhood. The Governor was at Head Quarters in person, for the purpose of seeing that the laws of the land were executed and had pledged his own faith and the faith of the State of Illinois that the Smiths and the other persons concerned with them should be protected from personal violence, if they would surrender themselves to be dealt with according to law. During the two succeeding days his Excellency repeatedly expressed to the legal counsellors of the Smiths his determination to protect the prisoners and to see that they should have a fair and impartial examination so depended on the Executive of the State. On Tuesday morning soon after the surrender of the prisoners on the charge of riot, Gen. Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both arrested on a charge of treason against the State of Illinois. The affidavits upon which the writs issued were made by Hyrum Norton and Augustine Spencer.

On Tuesday afternoon the two Smiths and other persons on the charge of riot appeared before R. F. Smith, a justice of the peace residing at Carthage, and by advice of counsel, in order to prevent it possible, any increase of excitement, voluntarily entered into recognizance in the sum of five hundred dollars each with an exceptionable security, for their appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court for said county. The whole number of persons recognized is fifteen, most if not all of them leading men in the Mormon church.

Making out the bonds and justifying bail necessarily consumed considerable time, and when this was done it was near night and the Justice adjourned his court over without calling on the Smiths to answer to the charge of treason or even intimating to their counsel or the prisoners that they were expected to enter into the examination that night. In less than an hour after the adjournment of the court, constable Bettersworth who had arrested the prisoners in the morning appeared at Hamilton's Hotel, at the lodgings of the prisoners and their counsel and insisted that the Smiths should go to jail, Mr. Woods of Burlington, Iowa, and myself, as counsel for the prisoners, insisted that they were entitled to be brought before the justice for examination before they could be sent to jail. The constable to our surprise, thereupon exhibited a mittimus from said justice as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
Hancock County }

The people of the State of Illinois

went to the jail with the following order to the jailor:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, } ss.
Hancock county. }

To David Bettersworth, constable of said county:

You are commanded to bring the bodies of Joseph Smith & Hyrum Smith from the jail of said county, forthwith before me at my office for an examination on the charge of treason, they having been committed for such examination and the state now being ready for such examination.

Given under my hand and seal this 26 day of June 1844.

Signed, R. F. SMITH, J.P. [L.S.] And demanded the prisoners, but as the jailor could find no law authorizing a justice of the peace, to demand prisoners committed to his charge, he refused to give them up, until discharged from his custody by due course of law. Upon the refusal to give up the prisoners, the company of Carthage Greys marched to the jail, by whose orders I know not, and compelled the jailor against his will and conviction of duty, to deliver the prisoners to the constable, who, forthwith, took them before Justice Smith, the Captain of the Carthage Greys. The counsel for prisoners then appeared, and asked for subpoenas for witnesses on the part of the prisoners, and expressed their wish to go into the examination, as the witnesses could be brought from Nauvoo to Carthage; the justice thereupon fixed the examination for 12 o'clock, on Thursday the 27th inst.; whereupon, the prisoners were remanded to prison. Soon after a council of the military officers was called by the Governor, and was determined to march on the next morning, the 27th inst. to Nauvoo, with all the troops, except one company which was to be selected by the Governor from the troops whose fidelity was more to be relied on to guard the prisoners, whom it was determined should be left at Carthage. On Thursday morning, another consultation of officers took place, and the former orders for marching to Nauvoo with the whole army, were countermanded. One company were ordered to accompany the Governor to Nauvoo; the Carthage Greys, who had but two days before, been under arrest for insulting the commanding General, and whose conduct had been more hostile to the prisoners, than that of any other company, were selected to guard the prisoners, and the other troops including those rendezvoused at Golden's Point, from Warsaw, and who had been promised that they should be marched to Nauvoo, were disbanded. A guard of only eight men was stationed at the jail, whilst the rest of the Greys were in camp at a quarter of a mile's distance, and whilst his excellency was haranguing the peaceable citizens of Nauvoo, and asking them to give up all their own arms, the assassins were murdering the prisoners in jail, whom the Governor had pledged himself and the faith of the State to protect.

H. T. REID.

At the request of the friends of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, I have consented to give a statement of such matters as I had

under my order promptly obeyed and return with Capt. Dunn to Carthage; Captain Dunn, pledging his word as a military man, that Smith and his friends should be protected, that the order was endorsed by Gen Smith, which was communicated by Captain Dunn, to Gov. Ford, with a letter from Gen. Smith informing the Gov., that he would accompany Captain Dunn to Carthage. I left the company and proceeded to Carthage, that about 12 o'clock at night of the 24th Capt. Nauvoo accompanied by Stove, Arma, Crym, with some 13 others, who were charged with a riot in destroying the Printing Press of the Nauvoo Expositor, that on the morning of the 25th, Joseph and Hyrum Smith with the others charged, surrendered themselves to the Constable and at the same time Joseph and Hyrum Smith were arrested on a charge of Treason against the State of Illinois; that about 3 o'clock P. M. on the 25th the Justice, proceeded to the examination in relation to the riot and after a good deal of resistance on the part of the prosecution, we were permitted to enter into a recognizance; to answer at the next term of the Circuit Court, that we were engaged, until dark, in making out and giving our recognizances, that in consequence of the rumors as to the excitement at Warsaw and other points and to allay the fears of the citizens of Nauvoo, I requested Governor Ford to detail a company to Nauvoo, to protect the city, which request was promptly complied with, and that night Capt. Singleton, with a company of men from McDonough county marched to Nauvoo and took possession of the city and remained until the evening of the 27th, when they took up their line of march for Carthage.

After the matter of the riot was disposed of, the Justice left without saying anything in relation to the examination for treason, and in about one hour the constable returned with a mittimus, a copy of which accompanies the statement which was demanded and refused; that I requested the officer to wait until I could see Gov. Ford, and was told he would wait five minutes, and as I went to the door I met Capt. Dunn, with some twenty men to guard the prisoners to jail; that I accompanied Gov. Ford to the Justice, R. F. Smith, who gave as a cause for issuing the warrant of committal; that the prisoners were not personally safe at the hotel.

I then requested the Governor to have a company detailed to guard the jail, which was done, and they arrived at the jail about the same time as the prisoners. On the morning of the 26th, the Governor visited the jail in company with a friend, at which interview the Governor again pledged himself for their personal safety, and said if the troops went to Nauvoo, as was then contemplated, that they should go along to ensure their protection, that after the interview at the jail, the counsel for the prosecution wanted the prisoners brought before the justice for an examination, to which the counsel for the prisoners replied, that they were committed until discharged by due course of law, and that we could do nothing until the prisoners were legally before the court, where we would appear and defend; that the Justice, R. F. Smith gave the constable an order (a copy of which accompanies the statement of H. T. Reid, Esq.,) for the jailor to deliver up the prisoners, which the jailor refused to do; that the constable then repaired to the jail with a company called "Carthage Greys," of whom the Justice, R. F. Smith, was the captain, but not then in command; and by intimidation and for that purpose by me. All these things were required to satisfy the old citizens of Hancock, that the Mormons were peaceably disposed; and to allay jealousy and excitement in their minds. It appears however that the compliance of the Mormons with every requisition made upon them, failed of that purpose. The pledge of security to the Smiths, was not given upon my individual responsibility. The officers and men under my command, to sustain me in performing it. If the assassination of the Smiths was committed by any portion of these, they have added treachery to murder, and have done all they could do to disgrace the State, and sully the public honor.

On the morning of the day the deed was committed, we had proposed to march the army under my command into Nauvoo. I however discovered on the evening before, that nothing but utter destruction of the city would satisfy a portion of the troops; and that if we marched into the city, pretexts would not be wanting for commencing hostilities. The Mormons had done every thing required or which ought to have been required of them. Offensive operations on our part would have been as unjust and disgraceful as they would have been impolitic, in the present critical season of the year, the harvest and the crops. For these reasons I decided, in a council of officers, to disband the army, except three companies, two of which were retained as a guard for the jail. With the other company I marched into Nauvoo, to address the inhabitants there, and tell them what they might expect in case they designedly or imprudently provoked a war. I performed this duty, as I think plainly and emphatically, and then set out to return about three miles a messenger informed me of the occurrences at Carthage. I hastened on to that place. The guard is said, did their duty but were overpowered. Many of the inhabitants of Carthage had fled with their families. Others were prepared to go. I apprehended danger to the settlements from the sudden fury and passion of the Mormons and sanctioned their movements in this respect.

General Deming volunteered to remain with a few troops, to observe the progress of events, to defend property against small numbers, and with orders to retreat if menaced by a superior force. I decided to proceed immediately to Quincy to prepare a force, sufficient to suppress disorders, in case it should ensue for the foregoing transactions or from any other cause. I have hopes that the Mormons will make no further difficulties. If this I may be mistaken. The other party may not be satisfied. They may recommence aggression. I am determined to preserve the peace against all breakers of the same, at all hazards. I think, present circumstances warrant the precaution, of having competent force at my disposal, in readiness to march at a moment's warning. My position at Quincy will enable me to get the earliest in-

Head Quarters, Carthage,
June 29th, 4 o'clock, a. m.
Fellow citizens of Hancock County:—
Every prospect of danger from the Mormon population of this county is removed and those who have retired from their homes in its apprehension, are requested forthwith to aid in allaying public excitement by a speedy return. A communication, this a. m. received from the authorities of Nauvoo, brings the most satisfactory assurances that no retaliation or aggression will be resorted to by their. The butchery of the prisoners at Carthage has the execrations of the great mass of our citizens. The humane and patriotic of Adams co. are gathering at Carthage for the maintenance of our laws against the violators of law of any party. The command of Col. Flood consisting of 224 well armed and efficient men will be at Carthage this a. m. for the preservation of order. The Governor's return from Adams is hourly expected. It is believed that no other forces will be necessary for the public safety.

Your note by the return of the escort has been received with the request for Mr. Taylor and lady; considerations of prudence, should I think delay Mr. Taylors return. I fear it would prove fatal to his recovery. He will receive every attention that my power or the sympathies of many kind persons can furnish. I send you this communication with my last order by the hands of Messrs. Wood and Conyers who are highly respectable citizens of Quincy—Mr. Woods is the Mayor of that City and a decided friend of law. Mr. Conyers was formerly the Mayor of the City. A safe conduct of troops that can be relied upon—In great haste.

PERILOUS BALLOON ADVENTURE.

Balloon lost and Found.—We learn from the Haysburg Register, that Mr. John Wise, the intrepid aeronaut, made an ascension from that place on Saturday last, 3d inst., in the "Vesperus," and met with a most perilous and thrilling adventure. The ascension was made in the midst of a storm. It was with the greatest difficulty that the inflation could be performed, and the net-work, during the process, gave way about the top of the balloon. At the time Mr. Wise cut the rope, a ball as large as a hog's head protruded through the rupture of the netting. The balloon took a Northerly direction, and ascended 4000 feet when it encountered a violent gale from the West, swinging it to and fro, and cracking the net-work at every surge. Mr. Wise, his account, says, his heart began to sick at the idea of falling away from the balloon at that height. He resorted to the expedient of drawing the weight of his body upon the valve-rope. This necessarily opened the valve to its extent, and must soon bring the machine to the ground. But the velocity of wind (being at the rate of about 45 miles per hour) carried him 10 miles before he reached terra firma. Mr. W. threw out his anchor, but it caught against a fence and broke the rope. Mr. W. then attempted to jump from the balloon, but the rope was too short, and he was caught by one of his legs in a hitch of rope. He grasped the drag-rope and, on an inverted position, until the balloon dashed him into a high tree. He then hit to a limb of the tree, and endeavored to extricate his legs. He tried to break by the tossing the balloon, and he only succeeded in getting clear by drawing of his boot, which he lost in the car. The squall increased in violence, snapping the rope which held the balloon to the tree, and in moments it dashed out of sight, keeping it in tolerable trim. Mr. W. says:

"I discovered, in viewing the machine, that I had taken unnecessary alarm at the breaking of the net, as it plainly proved itself sufficient to support my weight. My regret was ended by the favorable opportunity that before me of reaching Philadelphia by candle light. After relinquishing a tree to support the day's adventure, while I began to climb down, I left the end of the drag-rope dug in it, ready for a part of our touch at the contemplated trip. I felt that, as soon as I came up, a new machine."

The following paragraph from the "Casket" (New York) Rec. shows that the balloon went to the rapid rate, and must have been at the rapid rate, as soon as I came up, a new machine."

Who has lost a Ball.—On the evening of the 4th inst., a lighted ball on the premises of the Rev. P. Var Valsburg, of Lexington, in this county. The ball was lost to a balloon containing a basket, in which was a quantity of a small bottle, a tin cup, and a paper printed at Haysburg, dated May 1, 1844. Attached to the ball was a paper, upon which was written, John W. Valsburg, Lexington, Mo. The ball was of a size requiring about six feet of silk.

Kindness.—Is there anything sadder than to see a person, whose kindness does not die. For any part it seems to me, with a double grace and tenderness from the old; it seems in them, and a long-purged benevolence, years ago, if it had survived, and the baseness and selfishness of the deed has passed; as if it were, which had broken the form, left in vain across the heart, and lost which had killed the blood, whitened the thin locks, had no power over the warm tide of affection. It is the triumph of a good art, it is the voice of the which is yet within us. No all; the tenderness of age is twined—blessed in its trophies of obduracy of incrusting and ring; years blessed because it is that a heart will blossom even in the precepts of the tomb, and flatters us with the inviolacy and immortality of love.

THE MILL BOY.

Park Benjamin, in his late life of Henry Clay, says that when he was a youth, "he would throw a bag upon a horse, containing three or four bushels of wheat or corn, mount the bag, and go to mill, get the grain ground, and come home again."

How wonderful! Henry Clay, the great Statesman, when a boy knew how to throw a bag upon a horse—astonishing—mount the bag—hardly peddle—go to mill!—Oh! Jupiter! that a scholar—get the grain ground—what striking abilities—and return home again—Oh! what astonishing mental developments—it is the great wonder in this wonder-working world, that this wonderful genius ever grew up into manhood. What youthfulness! what remarkable sagacity! What deep penetration! Who could join a Clay Club! Learn to throw a bag on a horse, go to mill, and therefore be in a way of safe precedent for the U. S. Presidency.

Another prophet.—The last prophet which has arisen is one Keyl, a German, said to be from Pittsburgh, who has taken up his residence in Columbiana Co., Ohio, and impiously styles himself Christ. He has already a number of followers, whom he calls his witnesses, that he sends out to preach. It is stated they have made great disturbances in Columbiana county; particularly in Rev. H. Hunt's congregation, [Lutheran or German Reform]. On one occasion Keyl was presented, and declared himself to be the "Christ," and he had come to make preparations to judge the world, that no one could touch his person, without his permission, uttering denunciations against all who dared oppose him. On another occasion he requested all who believed him to be Christ to rise to their feet, an old lady among the rest who gave special evidence of her faith, cried out "Thou art truly Christ!"—What a lamentable exhibition of human weakness!—Plebian.

Quick Time on Railroads.—The distance between Stonington and Boston is 89 miles. This the mail cars have run the past week in less than four hours, including the time occupied in crossing the Providence ferry—at least thirty minutes. A new engine, weighing fifteen tons, is to be placed on the Stonington road in a few days, and with this, such is the perfection of the engine and road the distance will be performed between Stonington and Providence in one hour, and thirty minutes. This will be at the rate of more than thirty miles per hour, including stoppages!

Tornado in Mississippi.—A violent tornado occurred near Marshall, Saline county, Miss., on the 24th ult. A stone building occupied by George W. Barnes, was blown down, and he and his family buried in the ruins. The citizens of Marshall repaired to the ruins, and succeeded in extricating them. Most of them were most horribly mutilated and a small child crushed to death.

From Haiti—Brig Pandora, of Boston.—The Boston Mercantile Journal has derived from Capt. Paxton, of the Pandora, an authentic narrative of the engagement between his brig and three schooners belonging to the Haytian insurgents heretofore mentioned to have scoured in the bay of Azua. The objects of the schooners was to prevent the Pandora from supplying the Haytian forces at Azua, then almost reduced to famine, with provisions. On their appearance in his neighbourhood, Captain Paxton ran up his colors, whereupon the schooners showed the insurgent flag, and immediately commenced firing upon the brig. A well directed fire from the Pandora soon silenced one of them, and the hailed down her colors. Soon after, she was supplied with men by one of her consort, and the three again commenced operations again upon the Pandora. The engagement continued for an hour, when Captain Paxton ran his vessel ashore under cover of a battery on the land. The schooners, from 80 to 100 tons each, were manned by 150 men, 40 of whom were killed, and twice that number wounded. The damage to the Pandora consisted chiefly in the destruction of her rigging and lower rigging.

A letter from Port au Prince, of May the 15th, states that President Herard had burnt Azua, and was reported to be marching with his whole force upon the capital then in possession of the new President, Gen. Gurrie. Of course there was no business doing. The vessels in port retained their cargoes on board.

THE RIVERS.

From the Alton Telegraph.
Thursday Morning.—The water continues to rise with alarming rapidity. We are now, undoubtedly, being visited by one of the most disastrous floods that has ever occurred in the Mississippi Valley. We learn from the Captain of the Mungo Park, which arrived on Wednesday evening, from the Illinois, that that river is now higher than it has ever been known to be, since 1805. Its present average width, from Peoria to the mouth is judged to be at least eight miles; causing immense damage to buildings, crops, &c. At this place, the water has risen several feet since our last paper, submerging not only our entire levee, but a great portion of Second street—covering the floors of a number of the stores several inches; and in a few instances, where the floors are below the present grade of the street, the occupants have been obliged to remove their stocks.

12 o'clock, noon.—The river has risen 3 inches since 6 o'clock this morning. The only means of passing dry-shod over the side walk through Second street, is on planks placed on dry goods boxes, and the street is crossed by skills. Two large flat boats loaded with staves, lie in State street, at its junction with Second, one of which draws three feet of water. Were it not for the tops of the trees, opposite this city, we should have an unobstructed view across a sheet of water at least nine miles in width.

We had a few minutes conversation this morning with Sam. Squires Esq. from Six Mile. He informs us that Madison is completely inundated. The citizens have been obliged to leave their homes; and many of them have taken refuge in their churches, the ground about it being somewhat higher than the adjacent land. Many cattle have been lost and incalculable damage is being done to fences, crops, &c.

Mr. Squires came up in the Madison steam Ferry Boat, which was filled with families who are driven from their houses, prairie and farms without difficulty. Mr. S. reports that the river is running with great force across into Long Lake, at the Junction House, and it was the general opinion of those on board the boat, that the water has cut a channel across at that point. The whole of Six Mile with all the farms adjacent are flooded. The ferry boat will continue her trips—taking off the families as fast as possible. We learn also, that the inhabitants at Venice, as well as those at Illinois town, have been compelled to leave their dwellings.

St. Louis comes in for a full share in this general calamity. All the houses on Front street, from the intersection of Market to the northern end of the levee, have more or less water in them. Those between Locust and Oak streets have from two to three feet on the first floor; the levee and side-walks are completely under water, and impassable. The high water has put nearly an entire stop to all business connected with the river.

6 o'clock P. M.—The river continues rising at the rate of half an inch per hour. We have just seen a gentleman from the Upper Mississippi, who came down on the Iowa. He reports a considerable rise at Quincy, which is yet to reach us; and that the water is doing much damage above to towns and farms. The destruction of cattle is great, as the water is covering islands that were never before known to be inundated. It is believed that within the last sixty days more rain has fallen, than there has in the aggregate within the previous two years.

ANOTHER FLOOD.

The present unprecedented rise in the Missouri is spreading destruction throughout the river counties in the western and north western portions of this state. The Missouri had risen several feet at St. Joseph, on the 13th inst. within the previous 24 hours. The crops, fences and stock had been swept away, many buildings destroyed and a great many lives lost. It is expected to rise three or four feet higher.

From Weston to Glasgow the low lands are completely inundated, and every wood pile swept away. Kansas bottom is submerged, the Kansas river running entirely across the Missouri. Every farm in that region is under water, and the crops are probably destroyed in toto. At Liberty landing the warehouses and the bottom were submerged; also Camden bottom to the depth of four or five feet, and the bottoms opposite Lexington, Booneville, Rochester, St. Charles, &c. The amount of property which has been destroyed is incalculable. The steamer Missouri Mail, on her trip down, was halted from both sides of the river, and compelled to render assistance to the inhabitants.

At this point the river is higher than it has been before for a long series of years. The water is over the lower floors of most of the stores on the levee. The wharf is entirely submerged. Most of the American bottom, and Illinois town are entirely covered, the water being from six to eight feet deep in most places. A flat boat ferry has been established between the opposite bank and Pap's house. Yesterday one of the ferry boats left this side of the river at the intersection of Market street and passed to the bluff ten miles distant, via Illinois town and Cahokia.

The low lands below us on the river are entirely covered with water, and the crops of tobacco, cotton, sugar, &c., in many instances destroyed. The present flood, we fear, will prove the most disastrous which has been experienced for a long period in the Mississippi Valley. As the water is still rising here and above we know not what further losses may yet be sustained. —Mo. Reporter, June 10.

NAUVOO NEIGHBOR—EXTRA.

Sunday, 3d week, p. m. June 30, 1844.

Awful Assassination! The Pledged faith of the State of Illinois stained with innocent blood by a Mob!

On Monday the 24th inst., after Gov. Ford had sent word, that those eighteen persons demanded on a warrant, among whom were Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, should be protected, by the militia of the State, they in company with some ten or twelve others, started for Carthage. Four miles from that place, they were met by Capt. Dunn, with a company of cavalry, who had an order from the Governor for the "State Arms." Gen. Smith endorsed his acceptance of the same, and both parties returned to Nauvoo to obtain said arms. After the arms were obtained, both parties took up the line of march for Carthage, where they arrived about five minutes before twelve o'clock at night. Capt. Dunn nobly acquitting himself, landed us safely at Hamilton's Hotel.

In the morning we saw the Governor, and he pledged the faith of the State, that his brother Hyrum would be arrested by a warrant founded upon the oaths of H. O. Norton and Augustine Spencer, for treason. Knowing the threats from several persons, that the two Smiths should never leave Carthage alive, we all began to be alarmed for their personal safety. The Gov. and Gen. Deming conducted them before the McDonough troops and introduced them as Gen. Joseph Smith and Gen. Hyrum Smith. This maneuver came near raising a mutiny among the "Carthage Greys," but the Governor quelled it.

In the afternoon, after great exertions on the part of our counsel, we dispensed with an investigation, and voluntarily gave bail for our appearance to the Circuit Court, to answer in the case of abetting the Nauvoo Expositor, as a nuisance.

At evening the Justice made out a mittimus, without an investigation, and committed the two Gen. Smiths to prison until discharged by due course of law, and they were safely guarded to jail. In the morning the Governor went to the jail and had an interview with these men, and to every appearance all things were explained on both sides.

The constable then went to take these men from the jail, before the Justice for examination; but the jailor refused to let them go, as they were under his direction "till discharged by due course of law," but the Governor's troops, to the amount of one or two hundred, took them to the Court House, where the hearing was continued till Saturday the 26th, and they were reminded to jail. Several of our citizens had permits from the Governor to lodge with them, and visit them in jail. It now began to be rumored by several men, whose names will be forthcoming in time, that there was nothing against these men, the law could not reach them, but powder and ball would! The Governor was made acquainted with these facts, but on the morning of the 27th, he disbanded the McDonough Troops, and sent them home; took Captain Dunn's company of Cavalry and proceeded to Nauvoo, leaving these two men and three or four friends, to be guarded by eight men at the jail; and a company in town of 60 men, 80 or 100 rods from the jail, as a corps in reserve.

About six o'clock in the afternoon the guard was surprised by an armed Mob of from 150 to 250, painted red and black and yellow, which surrounded the jail, forced in—poured a shower of bullets into the room where these unfortunate men were held, "in defiance of the laws of the State," under the solemn pledge of the faith of the State, by Governor Ford, that they should be protected; but the mob ruled!! They fell as Martyrs amid this tornado of lead, each receiving four bullets! John Taylor was wounded by four bullets in his limbs but not seriously. This perishes the hope of law; thus vanishes the pledged faith of the State; thus the blood of innocence stains the constituted authorities of the United States, and thus have two among the most noble martyrs since the slaughter of Abel, sealed the truth of their divine mission, by being shot, by a Mob for their religion!

Messengers were dispatched to Nauvoo, but did not reach there till morning. The following was one of the letters:

Carthage, Hamilton's Tavern.
TO MRS. EMMA SMITH,
AND MRS. JEN. DUNHAM, &c.—

The Governor has just arrived; says all things shall be inquired into, and all right measures taken.

I say to all the citizens of Nauvoo, my brethren, be still, and know that God reigns. Don't rush out of the city—don't rush to Carthage; stay at home, and be prepared for an attack from Missouri mobbers. The Governor will render every assistance possible—has sent out orders for troops—Joseph and Hyrum are dead, but not by the Carthage people—the guards were true as I believe.

We will prepare to move the bodies as soon as possible.

The people of the county are greatly excited, and fear the Mormons will come out and take vengeance—I have pledged my word the Mormons will stay at home as soon as they can be informed, and no violence will be on their part, and say to my brethren in Nauvoo, in the name of the Lord—be still—be patient—only let such friends as choose come here to see the bodies—Mr. Taylor's wounds are dressed & not serious—I am sound.

WILLARD RICHARDS,
JOHN TAYLOR,
SAMUEL H. SMITH.

Defend yourselves until protection can be furnished necessary, June 27th, 1844.

THOMAS FORD, Governor
and Commander in chief.

Mr. ORSON SPENCER,
Dear Sir:—Please deliberate on this matter; prudence may obviate material destruction. I was at my residence when this horrible crime was committed. It will be condemned by three-fourths of the citizens of the county—he gets or you will be attacked from Missouri.
M. R. DEMING.

The Governor, as well as the citizens of Carthage, was thunder struck! and fled.

The Legion in Nauvoo, was called out at 10 A. M. and addressed by Judge Phelps, Col. Buckmaster, of Alton, the Governors aid, and others, all excited and fury allayed and preparations were made to receive the bodies of the noble martyrs. About 2 o'clock a double file, east of the Temple on Mulholland street, under the direction of the City Marshal, followed by Samuel H. Smith, the brother of the deceased, Dr. Richards and Mr. Hamilton, of Carthage. The wagons were guarded by 8 men. The procession that followed in Nauvoo, was the City Council, the Lieut. Gen. Staff, the Major Gen. and staff, the brigadier and staff, commanders and officers of the Legion and citizens generally, which numbered several thousands, amid the most solemn lamentations and wailings that ever ascended into the ears of the Lord of Hosts to be avenged of our enemies!

When the procession arrived the bodies were both taken into the Nauvoo Mansion, the scene at the Mansion cannot be described: the audience addressed by Dr. Richards, Judge Phelps, Woods and Reed Esqs. of Iowa and Col. Markham. It was a vast assemblage of some 8 or 10,000 persons, and with one united voice resolved to trust to the law for a remedy of such a high handed assassination, and when that failed to call upon God for vengeance as of our wrongs! Oh widows and orphans! Oh Americans weep for the glory of freedom has departed!

STATEMENT OF FACTS!

At the request of many persons who wish that the truth may go forth to the world in relation to the late murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, by a band of lawless assassins, I have consented to make a statement of the facts so far as they have come to my knowledge, in an authentic shape, as one of the attorneys employed to defend the said Smiths against the charges brought against them, and other persons at Carthage, in the State of Illinois.

On Monday the 24th inst., at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith I left Fort Madison in the Territory of Iowa and arrived at Carthage where I expected to meet the General, his brother Hyrum and the other persons implicated with them; they arrived at Carthage late at night and next morning voluntarily surrendered themselves to the constable, Mr. Bettersworth, who held the writ against them on a charge of riot for destroying the press, type and fixtures of the Nauvoo Expositor, the property of William and Wilson Law, and other dissenters, charged to have been destroyed on the 10th inst.

Great excitement prevailed in the county of Hancock, and had extended to many of the surrounding counties. A large number of the militia of several counties were under arms at Carthage; the Head Quarters of the commanding Gen. Deming; and many other troops were under arms at Warsaw and other places in the neighborhood. The Governor was at Head Quarters in person, for the purpose of seeing that the laws of the land were executed and had pledged his own faith and the faith of the State of Illinois that the Smiths and the other persons concerned with them should be protected from personal violence, if they would surrender themselves to be dealt with according to law. During the two succeeding days his Excellency repeatedly expressed to the legal counsellors of the Smiths his determination to protect the prisoners and to see that they should have a fair and impartial examination to the charge on the 26th inst. of the State. On Tuesday morning soon after the surrender of the prisoners on the charge of riot, Gen. Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both arrested on a charge of treason against the State of Illinois. The affidavits upon which the writs issued were made by Henry Norton and Augustine Spencer.

On Tuesday afternoon the two Smiths and other persons on the charge of riot appeared before R. F. Smith, a Justice of the peace residing at Carthage, and by advice of counsel, in order to prevent if possible, any increase of excitement, voluntarily entered into recognizance in the sum of five hundred dollars each with unexceptionable security, for their appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court for said county. The whole number of persons recognized is fifteen, most if not all of them leading men in the Mormon church.

Making out the bonds and justifying bail necessarily consumed considerable time, and when this was done it was near night and the Justice adjourned his court over without calling on the Smiths to answer to the charge of treason or even intimating to their counsel or the prisoners that they were expected to enter into the examination that night. In less than an hour, after the adjournment of the court, constable Bettersworth who had arrested the prisoners in the morning appeared at Hamilton's Hotel, at the lodgings of the prisoners and their counsel and insisted that the Smiths should go to jail. Mr. Woods of Burlington, Iowa, and myself, as counsel for the prisoners, insisted that they were entitled to be brought before the Justice for examination before they could be sent to jail. The constable to our surprise, thereupon exhibited a mittimus from said Justice as follows:

Hancock County.

The people of the State of Illinois to the keeper of the Jail of the said county greeting:

Whereas Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith of the county aforesaid have been arrested upon the oath of Augustine Spencer and Henry O. Norton, for the crime of treason, and has been brought before me as a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, for trial at the seat of justice thereof, which trial has been necessarily postponed by reason of the absence of material witnesses, to wit: Francis M. Higbee and others; therefore I command you in the name of the people to receive the said Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith into your custody in the jail of the county aforesaid, there to remain until discharged by due course of law.

(Signed,) R. F. SMITH, J. P. [L.S.]

His Excellency did not think it within the sphere of his duty to interfere, and the prisoners were removed from their lodgings to jail. The recitals of the mittimus so far as they relate to the prisoners having been brought before the justice for trial, and it there appearing that the necessary witness of the prosecution were absent, is wholly untrue, unless the prisoners could have appeared before the justice without being present in person or by counsel; nor is there any law of Illinois within my knowledge which permits a justice to commit persons charged with crimes, to jail without examination as to the probability of their guilt.

On Wednesday forenoon the Governor or in company with one of his friends, visited the prisoners at the jail, and again assured them that they should be protected from violence, and told them that if the troops marched the next morning to Nauvoo as his Excellency then expected they should be taken along in order to insure their personal safety.

On the same morning, some one or more of the counsel for the prosecution, expressed their wish to me, that the prisoners should be brought out of jail for examination; they were answered that the prisoners had already been committed, and that the justice and constable had no further control of the prisoners; and that if the prosecutors wished the prisoners brought out of jail, they should bring them out on a writ of Habeas Corpus or some other due course of law. The constable after this conversation went to the jail with the following order to the jailor:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

Hancock County.

To David Bettersworth, constable of said county:

You are commanded to bring the bodies of Joseph Smith & Hyrum Smith from the jail of said county, forthwith

PERILOUS BALLOON ADVENTURE.

Balloon Lost and Found.—We learn from the Holidaysburg Register, that Mr. John Wise, the intrepid aeronaut made an ascension from that place on Saturday last, 3d inst., in the 'Vesperus,' and met with a most perilous and thrilling adventure. The ascension was made in the midst of a storm. It was with the greatest difficulty that the inflation could be performed, and the net-work, during the process, gave way about the top of the balloon. At the time Mr. Wise cut the rope, a bulb as large as a hog's head protruded through the rupture of the netting. The balloon took a Northerly direction, and ascended 4000 feet, when it encountered a violent gale from the West, swinging it to and fro, and cracking the net-work at every surge. Mr. Wise, in his account, says, his heart began to sick at the idea of falling away from the balloon at that height. He resorted to the expedient of throwing the weight of his body upon the valve-rope. This necessarily opened the valve to its full extent, and must soon bring the machine to the ground. But the velocity of the wind (being at the rate of about fifty miles per hour) carried him 16 miles before he reached terra firma. Mr. W. threw out his anchor, but it caught against a fence and broke the rail. Mr. W. then attempted to jump from the car into a ploughed field, but the balloon rose with a violent surge, and he was caught by one of his legs in a hitch of the rope. He grasped the drag-rope and held on, in an inverted position, until the balloon dashed him into a high tree. He took a hitch to a limb of the tree, and then endeavored to extricate his leg, the tree being so thick with moss and vines, that he only succeeded in getting clear by drawing of his boot, which he lost in the car. The squalls increased in violence, snapped the rope which held the balloon to the tree, and in a few moments it dashed out of sight, the car keeping it in tolerable trim. Mr. W. says:

"I discovered, in viewing the Machine, that I had taken unnecessary alarm in the breaking of the net-work, as it plainly proved itself sufficiently strong to have borne its load to any desirable distance. My regret was enhanced by the favorable opportunity that was before me of reaching Philadelphia by early candle light. After soliloquizing on the tree top upon the day's adventure for a while, I began to clamber down its trunk, leaving the end of the drag-rope dangling in its top, ready for a port of entry to touch at in my contemplated trip from Pittsburgh across the mountains to the eastern cities, as soon as I can ring up a new machine."

The following paragraph from the Catskill (New York) Recorder shows where the balloon went to, and the rapid rate it must have been driven, to have reached that place on the same day.

"Who has lost a Balloon?—On the evening of the 4th inst., a balloon alighted on the Premises of the Rev. John P. Van Valkenburgh, of Lexington, in this county. The car was attached to the balloon containing a lady's basket, in which was a quantity of cake, a small bottle, a tin cup, and several papers printed at Holidaysburg, Pa., dated May 4, 1844. Attached to the basket was a paper, upon which was written, John Wise, Philadelphia. The balloon was of a size requiring about six hundred yards of silk."

Kindness.—Is there one being stubborn as the rock to misfortune, whose kindness does not effect? For my part it seems to me to come with a double grace and tenderness from the old; it seems in them the hoarded and long purified benevolence of years; as if it had survived and conquered the baseness and selfishness of the ordeal it has passed; as if the winds, which had broken the form, had swept in vain across the heart, and the frosts which had chilled the blood, and whitered the thin locks, had possessed no power over the warm tide of the affections.—It is the triumph of nature over art; it is the voice of the angel which is yet within us. Nor is this all; the tenderness of age is twice blessed—blessed in its trophies over the obduracy of incrusting and withering years; blessed because it tells us that a heart will blossom even upon the precincts of the tomb, and flatters us with the inviolacy and immortality of love.

THE MILL BOY.

Park Benjamin, in his late life of Henry Clay, says, that when he was a youth, "he would throw a bag upon a horse, containing three or four bushels of wheat or corn, mount the bag, and go to mill, get the grain ground, and come home again." How wonderful! Henry Clay, the great Statesman, when a boy knew how to throw a bag upon a horse—astonishing—mount the bag—hardly credible—go to mill!—Oh! Jupiter—what a scholar—get the grist ground—what striking abilities—and return home again—Oh! what astonishing mental developments—it is the greatest wonder in this wonder-working world, that this wonderful genius ever grew up into manhood. What youthful greatness! what remarkable sagacity! What deep penetration! Who would not join a Clay Club! Learn to throw a bag on a horse, go to mill, and therefore be in a way of safe precedent for the U. S. Presidency.

Another prophet.—The last prophet which has arisen is one Keyl, a German, said to be from Pittsburgh, who has taken up his residence in Columbiana co. Ohio, and impiously styles himself Christ. He has already a number of followers, whom he calls his witnesses, that he sends out to preach. It is stated they have made great disturbances in Columbiana county; particularly in Rev. H. Hunt's congregation, (Lutheran or German Reform). On one occasion Keyl was presented, and declared himself to be the 'Christ,' that he had come to make preparations to judge the world, that no one could touch his person, without his permission, uttering denunciations against all who dared oppose him. On another occasion he requested all who believed him to be Christ to rise to their feet. A majority of those present rose, an old lady among the rest who gave special evidence of her faith. What a lamentable exhibition of human weakness!—Plebian.

Quick Time on Railroads.—The distance between Stonington and Boston is 89 miles. This the mail cars have run the past week in less than four hours, including the time occupied in crossing the Providence ferry—at least thirty minutes. A new engine, weighing fifteen tons, is to be placed on the Stonington road in a few days, and with this, such is the perfection of the engine and road the distance will be performed between Stonington and Providence in one hour and thirty minutes. This will be at the rate of more than thirty miles per hour, including stoppages!

Tornado in Mississippi.—A violent tornado occurred near Marshall, Saline county, Miss. on the 22d ult. A stone building occupied by George W. Barnes, was blown down, and he and his family buried in the ruins. The citizens of Marshall repaired to the ruins, and succeeded in extricating them. Most of them were most horribly mutilated and a small child crushed to death.

From Hayti—Brig Pandora, of Boston.—The Boston Mercantile Journal has derived from Capt. Paxton, of the Pandora, an authentic narrative of the engagement between his brig and three schooners belonging to the Haytian insurgents heretofore mentioned to have occurred in the bay of Azua. The objects of the schooners was to prevent the Pandora from supplying the Haytian forces at Azua, then almost reduced to famine, with provisions. On their appearance in his neighbourhood, Captain Paxton ran up his colors; whereupon the schooners showed the insurgent flag and immediately commenced firing upon the brig. A well directed fire from the Pandora soon silenced one of them, and she hauled down her colors. Soon after she was supplied with men by one of her consorts, and the three again commenced operations again upon the Pandora. The engagement continued for an hour, when Captain Paxton ran his vessel ashore under cover of a battery on the land. The schooners, from 80 to 100 tons each, were manned by 150 men, 40 of whom were killed, and twice that number wounded. The damage to the Pandora consisted chiefly in the destruction of her running and lower rigging.

A letter from Port au Prince, of May the 15th, states that President Herard had burnt Azua, and was reported to be marching with his whole force upon the capital then in possession of the new President, Gen. Gurrie. Of course there was no business doing. The vessels in port retained their cargoes on board.

THE RIVERS.

Thursday Morning.—The water continues to rise with alarming rapidity. We are now, undoubtedly, being visited by one of the most disastrous floods that has ever occurred in the Mississippi Valley. We learn from the Captain of the Mungo Park, which arrived on Wednesday evening, from the Illinois, that that river is now higher than it has ever been known to be, since 1805. Its present average width, from Peoria to the mouth, is judged to be at least eight miles; causing immense damage to buildings, crops, &c. At this place, the water has risen several feet since our last paper; submerging not only our entire levee, but a great portion of Second street—covering the floors of a number of the stores several inches; and in a few instances, where the floors are below the present grade of the street, the occupants have been obliged to remove their stocks.

12 o'clock, noon.—The river has risen 3 inches since 6 o'clock this morning. The only means of passing dry-shod over the side walk through Second street, is on planks placed on dry goods boxes, and the street is crossed by skiffs. Two large flat boats loaded with staves, lie in State street, at its junction with Second, one of which draws three feet of water. Were it not for the tops of the trees, opposite this city, we should have an unobstructed view across a sheet of water at least nine miles in width.

We had a few minutes conversation this morning with Sam. Squires Esq. from Six Mile. He informs us that Madison is completely inundated. The citizens have been obliged to leave their homes, and many of them have taken refuge in their church, the ground about it being somewhat higher, than the adjacent land. Many cattle have been lost and incalculable damage is being done to fences, crops, &c.

Mr. Squires came up in the Madison steam Ferry Boat which was filled with families who are driven from their homes by the flood. The boat crossed over prairie and farms without difficulty. Mr. S. reports that the river is running with great force across into Long Lake, at the Junction House, and it was the general opinion of those on board the boat, that the water has cut a channel across at that point. The whole of Six Mile with all the farms adjacent are flooded. The ferry boat will continue her trips—taking off the families as fast as possible. We learn also, that the inhabitants at Venice, as well as those at Illinois town, have been compelled to leave their dwellings.

St. Louis comes in for a full share in this general calamity. All the houses on Front street, from the intersection of Market to the northern end of the levee, have more or less water in them. Those between Locust and Oak streets have from two to three feet on the first floor; the levee and side-walks are completely under water, and impassable. The high water has put nearly an entire stop to all business connected with the river.

4 o'clock P. M.—The river continues rising at the rate of half an inch per hour. We have just seen a gentleman from the Upper Mississippi, who came down on the Iowa. He reports a considerable rise at Quincy, which is yet to reach us; and that the water is doing much damage above to towns and farms. The destruction of cattle is great, as the water is covering islands that were never before known to be inundated. It is believed that within the last sixty days more rain has fallen, than there has in the aggregate within the previous two years.

ANOTHER FLOOD.

The present unprecedented rise in the Missouri is spreading destruction throughout the river counties in the western and north western portions of this state. The Missouri had risen several feet at St. Joseph, on the 13th inst. within the previous 24 hours. The crops, fences and stock, had been swept away, many buildings destroyed and some lives lost. It is expected to rise three or four feet higher.

From Weston to Glasgow the low lands are completely inundated, and every wood pile swept away. Kansas bottom is submerged, the Kansas river running entirely across the Missouri. Every farm in that region is under water, and the crops are probably destroyed in toto. At Liberty landing the warehouses and the bottom were submerged; also Camden bottom to the depth of four or five feet, and the bottoms opposite Lexington, Booneville, Rochester, St. Charles, &c. The amount of property which has been destroyed is incalculable. The steamer Missouri Mail, on her trip down, was hailed from both sides of the river, and compelled to render assistance to the inhabitants.

At this point the river is higher than it has been before for a long series of years. The water is over the lower floors of most of the stores on the levee. The wharf is entirely submerged. Most of the American bottom and Illinois town are entirely covered, the water being from six to eight feet deep in most places. A flat boat ferry has been established between the opposite bank and Pap's house. Yesterday one of the ferry boats left this side of the river at the intersection of Market street and passed to the bluffs ten miles distant, via Illinois town and Cahokia.

The low lands below us on the river are entirely covered with water, and the crops of tobacco, cotton, sugar, &c., in many places destroyed. The present season has been experienced for a long period in the Mississippi Valley. As the water is still rising here and above we know not what further losses may yet be sustained.—Mo. Reporter, June 19.

NAUVOO NEIGHBOR—EXTRA.

Sunday, 3 o'clock, p. m., June 30, 1844.

Awful Assassination! The Pledged faith of the State of Illinois stained with innocent blood by a Mob!

On Monday the 24th inst., after Gov. Ford had sent word, that those eighteen persons, demanded on a warrant, among whom were Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, shall be protected, by the militia of the State, they in company with some ten or twelve others, started for Carthage. Four news from that place, they were met by Capt. Dunn, with a company of cavalry, who had an order from the Governor to the "State Arms." Gen. Smith endorsed his acceptance of the same, and both parties returned to Nauvoo to obtain said arms. After the arms were obtained, both parties took up the line of march for Carthage, where they arrived about five minutes before twelve o'clock at night. Capt. Dunn nobly acquitting himself, landed us safely at Hamilton's Hotel.

In the morning we saw the Governor, and he pledged the faith of the State, that we should be protected. Gen. Smith and his brother Hyrum were arrested by a warrant, founded upon the oaths of H. O. Norton, Augustine Spencer, for treason. Knowing the threats from several persons, that the two Smiths should never leave Carthage alive, we all began to be alarmed for their personal safety. The Gov. and Gen. Deming conducted them before the McDonough troops and introduced them as Gen. Joseph Smith and Gen. Hyrum Smith. This manœuvre came near raising a mutiny among the "Carthage Greys," but the Governor quelled it.

In the afternoon, after great exertions on the part of our counsel, we dispensed with an investigation, and voluntarily gave bail for our appearance to the Circuit Court, to answer in the case of abating the Nauvoo Expositor, as a nuisance.

At evening the Justice made out a mittimus, without an investigation; and committed the two Gen. Smiths to prison until discharged by due course of law, and they were safely guarded to jail. In the morning the Governor went to the jail and had an interview with these men, and to every appearance all things were explained on both sides.

The constable then went to take these men from the jail, before the Justice for examination, but the jailer refused to let them go, as they were under his direction. "Will discharged by due course of law"; but the Governor's troops, to the amount of one or two hundred, took them to the Court House, when the hearing was continued till Saturday the 29th, and they were remanded to jail. Several of our citizens had permits from the Governor to lodge with them, and visit them in jail. It now began to be rumored by several men, whose names will be forthcoming in time, that there was nothing against these men, the law could not reach them, but powder and ball would! The Governor was made acquainted with these facts, but on the morning of the 27th, he disbanded the McDonough Troops, and sent them home; took Captain Dunn's company of Cavalry and proceeded to Nauvoo, leaving these two men and three or four friends, to be guarded by eight men at the jail; and a company in town of 60 men, 80 or 100 rods from the jail, as a corps in reserve.

About six o'clock in the afternoon the guard was surprised by an armed Mob of from 150 to 250, painted red and black and yellow, which surrounded the jail, forced in—poured a shower of bullets into the room where these unfortunate men were held, "in durance vile," to answer to the laws of Illinois; under the solemn pledge of the faith of the State, by Governor Ford, that they should be protected! but the mob ruled! They fell as Martyrs amid this tornado of lead, each receiving four bullets! John Taylor was wounded by four bullets in his limbs but not seriously. Thus perishes the hope of law; thus vanishes the pledged faith of the State; thus the blood of innocence stains the constituted authorities of the United States, and thus have two among the most noble martyrs since the slaughter of Abel, sealed the truth of their divine mission, by being shot by a Mob for their religion!

Messengers were dispatched to Nauvoo, but did not reach there till morning. The following was one of the letters:

12 o'clock at night, 27th June, Carthage, Hamilton's Tavern.

TO MRS. EMMA SMITH,

AND MAJ. GEN. DUNHAM, &c.

The Governor has just arrived; says all things shall be inquired into, and all right measures taken. I say to all the citizens of Nauvoo, my brethren, be still, and know that God reigns. Don't rush out of the city—don't rush to Carthage; stay at home, and be prepared for an attack from Missouri mobbers. The Governor will render every assistance possible—has sent out orders for troops—Joseph and Hyrum are dead, but not by the Carthage people—the guards were true as I believe.

We will prepare to move the bodies as soon as possible. The people of the county are greatly excited, and fear the Mormons will come out and take vengeance—I have pledged my word the Mormons will stay at home as soon as they can be informed, and no violence will be on their part, and say to my brethren in Nauvoo, in the name of the Lord—be still—be patient—only let such friends as choose come here to see the bodies—Mr. Taylor's wounds are dressed & not serious—I am sound.

WILLARD RICHARDS,

JOHN TAYLOR,

SAMUEL H. SMITH.

Defend yourselves until protection can be furnished necessary, June 27th, 1844.

THOMAS FORD, Governor

and Commander in chief.

MR. ORSON SPENCER,

Dear Sir:—Please deliberate on this matter, prudence may obviate material destruction. I was at my residence when this horrible crime was committed. It will be condemned by three fourths of the citizens of the county—be quiet or you will be attacked from Missouri.

M. R. DEMING.

The Governor, as well as the citizens of Carthage, was thunder struck! and fled.

The Legion in Nauvoo, was called out at 10 A. M. and addressed by Judge Phelps, Col. Buckmaster, of Alton, the Governors aid, and others, and all excitement and fury allayed and preparations were made to receive the bodies of the noble martyrs. About 3 o'clock, they were met by a great assemblage of people, east of the Temple on Mulholland street, under the direction of the City Council, the Lieut. Gens. Staff, the Major Gen. and staff, the brigadier and staff, commanders and officers of the Legion and citizens generally, which numbered several thousands, amid the most solemn lamentations and wailings that ever ascended into the ears of the Lord of Hosts to be avenged of our enemies!

When the procession arrived the bodies were both taken into the 'Nauvoo Mansion'; the scene at the Mansion cannot be described: the audience addressed by Dr. Richards, Judge Phelps, Woods and Reed Esqs. of Iowa and Col. Markham. It was a vast assemblage of some 8 or 10,000 persons, and with one united voice resolved to trust to the law for a remedy of such a high handed assassination, and when that failed to call upon God to avenge us of our wrongs! Oh widows and orphans! Oh Americans weep for the glory of freedom has departed!

STATEMENT OF FACTS!

At the request of many persons who wish that the truth may go forth to the world in relation to the late murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, by a band of lawless assassins, I have consented to make a statement of the facts so far as they have come to my knowledge. In an authentic shape, as one of the attorneys employed to defend the said Smiths against the charges brought against them, and other persons at Carthage, in the State of Illinois.

On Monday the 24th inst., at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith I left Fort Madison in the Territory of Iowa and arrived at Carthage where I expected to meet the General, his brother Hyrum and the other persons implicated with them; they arrived at Carthage late at night and next morning voluntarily surrendered themselves to the constable, Mr. Bettersworth, who held the writ against them on a charge of riot for destroying the press, type and fixtures of the Nauvoo Expositor, the property of William and Wilson Law, and other dissenters, charged to have been destroyed on the 10th inst.

Great excitement prevailed in the county of Hancock, and had extended to many of the surrounding counties. A large number of the militia of several counties were under arms at Carthage. The Head Quarters of the commanding Gen. Deming; and many other troops were under arms at Warsaw and other places in the neighborhood. The Governor was at Head Quarters in person, for the purpose of seeing that the laws of the land were executed and had pledged his own faith and the faith of the State of Illinois that the Smiths and the other persons concerned with them should be protected from personal violence, if they would surrender themselves to be dealt with according to law. During the two succeeding days his Excellency repeatedly expressed to the legal counsellors of the Smiths his determination to protect the prisoners and to see that they should have a fair and impartial examination so far as depended on the Executive of the State. On Tuesday morning soon after the surrender of the prisoners on the charge of riot. Gen. Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both arrested on a charge of treason against the State of Illinois. The affidavits upon which the writs issued were made by Henry Norton and Augustine Spencer.

On Tuesday afternoon the two Smiths and other persons on the charge of riot appeared before R. F. Smith, a Justice of the peace residing at Carthage, and by advice of counsel, in order to prevent if possible, any increase of excitement, voluntarily entered into recognizance in the sum of five hundred dollars each with unexceptionable security, for their appearance at the next term of the Circuit Court or said county. The whole number of persons recognized is fifteen, most if not all of them leading men in the Mormon church.

Making out the bonds and justifying bail necessarily consumed considerable time, and when this was done it was near night and the Justice adjourned his court over without calling on the Smiths to answer to the charge of treason or even intimating to their counsel or the prisoners that they were expected to enter into the examination that night. In less than an hour after the adjournment of the court, constable Bettersworth who had arrested the prisoners in the morning appeared at Hamilton's Hotel, at the lodgings of the prisoners and their counsel and insisted that the Smiths should go to jail, Mr. Woods of Burlington, Iowa, and myself, as counsel for the prisoners, insisted that they were entitled to be brought before the justice for examination before they could be sent to jail. The constable to our surprise, thereupon exhibited a mittimus from said justice as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

Hancock County.

The people of the State of Illinois

in the County of Hancock, do hereby greet you:

Whereas Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith of the county aforesaid have been arrested upon the oath of Augustine Spencer and Henry O. Norton, for the crime of treason, and has been brought before me as a Justice of the Peace in and for said county, for trial at the seat of justice thereof, which trial has been necessarily postponed by reason of the absence of material witnesses, to wit: Francis M. Higbee and others; therefore I command you in the name of the people to receive the said Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith into your custody in the jail of the county aforesaid, there to remain until discharged by due course of law.

Given under my hand and seal this 25th day of June, A. D. 1844.

(Signed,) R. F. SMITH, J. P. [L.S.]

His Excellency did not think it within the sphere of his duty to interfere, and the prisoners were removed from their lodgings to jail. The recitals of the mittimus so far as they relate to the prisoners having been brought before the justice for trial, and it there appearing that the necessary witness of the prosecution were absent, is wholly untrue, unless the prisoners could have appeared before the justice without being present in person or by counsel; nor is there any law of Illinois within my knowledge which permits a justice to commit persons charged with crimes, to jail without examination as to the probability of their guilt.

On Wednesday forenoon the Governor in company with one of his friends, visited the prisoners at the jail, and again assured them that they should be protected from violence, and told them that if the troops marched the next morning to Nauvoo as his Excellency then expected they should be taken along in order to insure their personal safety.

On the same morning, some one of more of the counsel for the prosecution, expressed their wish to me, that the prisoners should be brought out of jail for examination; they were answered that the prisoners had already been committed, and that the justice and constable had no further control of the prisoners; and that if the prosecutors wished the prisoners brought out of jail, they should bring them out on a writ of Habeas Corpus or some other due course of law.—The constable after this conversation went to the jail with the following order to the jailor:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

Hancock County.

To David Bettersworth, constable of said county:

You are commanded to bring the bodies of Joseph Smith & Hyrum Smith from the jail of said county, forthwith before me at my office for an examination on the charge of treason, they having been committed for safe keeping until trial could be had on such examination and the state now being ready for such examination.

Given under my hand and seal this 26 day of June 1844.

(Signed,) R. F. SMITH, J.P. [L.S.] And demanded the prisoners, but as the jailor could find no law authorizing a justice of the peace, to demand prisoners committed to his charge, he refused to give them up, until discharged from his custody by due course of law. Upon the refusal to give up the prisoners, the company of Carthage Greys marched to the jail, by whose orders I know not, and compelled the jailor against his will and conviction of duty, to deliver the prisoners to the constable, who, forthwith, took them before Justice Smith, the Captain of the Carthage Greys. The counsel for prisoners then appeared, and asked for subpoenas for witnesses on the part of the prisoners, and expressed their wish to go into the examination, as the witnesses could be brought from Nauvoo to Carthage, the justice thereupon fixed the examination for 12 o'clock on Thursday the 24th inst.; whereupon, the prisoners were remanded to prison. Soon after a council of the military officers was called by the Governor, and it was determined to march on the next morning, the 27th inst. to Nauvoo, with all the troops, except one company which was to be selected by the Governor from the troops whose fidelity was more to be relied on to guard the prisoners whom it was determined should be left at Carthage. On Thursday morning, another consultation of officers took place, and the former orders for marching to Nauvoo with the whole army, were countermanded. One company were ordered to accompany the Governor, to Nauvoo; the Carthage Greys, who had but two days before, been under arrest for insulting the commanding General, and whose conduct had been more hostile to the prisoners, than that of any other company, were selected to guard the prisoners, and the other troops including those rendezvoused at Golden's Point, from Warsaw, and who had been promised that they should be marched to Nauvoo, were disbanded. A guard of only eight men was stationed at the jail, whilst the rest of the Greys were in camp at a quarter of a mile's distance, and whilst his excellency was arranging the peaceable citizens of Nauvoo, and asking them to give up all their own arms, the assassins were murdering the prisoners in jail, whom the Governor had pledged himself and the faith of the State to protect.

At the request of the friends of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, I have consented to give a statement of such matters as I had a knowledge of in relation to their murder at Carthage, and what occurred under my observation. I arrived in Nauvoo from Burlington, Iowa, on Friday, June 21st; inst., about 9 o'clock, P. M. found all things quiet, had an interview on Saturday morning the 22nd, with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who was in consultation with some of their friends in relation to a communication from Gov. Ford, during interview heard Gen. Joseph Smith give orders to disband the Legion, and withdraw the guards and sentinels, who were co-operating with the police to preserve the peace of the city, as he said by order of Gov. Ford; that I went from Nauvoo to Carthage, on the evening of the 23d, when I had an interview with Gov. Ford, assuring him as to the quiet of Nauvoo, and that Smith and his friends were ready to obey the laws. I was told that the Constable with a posse had that evening gone to Nauvoo with writ for Smith and others, and that no thing short of an unconditional surrender to the laws could allay the excitement. I was then informed by Gov. Ford he was pledged to protect all such persons as might be arrested and that they should have an impartial examination, and that if Smith and the rest against whom warrants had been issued, would come to Carthage by Monday the 24th inst., I would be a compliance on their part, and on Sunday morning the 23d, Gov. Ford pledged his word that if Gen. Smith would come to Carthage, he should by him be protected, with such of his friends as might accompany him, and that I as his counsel should have protection, in defending Smith, that I returned to Nauvoo on Sunday evening the 23d, and I found Gen. J. Smith and Hyrum Smith, making preparation to go to Carthage on Monday, and on Monday morning the 24th I left the city of Nauvoo in company with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and some fifteen other persons, parties and witnesses for Carthage, that about four miles west from Carthage, we were met by a company of about 60 men under Capt. Dunn, that at the request of Gen. Joseph Smith, I advanced and communicated with the Commander of the company and was informed he was on his way to Nauvoo, with an order from Gov. Ford, for the State Arms at that place, that it was agreed by myself on behalf of Gen. Smith, that the order for the arms should be endorsed by Gen. Smith, and that he should place himself under the protection of Captain Dunn, to return to Nauvoo and see the Governor's order promptly obeyed and return with Capt. Dunn to Carthage; Captain Dunn, pledging his word as a military man, that Smith and his friends should be protected, that the order was endorsed by Gen. Smith, which was communicated by Captain Dunn, to Gov. Ford, with a letter from Gen. Smith informing the Gov., that he would accompany Captain Dunn to Carthage. I left the company and proceeded to Carthage, that about 12 o'clock at night of the 24th Capt. Dunn returned with the State Arms from Nauvoo accompanied by Joseph and Hyrum, with some 13 others, who were charged with a riot in destroying the Printing Press of the Nauvoo Expositor, that on the morning of the 25th, Joseph and Hyrum Smith with the others charged, surrendered themselves to the Constable and at the same time Joseph and Hyrum Smith were arrested on a charge of Treason against the State of Illinois; that about 3 o'clock P. M. on the 25th the justice, proceeded to the examination in relation to the riot and after a good deal of resistance on the part of the prosecution, we were permitted to enter into a recognizance, to answer at the next term of the Circuit Court, that we were engaged, until dark, in making out and giving our recognizances, that in consequence of the rumors as to the excitement at Warsaw and other points and to allay the fears of the citizens of Nauvoo, I requested Governor Ford to detail a company to Nauvoo, to protect the city, which request was promptly complied with, and that night Capt. Singleton, with a company of men from McDonough County, marched to Nauvoo and took possession of the city and remained until the evening of the 27th, when they took up their line of march for Carthage.

After the matter of the riot was disposed of, the Justice left, without saying any thing in relation to the examination or treason, and in about one hour the constable returned with a mitimus, a copy of which accompanies the statement of my colleague, H. T. Reid, a copy of which was demanded and refused; that I requested the officer to wait until I could see Gov. Ford, and was told he would wait five minutes and as I went to the door I met Capt. Dunn, with some twenty men to guard the prisoners to jail; that I accompanied Gov. Ford to the Justice, R. F. Smith, who gave as a cause for issuing the warrant of commitment, that the prisoners were not personally safe at the hotel.

I then requested the Governor to have a company detailed to guard the jail, which was done, and they arrived at the jail about the same time as the prisoners. On the morning of the 26th, the Governor visited the jail in company with a friend, at which interview the Governor again pledged himself for their personal safety, and said if the troops went to Nauvoo, as was then contemplated, that they should go along to ensure their protection; that after the interview at the jail, the counsel for the prosecution wanted the prisoners brought before the justice for an examination, to which the counsel for the prisoners replied, that they were committed until discharged by due course of law, and that we could do nothing until the prisoners were legally before the court, where we would appear and defend; that the Justice, R. F. Smith, gave the constable an order of which I accompany the statement of H. T. Reid, Esq., for the jailor to deliver up the prisoners, which the jailor refused to do; that the constable then repaired to the jail with a company called "Carthage Greys," of whom the Justice, R. F. Smith, was the captain, but not then in command; and by intimidation and force, he compelled the jailor to deliver up the prisoners to the constable, who took them before the Justice, R. F. Smith, at the Court House, this in the motion of the counsel for the prisoners the examination was postponed until the 27th, 12 o'clock, and subpoenas issued for witnesses in the defence. The two Smiths were then remanded to jail and orders were issued for a consultation of the officers, with the commander-in-chief, and it was determined that the troops should take up a line of march at 8 o'clock, on the morning of the 27th, for Nauvoo; and after the consultation, the justice, who was one of the officers in command, altered the return of the subpoenas until the 29th, and continued the hearing until that time, without consulting either their prisoners or the counsel; that in the morning of the 27th, the order for marching to Nauvoo, was countermanded, and all the troops disbanded but the company under Capt. Singleton at Nauvoo, Capt. Dunn's company of horse, and the Carthage Greys, that the Governor determined to visit Nauvoo, escorted by Capt. Dunn's company; and the Carthage Greys were left as a guard for the prisoners at the jail, that after the troops were disbanded, I requested Gov. Ford to detail some men to guard the route to Warsaw, as I apprehended much danger from that place, but I do not know whether it was done or not, as I left Carthage about 11 o'clock, A. M., and came to Nauvoo; that Gov. Ford and his aid, Col. Bucknall, escorted by Capt. Dunn's company, arrived in Nauvoo about 5 o'clock, P. M., where they addressed the citizens, and promised their protection, and a just execution of the laws, and immediately left the city for Carthage.

Attorney at Law, of Burlington, Iowa.

BY EXPRESS!

Sunday morning 9 o'clock.

The following proclamation has just reached us from head quarters. We assure the governor, if he can manage human butchers, he has nothing to fear from armless, timid, and law abiding Latter day Saints.

I desire to make a brief but true statement of the recent disgraceful affair at Carthage, in regard to the Smiths, so far as circumstances have come to my knowledge. The Smiths, Joseph and Hyrum, have been assassinated in jail, by whom is not known, but will be ascertained. I pledged myself for their safety, and upon the assurance of that pledge, they surrendered as prisoners. The Mormons surrendered the public arms in their possession, and the Nauvoo Legion submitted to the command of Capt. Singleton, of Brown County, deputed for that purpose by me. All these things were required to satisfy the old citizens of Hancock, that the Mormons were peaceably disposed; and to allay jealousy and excitement in their minds. It appears however that the compliance of the Mormons with every requisition made upon them, failed of that purpose. The pledge of security to the Smiths, was not given upon my individual responsibility. Before I gave it, I obtained a pledge of honor by an unanimous vote from the officers and men under my command, to sustain me in performing it. If the assassination of the Smiths was committed by any party, these they have added treachery to murder and have done all they could to disgrace the State, and sully the public honor.

On the morning of the day the deed was committed, we had proposed to march the army under my command into Nauvoo. I however discovered on the evening before, that nothing but utter destruction of the city would satisfy a portion of the troops; and that if we marched into the city, pretexts would not be wanting for commencing hostilities. The Mormons had done every thing required of them. Offensive operations on our part would have been as unjust and disgraceful as they would have been imprudent, in the present critical season of the year, the harvest and the crops. For these reasons I decided, in a council of officers, to disband the army, except a guard for the jail. With the latter company I marched into Nauvoo, to address the inhabitants there, and tell them what they might expect in case they signed or imprudently provoked a war. I performed this duty, as I think plainly and emphatically, and then set out to return to Carthage. When I had marched about three miles a messenger informed me of the occurrences at Carthage. I hastened on to that place. The guard said, did their duty but were overpowered. Many of the inhabitants of Carthage had fled with their families. Others were prepared to go. I apprehended danger to the settlements from the sudden entry and passion of the Mormons, and sanctioned their movements in this respect.

General Deming volunteered to remain with a few troops, to observe the progress of events, to defend property against small numbers, and with orders to retreat if menaced by a superior force. I decided to proceed immediately to Quincy, to prepare a force, sufficient to suppress disorders, in case it should ensue for the foregoing transactions or from any other cause. I have hopes that the Mormons will make no further difficulties. In this I may be mistaken. The other party may not be satisfied. I am determined to preserve the peace against breakers of the same, at all hazards. I think, present circumstances warrant the precaution, of having competent force at my disposal, in readiness to march at a moment's warning. My position at Quincy will enable me to get the earliest intelligence, and to communicate orders with greater celerity.

I have decided to issue the following general orders:

HEAD QUARTERS,

Quincy, June 29, 1844.

It is ordered that the commanders of regiments in the counties of Adams, Marquette, Pike, Brown, Schuyler, Morgan, Scott, Cass, Fulton, and McDonough, and the Regiments composing General Stappa's Brigade, will call their respective Regiments and Battalions together immediately upon the receipt of this order, and proceed by voluntary enlistment to enrol as many men, as can be armed in their respective regiments. They will make arrangements for a campaign of twelve days, and will provide themselves with arms, ammunition, and provisions accordingly, and hold themselves in readiness immediately to march upon the receipt of further orders.

The independent companies of Riflemen, Infantry, Cavalry, and Artillery in the above named counties and in the county of Sangamon will hold themselves in readiness in like manner.

THOMAS FORD,

Governor and Commander-in-chief

Proclamation.

Head Quarters, June 29, 1844,
4 o'clock, A. M.

To the citizens of Carthage and Hancock county: In pursuance of an order from Gov. Ford, instructing me to the exercise of such discretionary powers as I may deem necessary for the preservation of the public safety, and the lives and property of our citizens; I hereby invite all citizens to remain at their several homes in Hancock county and co-operate with me in establishing tranquility and safety throughout the county. The most efficient means have been put in requisition for concentrating the military force of the neighboring counties at Carthage, and in 12 hours there will be a sufficient force for the protection of every citizen in the county.

I confidently believe there is no just apprehension of an attack upon any place by the Mormon citizens of our county. And I hereby strictly command all citizens of Hancock county to abstain from violence towards the Mormon population, under penalty of the severest inflictions of military law, and act in no case, only on the defensive.

The corpses of the murdered men will be removed from Nauvoo, under an escort from Head Quarters.

Given under my hand this 23th June 1844 at 4 o'clock A. M.

M. R. DEMING, Brig. Gen.,
4th Brigade and 5th Division.

It is hoped and expected that the Governor will be at Head Quarters in a few hours.

June 29th, 4 o'clock, a. m.

Fellow citizens of Hancock County:—Every prospect of danger from the Mormon population of this county is removed and those who have retired from their homes in its apprehension, are requested forthwith to aid in allaying public excitement by a speedy return. A communication, this a. m. received from the authorities of Nauvoo, brings the most satisfactory assurances that no retaliation or aggression will be resorted to by their citizens upon any part of the county. The butchery of the prisoners at Carthage has the execrations of the greatness of our citizens. The humane and patriotic of Adams co. are gathering at Carthage for the maintenance of our laws against the violators of law of any party. The command of Col. Flood consisting of 224 well armed and efficient men will be at Carthage this a. m. for the preservation of order. The Governor's return from Adams is hourly expected. It is believed that no other forces will be necessary for the public safety.

M. R. DEMING,
Brig. Gen.

Head Quarters,
Carthage June 29th 1844

Dr. Willard Richards.—Your note by the return of the escort has been received with the request for Mr. Taylor and lady; considerations of prudence, should I think delay Mr. Taylor's return. I fear it would prove fatal to his recovery. He will receive every attention that my power or the sympathies of many kind persons can furnish. I send you this communication with my last order by the hands of Messrs. Wood and Conyers who are highly respectable citizens of Quincy—Mr. Woods is the Mayor of that City and a decided friend of law. Mr. Conyers was formerly the Mayor of the City. A safe conduct of troops that can be relied upon—in great haste.

Very respectfully yours,
M. R. DEMING,
Brig. Gen.

Signs of Peace!

Colonel Fellowes and Captain Jonas are requested to proceed by the first boat to Nauvoo and ascertain what is the feeling, disposition, and determination of the people there, in reference to the late disturbances, ascertain whether any of them propose in any manner to revenge themselves, whether any threats have been used, and what is proposed generally, to be done by them. They are also requested to return to Warsaw and make similar inquiries there; ascertain how far false rumors have been put afloat for the purpose of raising forces; what is the purpose of the Militia assembled, whether any attack is intended on Nauvoo. Ascertain also, whether any persons from Missouri or Iowa intend to take part in the matter, and in my name forbid any such interference, without my request on pain of being demanded for punishment.

(Signed) THOMAS FORD,
June 30th 1844.

Nauvoo, July 1, 1844.

To the City Council of Nauvoo: Gentlemen:—With this, you will receive a copy of instructions from Gov. Ford to us. You will understand by them, what we desire from you in action on your part, as the only authorities of your city now known to the country, of such a character as will pacify the public mind and satisfy the Governor of your determination to sustain the supremacy of the laws, will, we are sure, be gratifying to him, and as much so to

Yours respectfully,
HART FELLOWES,
A. JONAS.

At a meeting of the City Council, held in the Council Room, in the city of Nauvoo, on the first day of July, 1844, having received instructions from Gov. Ford, through the agency of A. Jonas, Esq. and Col. Fellowes, it was unanimously

Resolved, first, For the purpose of ensuring peace and promoting the welfare of the county of Hancock, and surrounding country, that we will rigidly, sustain the laws, and the Governor of the state, so long as they, and he, sustain us in all our constitutional rights.

Resolved, secondly, That to carry the foregoing resolutions into complete effect, that inasmuch as the Governor has taken from us the public arms, that we solicit of him to do the same with all the rest of the public arms of the state.

Resolved, thirdly, To further secure the peace, friendship and happiness of the people, and allay the excitement that now exists, we will appoint private reverend on the assassins of General Joseph Smith, and General Hyrum Smith, by any of the Latter day Saints that instead of "an appeal to arms," we appeal to the majesty of the law, and will be content with whatever judgment it shall award, and should the law fail, we leave the matter to God.

Resolved, unanimously, That this City Council, pledge themselves for the city of Nauvoo, that no aggressions by the citizens of said city shall be made on the citizens of the surrounding country, but we invite them, as friends and neighbors to use the Savior's golden rule, and "do unto others as they would have others do unto them," and we will do likewise.

Resolved, lastly, That we highly approve of the present public pacific course of the Governor to allay excitement, and restore peace among the citizens of the country, and while he does so, and will use his influence to stop exorbitant proceedings in law, until confidence is restored, so that the citizens of Nauvoo, can go to Carthage, or any other place for trial without exposing themselves to the violence of assassins, we will uphold him, and the law by all honorable means.

GEO. W. HARRIS, pres't pro tem.

WILLARD RICHARDS, Recorder.

A. Jonas Esq., and Col. Fellowes: Messrs:—In reply to your communication to the City Council of the city of Nauvoo, on behalf of His Excellency Gov. Ford, I have been instructed by the council to communicate the foregoing resolutions which I respectfully solicit for your consideration, and at the same time would inform you that a public meeting of our citizens will take place at the stand east of the Temple, at 4 P. M. and solicit your attendance.

Most respectfully, your obt' serv't,
W. RICHARDS.

PUBLIC MEETING. At a meeting of a large portion of citizens of Nauvoo convened at the stand, in the afternoon of July 1, 1844, after hearing the above instructions, and resolutions of the City Council, read, and being addressed by A. Jonas, Esq. and others, the meeting responded to the same, with a hearty AMEN! The citizens then passed a vote of thanks to the Governor's agents for their kindly interference in favor of peace among the citizens of Hancock county, and elsewhere around us. They also passed a vote of thanks to Messrs. Wood and Rich, the counsel for the Gov. Smith for their great exertions to have even-handed justice meted to the Latter day Saints; and they also passed a vote of thanks to Messrs. Chambers and Field, the former, one of the editors of the "Missouri Republican," and the latter, one of the authors of the "Reveille," of St. Louis, for their honorable course of coming to Nauvoo for facts, instead of spreading rumors, concerning the Latter day Saints. Mr. Chambers made a very appropriate speech containing innuendoes for the benefit of our citizens, that appeared as the wise man said: "LIKE APPLES OF GOLD IN PICTURES OF SILVER." They also passed a vote of thanks to Messrs. Wood and Conyers, Mayor and ex-Mayor of Quincy, for their friendly disposition in establishing peace in this region, and we are happy to say that all appears to be peace in Nauvoo.

HEAD QUARTERS

Sir.—It is my present opinion, that the Mormons will not commit any further outbreak, * and that no further alarm * need be apprehended. I regret to learn that the party in Hancock who are in favor of violent measures, have circulated a thousand false rumors of danger, for the purpose of getting men together, without my authority, hoping that when assembled, they may be ready to join in their violent councils; this is a fraud upon the country and must not be indulged.

I am afraid the people of Hancock are fast depriving themselves of the sympathy of their fellow citizens, and of the world. I strictly order and enjoin on you that you permit no attack on Nauvoo, or any of the people without my authority. I think it would be best to disband your forces, unless it should be necessary to retain them to suppress violence on either side, of this you must be the judge at present.

I direct that you immediately order all persons, from Missouri and Iowa to leave the camp and return to their respective houses without delay.

Direct also that you cause all mutinous persons, and all persons who advise tumultuous proceedings to be arrested; and that you take energetic measures to stop the practice of spreading false reports put in circulation to inflame the public mind.

(Signed) THOMAS FORD,
Commander in Chief.
To Brig. Gen. Deming, Carthage, Ill.

* "Any further out break," no further alarm" A military mystery—here has been no out break, or alarm among the Mormons; the "out breaks and alarms," and further out breaks and alarms, were at Warsaw and Carthage. The Mormons are for peace and will be, if God and the Governor are willing. Wisdom wins the wise, and honor will clothe the just men of his region with an impenetrable Aegis. Soft words and wise hints, unjealous and with future intimations and unpleasant surmises, "Will light up a smile in the aspect of woe"

Foreign News

From the Baltimore Clipper.

ARRIVAL OF THE CALEDONIA.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER.

Revelation in the Cotton Market.—Sensitiveness of O'Connell not yet taken place.—Texas Excitement in England.—And news Generally.

O'Connell is laid on the table till the next term.

Cotton has met with a dreadful revolution. Prices are down, down.

Texas Annexation has produced a prodigious sensation in England.

There has been another revolution in Spain.

And there has been another dreadful massacre in Turkey.

Trade in France is in a deplorable state.

France has determined to abolish slavery in her colonies.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.

Lord Brougham wished to ask the noble lord the Secretary of foreign affairs, if he had received information with respect to the annexation of Texas with the United States.

The Earl of Aberdeen said the noble and learned lord could not expect him to give a precise answer to the question he had asked: It would receive the most serious attention of her Majesty's government. It was true, he believed, that the treaty for the annexation of Texas to the United States had been signed, but the majority of Congress would not agree to the ratification of it.

ANNEXATION OF TEXAS.—Few things have taken the British people with greater surprise than the news which came to hand this week, not only that a treaty for the annexation of Texas to the American Union, had been signed by the contracting parties, but that the treaty so signed, with all the necessary correspondence and documents, had been laid before the Senate for ratification. Lord Aberdeen spoke guardedly, but both of the speakers emphatically denied having ever contemplated, in connexion with this question, the least interference with the institutions of the United States.—Wilmer and Smith, May 10.

IRELAND.

Irish State Trials.—The legal arguments which had occupied the week on the motion for a new trial, in the case of O'Connell and his colleagues, closed in the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench on Saturday evening last, with a powerful speech on behalf of the Crown from the Irish Attorney General and the Attorney General decidedly objected; the Court announced that they would consider the matter and decide the point on Monday morning.

On Monday nothing was done on the subject by either party.

On Tuesday, the Lord Chief Justice, addressing the Attorney General, said, "Mr. Attorney, I am sorry to tell you, that the Court find they cannot give judgement in the case until next term."

Trinity term commences on the 22d inst., and ends on the 12th June. If the decision on the new trial question be against the defendants, then comes the motion for an arrest of judgement, which may occupy the whole of the ensuing term. If not, there is the writ of error, which will afford materials for another month's specchifying.

MARKETS.

Liverpool Cotton Market, May 19.—The tone of our market has undergone a complete change since the arrival of the steamship Acadia, on Wednesday morning last. The advices which she brought show the receipts of cotton at the ports of the United States to be much larger than was previously anticipated by the parties here, and the consequence has been a sudden diminution in the demand, and fall of prices. American descriptions have received 1d. per lb., in some instances nearly 3-8 d., and Brazils and Surats 1d. to 1 1/2 per lb.; the ordinary and middling are most effected.—There is an abundant supply at the reduced rates, but the trade purchase sparingly; and there is little speculative inquiry. The market in the whole, closes very languidly, with a tendency to drop still farther. Speculators have taken 3,000 bales, and the entire sales amount to 18,000 bales.

FROM AFRICA.

The Brig Atlantia, at New York, from Monrovia, brings intelligence from that place to the 12th of April. A ship supposed to be the Crawford, late of New York, but more recently a packet between Havana and Cadiz, was fallen in with by H. R. M. Brig Porro, in the act of taking negroes on board. An attempt was made by the brig's boats to board her, but the British were beaten off. The Crawford then took in her cargo of one thousand negroes and proceeded to sea.—When off the harbor she again fell in with the brig, but soon outtailed her and made her escape. An American brig from Havana, in the river Galenas (from having a cargo of slave goods, was suspected of being connected with the slave trade, and was detained by the British and prevented from landing her cargo. The British steamer Henlopen went round to Monrovia and towed the United States ship Decatur up the river to investigate the affair. The officers and crew belonging to the American squadron on the coast were all well.—St. Louis Republican.

"Not a few of our young men have adopted that bad practice of carrying leaden weapons. A few nights ago we saw the handle of a dirk sticking out of a youngster's vest, at the Park theatre. It had worked up, without his knowledge, and there he sat in the boxes, a fair faced boy, among peaceable and well bred people, with a murderous weapon in his possession. We will do him the justice, to say that he blushed, when his eye rested on the dirk handle, and that he put it out of sight as quickly as possible. It is a foolish spirit of bravado that prompts men, especially young men, to carry knives and pistols. Why, it would pain us to feel the weight of a pistol in our pocket. We should not like to be continually reminded that there was even a single man, in this beautiful world, who entertained towards us sentiments so hostile, as to oblige us to go armed for protection. Ah, it is because we cherish angry feelings, that so much violence lives in men's hearts, and finds vent in bloodshed and death."—[N. Y. Times.

The Fakir of Awa.—There is a person in the city—at Washington Hall we believe, who announces his ability to perform the most wonderful feats ever heard of. Among other things he distinctly avows that he will show in his "Mirror of Fate" the resemblance of any person dead or alive, who may be called for. A stranger who may ask to see the fac simile of a dear friend or relative far distant, or long dead, and the request will surely—so the Fakir says—be complied with. The business is, of course managed by trick, and the exhibitor professes to be neither the devil nor one of his disciples; but the professor of a wonderful art, acquired by long study and hard practice. We hardly know what to say of the matter. It must, indeed be a singular study that could impart a power like that alluded to. But then Professor Morse has invented a mode of communication, by which a message might be sent round the globe in a few minutes; and who shall wonder at any thing?

Wife Lost.—We learn from the Albany Evening Journal, that, about four weeks ago, the wife of James Bolt, of Triangle, Broome county, New York, left home in the night, in a state of mental derangement. Her insanity is supposed to have been caused by violent treatment from a man, whose name is withheld, and who threatened to kill her if she should expose his brutal conduct towards her. It is probable that she is dead. All efforts to find her have proved unavailing.

It is recorded that the Mediterranean has been twice frozen over, once A. D. 569—and in A. D. 1234. On both occasions merchants carried goods across it on the ice!!

WILFUL MURDER.

Lieut. Gen. Joseph Smith, and Major Gen. Hyrum Smith, of the Nauvoo Legion, were shot dead, (receiving four balls each), in the County Jail at Carthage, on Thursday afternoon, about half past five o'clock, June 27th, 1844; by an armed mob of from 150 to 250 men, while under the solemn pledge of the State of the State by Gov. Ford, for the protection of their lives! A more violent outrage upon law, life, and liberty, was never known on the globe. Better blood was never shed, and nobler souls never escaped in blood to bliss, to suplicate God to come out of his holy place, and curse this wicked generation! O God, thy will be done.

SCENES AND SIGNS.

The scenes for the past few days, have been very alarming to the safety, and continuance of governmental institutions, and tranquillity calculated to cut the alien cords of public confidence, and individual integrity, as well as the bonds of friendship and brotherly love. The first acts of these scenes are closed, and the signs of peace begin to learn the Government, Officers, and people to reflect and reason. The latter day scenes, like the towering Andes, amid the clouds and wind of a storm, have remained firm and unshaken, resting in constitutional rights and they will wait patiently for his Excellency to show the efficiency of the law, to redeem the fallen faith of the State, and to prevent "further" violence in the infected district. His proclamation offering a reward for the criminals and accessories will show the true greatness of the Government. If he develops his sternness by his party, or his patriotism by a step of "old Hickory," the community will bless him, and many a call will shoulder at the side of Old Bull.

Mississippi.—The River has fallen within the last few days, nearly two feet. Should our rainy season cease, we may expect as soon as the water finds its level, a depression of health. Great care should be taken to keep from unnecessary exposure to the effluvia arising from stagnant water, and other infected places. Health is a lost.

The Editor.—Mr. Taylor, who was wounded by four balls in the horrible assassination of the General Smith, is said to be slowly recovering from his wounds. Should he be able to ride upon a couch in an easy carriage, he may be expected home to day.

What is the reason we do not receive our Mail as usual? For two weeks past we have not received any thing through the Post Office, with the exception of a few newspapers, which are very few, and are sources for news very limited. The public complaint of the detention of the mail, let it be looked into and the evil remedied. Very little mail reaches our Post office.

High Water.—We understand, that the Mississippi opposite St. Louis, has been about 8 feet deep on the American bottom, to the bluffs, a distance of 8 or 9 miles. The inhabitants, have taken refuge on the bluffs, where, as in the days of Noah, they wait the receding of the waters. The following advertisement shows it.

PLEASURE EXCURSION TO THE ILLINOIS BLUFFS.

The very light swift and substantial s.b. NEW HAVEN.

Capt. Hoyer will make a pleasure excursion to the opposite bluffs, leaving the foot of Olive street, to-morrow, at mid-day. A. M., and arriving here at one o'clock P. M. She will remain a sufficient time at the bluffs, to give the passengers (even the most curious) a fine opportunity of seeing the now unprecedented appearance of the beautiful and cultivated prairie of Illinois, over which is now rushing the mighty torrents of the upper floods of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers. An opportunity like the present may be guaranteed as not occurring within the lifetime of the present or future generations. Fare for the trip, $1. For passage apply on board, or to JOHN HART & CO.

Corner of Water and Olive streets.

Congress has adjourned; this is good news, and, besides saving the members' breath and passions, saves the whole country many thousands of dollars. A penny saved on such occasions is mira-bled.

Closing Scenes.—Congress adjourns this day, and we can readily imagine that the closing scenes will be anything but orderly, reputable and satisfactory. After a session of upwards of six months, it may be asked by the people "what has Congress done?" It is possible that many laws, public and private, have been passed, but it will be recollected that most of those laws have been hurried through within the last four or five days of the session, without giving to them that consideration which their merits and objects require. All this hasty and probably inexpedient legislation arises from a want of business tact and a proper system. Nearly a whole month is lost in organizing the House and appointing the officers and committees, all of which could be done in a week at most. The intervening holidays prevent any business being transacted until after the 8th of January—five weeks of the session being devoted to mere preparations of amusements. The great political divisions of the country and the choice of its permanent officers absorb the attention of members, so that the business of the people is disposed of in at least thirty working days; and therefore, if no session extended a longer period than three months, or if that period could be fixed by law or public opinion, much real and substantial good would grow out of it.—[New York Sun.]

A Picture of Glory.—By this time the reserve had penetrated into the town, and was driving from their hiding places in the rear of the enemy whose gallant fire had so annoyed its own on their approach. Unable to make head against their disciplined assistants, the desperate Afghans rushed madly down from the town, distributing themselves over the works, and cutting furiously at every thing in their way, while our troops now assembled within the walls in great numbers, blocking up all escape, hunted them down like so many wild beasts. It was now no longer a struggle, but absolute slaughter. The darkness which had prevailed during the conflict increased the horror of the scene, and being more favorable to the besiegers than the besieged, the latter suffered most severely. Every street was strewn with the mangled bodies of the dying and the dead. One fortified house had held out with desperate valor, and fifty-eight of the Afghans perished in its defence alone. Five hundred and fourteen bodies were picked up within the walls and buried by the British; sixteen hundred became prisoners, and the number of the wounded was probably about the same. One hundred more, it is supposed, were cut up by the cavalry, who scoured the plains in all directions; and for weeks afterwards, dead bodies were found in various parts of the town, in narrow streets, and the recesses of private buildings, mostly those of men who had since died of their wounds; so that the total loss of the Afghans in said was probably little short of a thousand.—Such are the harrowing details of these scenes of glory. [Afghan War.]

A Description of the Person of Jesus Christ.—as was found in an ancient manuscript sent by Hublius Lantulus, President of Judea, to the Senate of Rome.

There lives at this time in Judea, a man of singular character, whose name is Jesus Christ. The barbarians esteem him a prophet, but his followers adore him as the immediate offspring of the immortal God. He is endowed with such unparalleled virtues as to call back the dead from their graves, and to heal every kind of disease with a word or touch. His person is tall and elegantly shaped, his aspect amiable, reverent. His hair flows in those united shades which united colors can match, falling into graceful curls below his ears, agreeably curling on his shoulders, and parting of the crown of his head like the head dress of the Nazarenes. His forehead is smooth and large, his cheek is without spot save that of a lovely red; his nose and mouth are formed with exquisite symmetry; his beard is thick and suitable to the hair of his head, reaching a little below his chin, and parting in the middle like a fork; his eyes are bright, clear, and serene. He rebukes with majesty; counsels with mildness, and invites with the most persuasive language. His whole address, if it be either in word or deed, is elegant, grave, and strictly characteristic of so exalted a Being! No man has seen him laugh; but the whole world beheld him weep frequently; and so persuasive are his tears, that the whole multitude cannot withhold their tears from joining in sympathy with him. He is very modest, temperate and wise. In short, whatever this phenomenon may turn out in the end, he seems at present a man for excellent beauty and divine perfections, every way surpassing the children of men.

American Whaler.—Mr. Grinnell of New Bedford, states the number of vessels employed in whaling to be 650, tonnage 200,000; cost $20,000,000; number of officers and crew 17,200—a fleet larger than ever pursued the business before; commercial history furnishes no account of a parallel. Our Whale ships outnumber those of all other nations combined. They take for their outfit nearly $1,000,000, all of which is composed of American productions, and they return with $7,000,000 a clear addition to them. Although this interest is not directly protected by the tariff of 1842, as sperm and whale oil and whale bone are cheaper in this country than any other, yet it acquires cheerfully in the duty of $1700 on each ship of 350 tons and its outfit, as it tends itself fully compensated by the home market being made so much better, by the protective policy, than it is without it.

Boys Whig.—Suicide.—A man about twenty-six years of age, name unknown, drowned himself at Cincinnati on Wednesday last, in a fit of delirium tremens.

METHOD OF ASCERTAINING THE WEIGHT OF CATTLE WHILE LIVING.

This is of the utmost utility for all those who are experienced judges by the eye, and, by the following direct rules, the weight can be ascertained within a mere trifle. Take a string, cut it round the beast, standing square, just behind the shoulder-blade; measure on a foot rule the feet and inches the animal is in circumference; this is called the girth; then, with the string measure from the bone of the tail which plumbs the line with the hinder part of the buttock, direct the line along the back to the forepart of the shoulder-blade; take the dimensions on the foot rule as before, which is the length and work the figures in the following manner: girth of the bullock, 6 feet 4 inches; length 5 feet 3 inches; which multiplied together, make 34 square superficial feet that again multiplied by 23 (the number of pounds allowed to each superficial foot of all cattle measuring less than seven and more than five feet in girth) makes 713 lbs., and allowing 14 lbs. to the stone, is 50 stone 13 lbs. Where the animal measures less than nine and more than seven feet in girth, 31 is the number of pounds to each superficial foot.

Again, suppose a pig or any small beast should measure two feet in girth and two feet along the back, which multiplied together, makes four square feet; that multiplied by 11 (the number of pounds allowed for each square foot of cattle measuring less than three feet in girth) makes 44 lbs., which divided by 14, brings it to stones, is 3 stone 2 pounds. Again, suppose a calf, sheep, &c., should measure four feet six inches in girth, and three feet six inches in length, which multiplied together, makes sixteen and a half square feet; that multiplied by 16, (the number of pounds allowed to all cattle measuring less than five feet, and more than three in girth) make 264 pounds; which, divided by 14, to bring it into stones is 18 stone 12 pounds. The dimensions of the girth and length of black cattle, sheep, calves, or hogs, may be as exactly taken in this way, as is at all necessary for any computation or valuation of stock, and will answer exactly to the four quarters, sinking the fill, and which every man who can get a bit of chalk may easily perform. A deduction must be made for a half-fatted beast, of one stone in twenty; from that of a fat one, and for a cow that has calves, one stone must be allowed, and another for not being properly fat.—Cattle Keeper's Guide.

Suicide.—Edmund S. Hassler, aged 31, committed suicide at the City Hotel, New York, on Friday, the 14th inst., by shooting himself with a pistol. He was in the employ of the Government, and was a son of the celebrated mathematician. No cause can be assigned for the commission of the act.

DOINGS OF THE CITY COUNCIL.

Special Session.—The council was called to devise ways and means for supplying the city with provisions. Dr. Richards, Col. Duhamel, Marshal Green & others, stated to the council that many were destitute; and that unless active measures were taken, many must suffer with hunger, as some had already; therefore it was Resolved, by the city council of the City of Nauvoo, that special committees be appointed to visit the different sections of the surrounding country and solicit the benevolent for donations, or provisions and means for supplying the wants of the destitute of this city. And so far as donations fail, supply the deficiency by loans.

Resolved, That Charles Patten W. H. Jordan and L. S. Doherty be this committee for Iowa; That D. M. Repsher, A. Morrison and Capt. Ross, go to Madison Burlington and the North country; that Benjamin Clapp, Samuel James, Hiram Clark, visit Ramus, Laharpe and the Eastern country; that Isaac Morley assist the South to carry out the foregoing resolutions.

Resolved, That L. N. Scoville, E. D. Woolly, and Wm. M. Green be a standing committee to negotiate for all necessary supplies to those who are on duty by order of government.

Resolved, that each of said committees keep an accurate account of all donations and loans, and make returns of the same to the Marshall of the city.

Agricultural.

From the Michigan Farmer.

WOOL GROWING.

Mr. Editor:—As this is one of the most important as well as profitable occupations of the farmer, it is with interest that I read frequent publications upon this subject. There are many farmers who do not take interest enough in their own welfare, or the comfort of their own families, to keep sheep on their farms. This is a great error. In Michigan we have many families, that are mostly females, who might manufacture cloth sufficient for their use, and save the expense of purchasing, as to be doing away their time in going from house to house, or in other useless employment.

There is also another error existing among farmers, which you will often hear them express. It is this—that their wool is fine enough for profit, or as profitable as finer wool. Now that coarse woolled sheep are as profitable as fine, is certainly a mistaken idea. It is an indisputable fact, that as a general thing, fine woolled sheep produce more wool in weight, than coarse woolled sheep; and if the fine wool is manufactured with equal weight of thread as the coarse wool, it will be found to wear much longer than garments manufactured from coarse wool.

If it is grown for market, it is as easy to grow wool worth three shillings a pound as that which will not sell at all in the market. Sheep driven from Ohio are not, I believe, as good nor as pure blood as those brought from the Eastern States. There are at this time, 600 sheep owned by Dr. Williams of Waterford, Oakland County, which are of the very best Merino.

I do not agree with the correspondent of the Michigan Farmer, of Feb 15, for I have practiced shearing sheep many years—and I have shorn a good wool in Michigan as I ever did in the Green Mountain State, or the Empire State. No State can surpass Michigan in this business. If the farmer will only take pains, and procure a choice stock of sheep, he can easily compete with any State in the Union—for Michigan produces all kinds of vegetables for the support and health of the sheep, and the climate is well adapted to rearing them with ease and profit.

"THE FARMER OF MOUNT VERNON."

Washington was passionately fond of agriculture. His improvement was ever with him an object of paramount regard. Virginia can boast of few sons to whom her agriculture has been more indebted; few who have assisted in promoting its interests to a greater extent or with the manifestation of a more ardent and patronizing zeal. The following account of his farming operations, will serve to exhibit the Father of his country in his true light. The farm of General Washington at Mount Vernon, contained 10,000 acres of land in one body—equal to about 15 square miles. It was divided into farms of convenient size, at the distance of 2, 3, 4 and 5 miles from his mansion house. These farms he visited every day in pleasant weather, and was constantly engaged in making experiments for the improvement of agriculture. Some idea of the extent of his farming operations may be formed from the following facts: In 1787, he had 500 acres in grass—sowed 600 bushels of oats—700 acres with wheat, and as much more in corn, barley, potatoes, beans, peas, &c., and 150 with turnips. His stock consisted of 140 horses, 112 cows, 235 working oxen, heifers, and steers, and 500 sheep. He constantly employed 250 hands, and kept 24 plows going during the whole year, when the earth and state of the weather would permit. In 1786, he slaughtered 150 hogs, for the use of his family, and provisions for his negroes, for whose comfort he had great regard. —Maine Cultivator.

TRANSFERRING BEES.

Messrs. Editors:—It is with pleasure that I comply with your request in giving a description of an easy mode of transferring bees. I do it any time of the day, although it is best when most bees are abroad. If there are any bees on the outside of the hive, sweep them off with a wing or feather. "Then take it from the stand, and reverse it upon the ground; spread a sheet upon it with a string or hook fastened to it in the centre over the centre of the hive." Then place the empty hive where the old one stood, to receive the returning bees. Then lay a double blanket or carpet, or some thick cloth, so as to make it dark within; the corners are then to be drawn on the top out of the way of the hammer, which is now to be applied, (lightly, but rapid, first upon one side then upon another; they roar loud when the hammering commences, but in less than a minute their noise will abate, when the cloths should be raised by the string two or three inches, which they will immediately answer by their roaring in consequence of having more room; the hammering to be continued; the cloth to be raised slowly; and when it is raised six or eight inches in the centre, it can with perfect safety be raised from one corner of the hive, so as to see the motion and speed of the bees in leaving the combs and running up the cloth. The raising of the cloth must be slow and gentle, governed as much as possible to the accommodation of the bees, in ten minutes time the cloth in the centre should be about two feet from the hive, by which time probably the bees will all be in the cloth; the hammering, however, is to be continued until they have all, or nearly all left the hive, when the top cloth is to be carefully taken off, the sheet raised from the hive by the string or hook and spread open, the bees uppermost; directly in front of the empty hive, the bees will soon take possession of it; guide the queen, if she can be found, and disturb the bees gently with a feather. If there be any bees left in the old hive they will soon leave the combs by blowing into them; sweep them off and put the hive where the bees cannot find it. The bees will work with renewed activity as if they had not been disturbed. —Cult.

WOOL GATHERING MACHINE.

Within a short time past a machine of English invention has been introduced into this country, which is likely to effect important results upon the wool business. The old clothes, (trade) and the home manufacture of cloth. It is a simple and very complete contrivance for re-covering old cloths, blankets, petticoats, stockings, &c. &c., into wool, and the facility, ease and despatch which it performs this operation is truly surprising. The worst-looking, moth-eaten, ragged, patched and unclean things, into the shape of woollen garments, carpets or bed-clothes are passed through the machine and reduced into wool with a speed that almost surpasses belief. The instrument that performs this work is nothing but a large broad wheel, on the circumference of which a multitude of small blunt spikes are fixed like nails in the collar of a tanners dog. The ragged and are drawn towards the wheel, where by the rapid revolution of the latter against their edges, they are soon 'un-done' as rags, and done up into wool. The machine is driven by steam, and performs an incredible amount of labor in a day. —Phil. Ledger.

JERUSALEM AT THE PASS-OVER.

On those days the Roman guards were withdrawn; I ascended the battlements; the concourse, gathered there to look upon the entrance of the tribes, fixed me to the spot.—Of all the strange and magnificent sights of earth, this entrance was the most fitted to swell the national pride of country and religion. The dispersion ordained by Heaven for judgment on the crimes of our idolatrous kings, had, in that wonder working power by which good is brought out of evil, planted our law in the remotest extremities of the world.—Among its proselytes were the the mighty of all regions, the military leaders, the sages, the kings; all, at least once in their lives, coming to pay homage to the great central city of the faith; and all coming with the pomp and attendance of their rank. The procession amounted to a number which threw all after-times into the shade. Three millions of people have been counted at the Passover. The diversities of the multitude were still more striking. Every race of mankind, in its most marked peculiarities, there passed beneath the eye.

There came a long train of swarthy slaves and menials round the chariot of the Indian Prince, clothed in the silks and jewels of the regions beyond the Ganges. Upon them pressed the troops of American lion hunters, half naked, but with their black limbs wreathed with pearl and fragments of unwrought gold. Behind them moved on their camels a patriarchal group, the Arab Shiek, a venerable figure, with his white locks flowing from beneath his turban, leading his sons, like our father Abraham, from the wilderness to the Mount of Vision. Then rolled on the glittering chariot of the Assyrian chieftain, a regal show of purple and gems, and conveyed by horsemen covered with armor. The Scythian Jews, wrapped in the furs of wolf and bear, iron men of the north; the noble Greek, the perfection of the human form, with his countenance beaming with the genius and beauty of his country; the broad and yellow features of the Chinese rabbins; the fair skins and gigantic forms of the German tribes, and strange clusters of men unknown to the limits of Europe or Asia, with their black locks, complexions of the color of gold, and slight, yet sinewy limbs marked with figures of suns and stars struck into the flesh, marched crowd on crowd; and in strong contrast with all, the Italian on the charger or in the chariot, urging the living stream to the right and left, with the haughtiness of the acknowledged master of mankind. The representative world was before me.

But all those distinctive marks of country and pursuit, though palpably ineradicable by human means, were deeply overpowered and mingled by the one grand impression of the place and the time. In their presence was the City of Holiness; the Hill of Zion lifted up its palaces; above it ascended like another city, in a higher region of the air, that Temple to whose majesty the earth could show no equal, to which the eyes of the believer were turned from the uttermost parts of the earth, in whose courts Solomon the king of earthly kings for wisdom, had called down the blessing of the Most

High, and it had descended on the altar of fire, in whose sanctuary the Lord whom heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain, was yet to make his throne, and give glory to his people.

"Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem! when I think of what I saw thee then, and of what I have since seen thee, the spoiled the desolate, the utterly put to shame; when I have seen the Roman plough driven through the soil on which stood the Holy of Holiness; the Saracen destroying even its ruins; the last, worst devastator, the barbarian of the Caucasus, the ruffian Turk, sitting in grim scorn upon the towers of the city of David; violating the tombs of the prophets and the king; turning up the plunder of the soil, every atom of whose dust, was sacred to the broken people of Israel; trampling on the savage cruelty, and the deeper torture of infidel insult, my countrymen that lingered among its walls only that they might seek a grave in the ashes of the mighty—I have felt my spirit uproused and maddened within me. I have made impious wishes.—I have longed for the lightning to blast the tyrant.—Crosby's Salathiel.

The Frankfort Gazette contains a letter from the frontiers of Russia dated Dec. 16, which says:—"The Ukase, ordering the removal of the Jews from the frontier districts into the interior, is at this moment being carried into effect. Nearly 100,000 persons are affected by this measure."

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPHOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERRMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER, This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12th cents), brings it within the reach of every person in the community.

POETRY.

The following beautiful STanzas, are taken from Wilson's No. 10, 1844. We shall meet with Poetry so deserving of the name.

A DIBGE.

Weep not for her! Oh she was too fair,
Too pure to dwell on this guilt tainted earth;
The sweetest of glories, and the golden air
Of Zion, seemed to claim her from her birth:
A spirit wander'd from its native zone,
Which, soon descending took her from its own;

Weep not for her!—Hesperus was like the sky,
Whose thousand stars, thine beautiful and bright;
Like flowers, that know not what it is to die;
Like long-limbed, slender months of polar light;

Like music floating o'er a waveless lake,
While echo answers from the flowery brake;
Weep not for her!

Weep not for her! She died in early youth,
Ere hope had lost its rich, romantic hues;
When human bosoms seem'd the homes of truth,
And earth still gleam'd with beauty's radiant dews.

Her summer prime waned not to days that flee;
Her wine of life was not run to the lees;
Weep not for her!

Weep not for her! By that or slow decay,
It never giv'd her bosom's care to mark
The playmates of her childhood wane away;
Her prospects wither, or her hopes grow dark.

Transcend by her God, with spirit shiv'ring,
She pass'd as 'twere in suits from earth to heaven;
Weep not for her!

Weep not for her! It was not hers to feel
The miseries that corrode our ageing years,
Against dreams of bliss'd bliss the heart to steel,
To wander, and down-lead the vale of tears.

As while the withered leaves from Friendship's tree,
And on earth's wintry world alone to be;
Weep not for her!

Weep not for her! She is an Angel now,
And dwells the asph'ring floors of Paradise;
All sadness wiped from her refulgent brow,
Sin, sorrow, suffering, banished from her eyes.

Victorious over death, to life appear
The vista'd joys of heaven's eternal year;
Weep not for her!

Weep not for her! Her memory is the shrine
Of pleasant thoughts, soft as the scent of flowers,
Calm as on wand'ring eve the sun's decline,
Sweet as the song of birds among the bowers.

Rich as a rainbow with its hues of light,
Pure as the moonshine of an autumnal night;
Weep not for her!

Weep not for her! There is no cause for woe;
But rather nerve the spirit, that it walk
Forthrightly over the thorn's path below,
And from earth's low dell means keep them back.

So, when a few brief sojourn years have flown,
She'll meet thee at Her own gate—and lead Thee on;

Weep not for her.

A Gem—We think the following towns as pure as lustre, and as sparkling with as delicate and exquisite a grace, as any thing ever brought from the exhaustless diamond mine of Ireland's Bard. It glisters through the soul like a sudden flash of sunlight across the eye.

TO A LADY.

O, could we do with this world of ours,
As thou dost with thy garden bowers,
Reject the weeds and keep the flowers,
What a heaven on earth we'd make it!

So bright a dwelling should be our own,
So warranted free from sigh or frown,
Thy angelic smile would be coming down,
By the week or month to take it.

Like those gay daisies that wing through air,
And in themselves a lustre bear,
A stock of light still ready there,
Whenever they wish to use it;

So, in this world I'd make for thee,
Our hearts should all the fire be,
And the flash of wit or poetry
Break forth whenever we choose.

While every joy that gladdens our sphere,
Hath all some shadow hovering near,
In this new world of ours, my dear,
Such shadows will be the omitted—

Unless they're like that graceful one,
Which, when thou'rt dancing in the sun,
Still near thee, leaves a charm upon
Each spot where upthrust!

CONGRESSIONAL.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mormons.—Mr. Wentworth asked permission to present a memorial from Gen. Joseph Smith, the head of the Mormons, and required that it might be read by the clerk for the information of the House.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the memorial.

Before the reading was concluded, Mr. J. R. Ingersoll interposed, and objected to any further reading of the paper. He had objected to the reception at first, and still objected.

Mr. Weller observed that if memorials of this kind were to be read, he was entrusted with the presentation of one of a peculiar character from certain citizens of Frederick county, Md.

Mr. Wentworth said he would move a suspension of the rules, to enable him to have the paper read; and he wished to enquire of the chair whether it would be in order for him to assign his reasons for making such a motion.

Mr. Duran observed, if the gentleman would yield him the floor, he would move to suspend the rules, to go into committee of the whole on the Oregon bill.

Mr. Wentworth said that, as he had the floor, he would make the motion. Mr. W. then moved that the rules be suspended, for the purpose of going into committee of the whole on the Oregon bill.

The Speaker said that the question would be put on suspending the rules to go into committee of the whole. If that motion prevailed, the gentleman could move to take up any bill he pleased.

Mr. Vance called for the yeas and nays on the question; which were ordered.

Mr. McKay inquired if the House should refuse to go into committee of the whole, if it could, by postponement of the previous orders; take up the naval appropriation bill which had been reported from the committee of the whole.

The Speaker said a motion to that effect would require a vote of two-thirds. The question was put on suspending the rules and rejected—yeas 70, nays 66.

PRESIDENT TYLER'S LETTER
Washington June 10, 1844.

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

The treaty negotiated by the Executive with the Republic of Texas, without a departure from any form of proceeding customarily observed in the negotiation of treaties, for the annexation of that Republic to the United States, having been rejected by the Senate, and the subject having excited on the part of the people no ordinary degree of interest, I feel it to be my duty to communicate, for your consideration, the rejected treaty, together with all the correspondence and documents which have heretofore been submitted to the Senate in its Executive sessions. The papers communicated embrace not only the series already made public by orders of the Senate, but others from which the veil of secrecy has not been removed by that body, but which I deem to be essential to a just appreciation of the entire question.—While the treaty was pending before the Senate, I did not consider it compatible with the just rights of that body, or consistent with the just rights of that body, or consistent with the respect entertained for it, to bring this important subject before you. The power of Congress is, however, fully competent, in some other form of proceeding, to accomplish everything that a formal ratification of the treaty could have accomplished; and I therefore feel that I should not imperfectly discharge my duty to yourselves or to the country, if I failed to lay before you every thing in the possession of the Executive which would enable you to act with full light on the subject, if you should deem it proper to take any action upon it.

I regard the question involved in these proceedings as one of vast magnitude, and as addressing itself to interests of an elevated and enduring character. A Republic contumacious in territory with our own—of immense resources, which require only to be brought under the influence of our confederate and free system in order to be fully developed—promising at no distant day, through the fertility of its soil, nearly, if not entirely, to duplicate the exports of the country, thereby making an addition to the carrying trade to an amount almost incalculable, and giving a new impulse of immense importance to the commercial, manufacturing, agricultural, and shipping interests of the Union, and at the same time affording protection to an exposed frontier, and placing the whole country in a condition of security and repose—a territory settled mostly by emigrants from the United States who will bring back with them in the act of reciprocation an unconquerable love of freedom, and an ardent attachment to our free institutions: such a question could not fail to interest most deeply in its success those who under the Constitution have become responsible for the faithful administration of public affairs. I have regarded it as not a little fortunate that the question involved was no way sectional or local, but addressed itself to the interests of every part of the country, and made its appeal to the glory of the American name.

It is due to the occasion to say that I have carefully reconsidered the objections which have been urged to immediate action upon the subject without in any degree having been struck with their force. It has been objected that the measure of annexation should be preceded by the consent of Mexico. To preserve the most friendly relations with Mexico; to concede with her not grudgingly but freely all her rights; to negotiate fairly and frankly with her as to the question of boundary; to render her, in a word the fullest and most ample recompenses for any loss she might conceive us she had sustained, fully accords with the feelings and views the Executive has always entertained. But negotiations in advance of annexation would prove not only abortive, but might be regarded as offensive to Mexico, and insulting to Texas.—Mexico would not, I am persuaded, give ear for a moment to an attempt at negotiation in advance, except for the whole territory of Texas. While all the world besides regards Texas as an independent power, Mexico chooses to look upon her as a revolted Province. Nor could we negotiate with Mexico for Texas without admitting that our recognition of her independence was fraudulent, delusive, or void. It is only after acquiring Texas that the question of boundary can arise between the United States and Mexico, a question purposely left open for negotiation with Mexico as affording the best opportunity for the most friendly and pacific arrangements. The Executive has dealt with Texas as a Power independent of all others, both de facto and de jure. She was an independent State of the confederation of Mexican Republics. When, by violent revolution, Mexico declared the Confederation at an end, Texas owed her no longer allegiance, but claimed, and has maintained the right for eight years, to a separate and distinct position. During that period no army has invaded her with a view to her re-conquest, and if she has not yet established her right to be treated as a nation independent de facto and de jure, it would be difficult to say at what period she will attain to that condition.

Nor can we, by any fair or any legitimate interference, be accused of violating any treaty stipulations with Mexico.—The treaties with Mexico give no guaranty of any sort, and are co-existent with a similar treaty with Texas. So have we treaties with most of the nations of the earth, which are equally as much violated by the annexation of Texas to the United States, as would be our treaty with Mexico. The treaty is merely commercial, and intended as the instrument for more actually defining the rights and securing the interests of the citizens of each country. When bad faith can be implied or charged upon the government of the United States for successfully negotiating with an independent power upon any subject not violating the stipulations of such treaty, I confess my inability to discern.

The objections which have been taken to the enlargement of our territory, were urged with much zeal against the acquisition of Louisiana, and yet the utility of such has long since been fully demonstrated. Since that period, a new power has been introduced into the affairs of the world, which has, for all practical purposes, brought Texas much nearer the seat of government than Louisiana was at the time of its annexation. Distant regions are, by the application of the steam engine, brought within a close proximity.

With the views which I entertain on the subject, I should prove faithless to the high trust which the constitution has devolved upon me, if I neglected to invite the attention of the representatives of the people to it at the earliest moment that a due respect for the Senate would allow me so to do. I should find, in the urgency of the matter, a sufficient apology, if one was wanting, since annexation is to encounter a gentler and not certain hazard of final defeat, if something be not now done to prevent it. Upon this point, I cannot too impressively invite your attention to my message of the 16th May, and to the documents which accompany it, which have not heretofore been made public. If it be objected that the names of the writers of some of the private letters are withheld, all I can say is, that is done for reasons regarded as altogether adequate, and that the writers are persons of the first respectability, and citizens of Texas, and have such means of obtaining information as to entitle their sentiments to full credit. Nor has any thing occurred to weaken, but on the contrary, much to confirm my confidence in the statements of Gen. Jackson, and my own statement made at the close of that message, in the belief, amounting almost to certainty, "that instructions have already been given by the Texian Government to propose to the Government of Great Britain, forthwith, on the failure (of the treaty) to enter into a treaty of commerce, and an alliance, offensive and defensive."

I also particularly invite your attention to the letter from Mr. Everett, our Envoy at London, containing an account of a conversation in the House of Lords which lately occurred between Lord Brougham and Lord Aberdeen in relation to the question of annexation. Nor can I do so without the expression of some surprise at the language the Minister of Foreign Affairs employed upon the occasion. That a kingdom which is made what it now is by repeated acts of annexation, beginning from the time of the Heptarchy and concluding with the annexation of the kingdoms of Ireland and Scotland, should perceive any principle, either novel or serious, in the late proceedings of the American Executive in regard to Texas, is well calculated to excite surprise. If it be pretended that, because of commercial or political relations which may exist between two countries, neither has a right to part with its sovereignty, and that no third Power can change these relations by a voluntary treaty of union or annexation, then it would seem to follow that an annexation to be achieved by force of arms in the prosecution of a just and necessary war could in no way be justified; and yet it is presumed that Great Britain would be the last nation in the world to maintain any such doctrine. The commercial and political relations of many of the countries of Europe have undergone repeated changes by voluntary treaties, by conquest, and by partitions of the territories, without any question as to the right, under the public law. The question in this view of it, can be considered as neither serious nor novel.

I will not permit myself to believe that the British Minister designed to bring himself to any such conclusion; but it is impossible for us to be blind to the fact that the statements contained in Mr. Everett's despatch are well worthy of serious consideration. The Government and People of the United States have never evinced, nor do they feel any desire to interfere in public questions not affecting the relations existing between the States of the American Confederation.

The United States claim a similar exemption from any such interference on their part. The treaty with Texas was negotiated from considerations of a high public policy, influencing the conduct of the Republics. We have treated with Texas as an independent power, solely with a view of bettering the condition of the two countries. If annexation in any form occur, it will rise from the free and unfettered action of the people of the two countries; and it seems altogether becoming in the treaty that the honor of the country, the dignity of the American name, and the permanent interest of the United States would forbid acquiescence in any such interference. No one can more highly appreciate the value of peace to both Great Britain and the United States, and the capacity of each to do injury to the other, than myself; but peace can best be preserved by maintaining firmly the rights which belong to us as an independent community.

So much I have considered it proper for me to say, and it becomes me only to add, that while I have regarded the annexation to be accomplished by treaty as the most suitable form in which it could be effected, should Congress deem it proper to resort to any other expedient compatible with the constitution, and likely to accomplish this object, I stand prepared to yield my most prompt and active co-operation.

The great question is not as to the manner in which it shall be done, but whether it shall be accomplished or not. The responsibility of deciding this question is now devolved upon you.

JOHN TYLER.

All the mails in the north-western part of this State are stopped; and will so remain until the waters fall and bridges are erected over the several water courses. The communication with the south-west, is cut off from the same cause.—Mo. Rep.

Accident and Loss of Life.—The steamer Palestine from Pittsburgh, arrived here last evening, and by her officers we are informed of the following particulars of an accident which happened to her, which occasioned the loss of a number of lives.

About three o'clock on Wednesday morning, when the boat was about fifteen miles above Cairo, fire was discovered in the hold by the engineer, and immediately the alarm was given, and at once the utmost confusion prevailed. The captain immediately directed the pilot to run her to the shore, while the mate, as-isted by the passengers, entered the hold, and in a short time succeeded in extinguishing the flames. In the mean time, and before the boat had got near the shore, a number of the deck passengers crowded into the yawl, which was swung up at the stern, cut the rope by which the bow was suspended, and the whole were suspended, and the whole were precipitated into the river. The following are the names of those who are missing: Charles Herrington, J. Arbogast, Snodgrass, Smith, Mr. Horn and lady, (who got on at Louisville),—Moore, G. W. Stevens, and—Hobson; also three firemen and a cook, names not known. The fire was occasioned by the accidental ignition of a quantity of acids which were taken on board at Evansville, the contents of which were not known to the officers, and the boxes which contained them were not marked. Very little injury was sustained by the boat or cargo.

The passengers concur in bestowing upon Captain Hough and his officers, the highest praise for cool, prompt, and vigorous exertions to which, assisted as they were by a number of the passengers, may be ascribed the safety of the lives of the large number of helpless persons entrusted for the time to their care. Those who were unhappily lost, were warned of their danger by some of the passengers; and the captain was not aware of their being lost, until the boat had reached the shore, when he immediately started back if possible to save them, but without the least success. [Mo. Reporter.]

From the Mountains.—Six Mackinaw boats, belonging to the trading company of Pratte & Cabaner, arrived here yesterday from Fort Platte, on the North Fork of Platte river, which place they left on the 28th of April.

They brought down seventy-eight packages of Buffalo robes and two and half packs Beaver, under the charge of Mr. Seville. One boat was sunk on the 14th May, by which accident several packs of robes were lost.

About twelve days ago, (being weather bound at a Pawnee village,) a large body, some two or three thousand Pawnees, came to the boats, apparently in a friendly manner, but soon sought a quarrel with some of the traders, and immediately began to plunder the boats, under the plea they were in a starving condition, and wanted food.

They carried off all the provisions, utensils, arms and ammunition they could find, leaving the travellers almost in a destitute condition. No personal violence was committed on the traders, they being too weak to offer any resistance to the plunderers.

The winter is said to have been mild, and until a few days before they left the Fort very little snow had fallen. The Platte river was low. The hunters had brought more Buffalo robes into the Fort than at any previous season.

Some poor editor, in a desperate fit of the blues, having probably got the "mit-ton" from his lady love, thus apostrophizes:

"The path of an editor is not over thickly planted with roses. In the silence of the night, when men forget their five or bathe their spirits in the rosy bliss of dreams, when care has forgotten to tug at the heart, and ambition to fire the brain—he sleeps not, he dreams not. By the dim lamp he wanders through the fields of thought, or by the shore of the sea of knowledge, gathering pebbles wherewith to build his feeble fabric. Often is he misunderstood, taunted, mocked, disappointed.—Often does icy neglect freeze his glowing thoughts and nip his young hopes. The careless sneer, the crushing insinuation, the covert slander, the open denunciation—all want to feast upon him."

Juvenile Burglar.—The Pittsburgh Age of Monday has the following: "At about three o'clock on Saturday morning the drug store of Messrs Fess & Cassell was entered through the front cellar, and robbed of a bundle of pocket wallets, two pocket-knives, and $3.85 in money. The persons sleeping in the room above, on entering it, candle in hand, called the 'watch' when officer Baldwin came to the door and secured a young lad of 18 or 19 named Alexander Rorick, who had in his possession a revolving pistol, three barrels loaded, matches, powder for blasting axes, (and the prospects of their owners,) a shock-knife, &c., without resistance."

On examining him afterwards, at the mayor's office, a watch found on him was recognized as the same which was taken with the revolver, from the store of Mr. Robt Knox, a few days before. He acknowledged robbing the store of Lease and Brown, on Liberty street. Among his available funds was an Indiana note of $5, which he said he had won at cards. During the day the young burglar was committed for further examination on Monday.

The Army of France.—Professor Durbin, in his work on Europe, states that

Louis Philippe maintains a standing army of 400,000 men fully officered and equipped, and takes every precaution to ensure its fidelity to his family. His eldest son, the Duke de Nemours, who becomes Regent on the death of the King, serves in the army in person; in Algeria. Yet, notwithstanding all his precautions, Louis Philippe is distrustful of the army, and thinks it could not be relied upon in the hour of trial. There are now in the capital 60,000 troops, and many more in the immediate neighbourhood. The different corps are transferred from one post to another, within and without the city, not remaining longer than ten days at any one station—in order to prevent the formation of conspiracies among them. Europe would not permit Louis Philippe to maintain such an army, did she not believe it necessary to the safety of his government. The next revolution in France, says Professor D., will result in a Republic without a throne, a signal for a general war, in which France must stand against Europe, or have the foot of another monarch placed upon her neck by foreign bayonets. This last, the Professor thinks will probably be the result.

The Pickpockets and thieves in New York, have adopted a new theatre for their operations. The Courier and Enquirer says:

Theft at Church.—Several instances have occurred within a few weeks past in which gentlemen have had their pockets picked while leaving St. Thomas's church after service. A gentleman not long ago lost a large sum of money in this way, and two others within a month have suffered in the same way. Yesterday morning a foreign-looking gentleman passing out at the large centre gate, and carrying his hat in his hand, picked the pocket of a well known physician in the city, Dr. Van Rensselaer. It is to be presumed that the case of instruments which he carried off as his prize can be of no service to him, unless he be one of the faculty, and he is therefore requested to return it to the owner, at 821 Broadway, or to leave it for him at the Park Post office. Gentlemen should be on their guard against these church-going scoundrels.

Explosion of the Cleveland.—The steamer Cleveland, on her upward passage from Cleveland, on her way up one of the flues of her middle boiler, on Friday evening about 6 or 7 o'clock, at the foot of the Trap, thirteen miles below Pittsburgh, when landing to take a keel boat in tow.

The great volume of steam passed astern, clearing everything from between decks, blowing away the cook house, and blowing overboard and seriously scalding the first cook, slightly scalding the second cook, blowing the engineer overboard and dangerously scalding him, and slightly injuring some three or four others.

Some five or six persons, who were blown overboard, or jumped off the boat in the excitement, were picked up by the yawl, and the steamer Bridgewater, Capt. Campbell, just astern, came to her assistance, and towed her ashore.

But two passengers are injured.—Mr. Kellor, of New Castle, was blown overboard and picked up somewhat scalded, and his face severely bruised; a son of Mr. Woods was also slightly scalded.

Mr. Chas. McGinnis, the engineer was brought to our city on the same night. We learn that great hopes are entertained of Mr. McGinnis' recovery.

A Swindler.—The Pittsburgh Age advertises Simon Barnum as a pretty extensive swindler in that city. He had purchased produce at low prices; got advances upon them, was discovered, and ran away. It is supposed he will annex himself to Texas.

Most Melancholy.—The Franklin (Vt) Messenger says that on Monday morning, 10th inst., it was discovered that Simon Lockey, an insane person, and his son Silas, living in the eastern part of the town, were missing, and on searching a pond near by, their bodies were found. It is supposed that the father had determined on destroying his life, and the son attempting to prevent it lost his own.

Another case of Abduction.—The Philadelphia Times says, that a young and interesting girl, of seventeen, was lured from her home on Sunday week by a scamp, who called himself Mitchell; they remained away till Friday afternoon, when they returned and stopped at the tavern in Third street. The gentleman then left his victim, after having written a note to her parents informing them where she could be found.

Influenza.—The Cincinnati Commercial, of the 20th inst., says that there has been several cases of influenza in that city of late. The disease is similar to that which swept over the country last season.

SENTENCE ON THE TRAVERSERS.

Daniel O'Connell—To be imprisoned for twelve calendar months, to pay a fine of $2000, and to enter into securities to keep the peace for seven years—himself in $5000, and two sureties of $2500 each.

John O'Connell, John Gray, T. Steele, T. Barrett, C. G. Duffy, and T. M. Ray; to be imprisoned for nine calendar months, to pay a fine of $500, and to enter into securities to keep the peace for seven years—themselves respectively in $1000, and two sureties of $500 each.

Sentence having been passed, Mr. O'Connell immediately rose, and said that he wished to remind the Court, that he had made a solemn affidavit, declaring that he had never entered into a conspiracy with the other traversers, or committed the crime with which he was charged. He had now only to say it was his painful conviction that justice had not been done.

A sudden and vociferous cheer from nearly all parts of the Court followed this remark: and although it was accompanied by the clapping of hands amongst the junior bar, and was two or three times repeated, the judges did not interfere, although evidently displeased.

The traversers immediately surrendered into the custody of the Sheriff.

After a delay of about an hour and a half, which gave time to allay the excited feelings of the people out of court, as well as for the necessary preparations, the traversers were conveyed to the Richmond Penitentiary, in the direction road, their future place of confinement. They proceeded thither in three carriages, attended by a large body of police.

A great many people ran along and kept up with the carriages, and there was also a large assemblage outside the Penitentiary on their arrival. When Mr. O'Connell stepped out of the carriage he was greeted with loud cheers, and immediately entered the gateway. Within the court yard, a large number of respectable persons, many of them his own intimate friends, were drawn up in two lines. They received Mr. O'Connell in silence and uncovered, and as he walked up between the lines, he shook hands with many of them; his bearing was manly and undoubted. He thus entered the Governor's House, which, we understand, he and his other fellow prisoners will be allowed to occupy. The Penitentiary is a vast pile of building, in an airy and salubrious part of the suburbs of Dublin. The Governor's house is large, and has a garden attached, in which Mr. O'Connell, with his daughters, Mrs. Fitzsimon and Mrs. French, walked alone soon after his arrival. The prisoners, as they must now be called, dined together about half past six. They were all cheerful. We are happy to state that there was not the slightest breach of the peace during the proceedings. The following address, which had been issued on Thursday, was read on Friday:

Address of O'Connell to the People of Ireland.

PEACE AND QUIET.

People of Ireland—Fellow-Countrymen—

Beloved Fellow-Countrymen—

The sentence is passed. But there is another appeal from that sentence. The appeal lies to the House of Lords. I solemnly pledge myself to bring an appeal against that sentence, and I assure you that there is every prospect it will be received. Peace then, and quiet. Let there not be one particle of riot, tumult, or violence. This is the crisis in which it will be shown whether the people of Ireland will obey me or not. Any person who violates the law, or is guilty of any violence, insult, or injury to person or property, violates my command, and shows himself an enemy to me, and a bitter enemy to Ireland.

The people of Ireland—the sober, steady, honest, religious people of Ireland—have hitherto obeyed my commands and kept quiet. Let every man stay at home. Let the women and children stay at home. Do not crowd the streets, and in particular let no man approach the precincts of the Four Courts.

Now, people of Dublin, and people of Ireland generally, I shall know, and the world will know, whether you love and respect me or not. Show your love and respect for me, by your obedience to the law—your peaceful conduct, and the total avoidance of any riot or violence.

PEACE, ORDER, QUIET, TRANQUILITY.

Preserve the peace, and the Repeal cause will be necessarily triumphant. Peace and quiet I ask for in my name, and as you regard me, peace and quiet I ask for in the name of Ireland, and as you love your native land. Peace—quiet—order, I call for under the solemn sanction of religion. I conjure you to observe quiet, and I ask it in the adorable name of the ever living God. Graciously me and your friends by your being quiet and peaceable.

The enemies of Ireland would be delighted at any violation of the peace, or being guilty of any disorder.

Disappoint them—graciously and delight by peace, order, and quiet.

Your faithful friend,

DANIEL O'CONNELL.

The determination of Mexico.—The N. Y. Commercial of the evening of the 22d, contains the following information, which may be regarded as of an official character:

The Spanish journal published in this city—the "Noticiero de Ambos Mundos"—of this morning, gives the text of a despatch from Senor Bocanegra, the Mexican Foreign Minister, to General Almonte, which reached the latter gentleman on Thursday, by way of Havana. This despatch was forwarded after the arrival of Mr. G. L. Thompson at the city of Mexico, on his mission from the Government of the United States; and was forwarded by way of Havana, expressly to meet and contradict any rumors that might be set afloat in this country, of willingness on the part of Mexico to assent to the annexation of Texas.

Senor Bocanegra informs General Almonte, in the most emphatic terms, that Mexico will never assent to the annexation of Texas; that the government and the nation are immovably determined to resist the project and reject all proposals for its consummation, whether accompanied or not by offers of compensation. And Gen. Almonte is authorized and instructed to contradict, in the most formal manner, any assertion or intimation of a different character.

The despatch is dated May 30. The "Noticiero" announces the arrival in this city of Don Jose Gonzalez de la Vega, bearer of despatches to General Almonte, containing full instructions of the object of Mr. Thompson's mission.

France against Annexation and Extension of Slavery.—The French Government, through the minister, Guizot, have declared in the Chamber of Deputies against the annexation of Texas, chiefly on the ground of the slavery positions of Mr. Calhoun, as Secretary of State. The Journal des Debats thus reproves the language held by our official on the questions of negro slavery. It says:

"We believe that France has no occasion to occupy itself about the annexation of Texas to the North American confederation. It is not under that point of view that we regard these papers, but it is, that in our opinion a country which, like France, has taken so glorious a part in the abolition of slavery, should energetically condemn the language openly held by the Government of the United States. We have before us the correspondence exchanged between Mr. Upsher, Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Everett, and Mr. Packenham, and all the notes written on the part of the United States are, from beginning to end, not only an apology, but an audacious justification of the principle of slavery; while nearly all the rest of the Christian world is making immense sacrifices to deliver society from this hideous leprosy that has so long disfigured it, the United States alone defend it in language of the most revolting nature. These are the terms in which republican and democratic governments understand humanity, equality, and liberty."

MOST HORRID.

The Baltimore Argus contains a private letter from Constantinople, dated March 26, 1844, in which is enclosed a translation of a letter from the Bishop of Scopia to the Greek Patriarch at Constantinople, giving an account of the outrages on a christian sect on the borders of Bulgaria by the Albanians. The letter says:

"The men they have tied to the columns and have committed upon the women and daughters acts the most atrocious; after this they hung up the men, with their heads downwards and forced their wives to stifle them with smoke from straw burned under them. They have violated old women of eighty years, and young girls of ten. They have pierced the boys through with their lances and roasted them like sheep, saying to them: 'You, in the time of Chiz Pacha, would not prepare mutton for us to eat; see, now, in recompense, we roast you, and now you call on Chiz Pacha to help you.' They tore off the clothes of the girls and compelled them to remain on foot all naked, and to serve them with wine all night. They dishonored the married women before their husbands, whom they obliged to hold torches in their hands. Oh! heaven and earth! how suffer you such wickedness to be done, without shame and without fear, by the impious Albanians!"

A New Tax in Russia.—The Emperor of Russia has established an absentee tax, by ukase, of 200 rubles a year. No Russian is to have a passport to travel till he be twenty-five years of age. Letters from Paris state that the new tax has frightened home numbers of Russians. For a family of three, who pass a year away from Russia, the absentee tax amounts to about £240.

The Western Belle brought down a portion of the Santa Fe company, some five or six in number; also some furs and skins belonging to them. The main body of the caravan are still encamped on the south side of Walnut Creek, about 250 or 300 miles from Independence, where they have been for some time, waiting a fall of the water courses. They have been enabled to get two or three small wagons into the settlements on the Missouri, and some fifteen or twenty persons in all belonging to the expedition have arrived in this city.—Era

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1844.

Mr. Taylor is recovering as fast as can be expected. His wounds do very well.

The senior Editor of this Paper Mr. Taylor, at the horrible assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in Carthage jail, on the afternoon of the 27th day of June, received three wounds in his left thigh and knee and one in his left wrist; besides which, a fifth ball, spent its force against his Watch in his left vest pocket. This ball, but for the timely interference of this valuable watch, must have caused instant death, as it would have passed directly into his lights. This watch, though dreadfully shattered, is a friend that points to the very moment, when he stood between life and death; the hands pointing to "5 o'clock, 10 minutes and 26 seconds."

While upon this subject, Mr. Taylor and his friends, wish, through this channel, to tender their thanks to Mr. Hamilton and family, and to all who assisted him in any manner, during his stay at Carthage, while unable to be removed to his own home. Kindness, assistance, and the tender offices of humanity in such times of deep distress, give the noble mind a chance to appreciate help when it is needed, and to remember such friends in future. Nor should the assistance rendered to lay out the bodies of Messrs. Smith, preparatory to their removal to Nauvoo, be forgotten. Though the people of Carthage under the excitement of the moment, generally fled, yet those who did stay, did all they could to forward the bodies, as well as to make me as comfortable as the circumstances the case would permit.

One thing further; In this awful tragedy, Dr. Willard Richards, equally exposed to the "shower of bullets" which were fired into the room at the door and windows, escaped unhurt, and while he would render thanksgiving and praise to his God for this signal preservation of his life, he would also return his grateful acknowledgements to the Messrs. Hamilton and others who rendered all the assistance in their power in this awful hour of murder and woe at Carthage.

"THE PROPHET."

A well disposed Newspaper, called the "Prophet" was started in New York, in the month of May last. The ruptures of our neighbors, and the murder of our best friends, have prevented us from giving our readers timely notice. It is published by a Society for the promotion of "truth" and we must say, that in a city so large as New York, if the people have virtue, holiness, and the kindred spirits which have ever won the affection of humanity, they will sustain the Prophet liberally. Nor should the country be less magnanimous; by comparing opinions, and proving contraries, truth manifests itself. Error and truth, can never be built into a fabric, upon the same rock. Oil and water never mix; for the sacred injunction of heaven is, "hurt not the oil and the wine."

The Philadelphia Riots.—The accounts of these melancholy outrages have excited great attention and astonishment in England and Ireland. The journals trace the source of these evils to the Government itself, and express forebodings that Republican America is soon to become a general theatre for turmoil and commotion of which the Philadelphia riots are but the precursors. The Liverpool Mail remarks:

"The government of America is impotent for good or evil. It is merely a finger-post which the traveller ridicules or thinks not of. He does not proceed on his way because it points out his course, but because it is his business to go that way. The President has no more power than the finger-post, and is not a whit more respected. And the laws, what are they? They are treated with equal contempt."

FROM THE GOVERNOR.

Late in the evening, of Friday last, we received the following reply from Gov. Ford to the "Warsaw Committee of safety." There could no satisfaction arise to us by publishing the Warsaw communication, and we therefore omit it. We are pleased with the course the Governor takes, and the responsibility he assumes to execute justice according to law. Should he carry his plans through, as "strictly legal," as he has purposed and promised in this document, his present friends and those he wins by doing right, may long value the man for his impartiality and correctness.

Quincy July 3, 1844.

Gentlemen: I have received your communication on behalf of the citizens of Warsaw, stating their unalterable determination to compel the Mormons of your county to leave the State; or otherwise to abandon their own homes, and evacuate the county, and asking my interference and influence to assist you, in procuring the removal of the Mormons.

I have no reply whatever to make to that part of your letter which treats of the history, character, and offences of the Mormons. I deem this, however, a fit occasion to remark somewhat upon the character of the events which have just transpired. These events present reasons for my determination which must be noticed.

When I came to your county I announced the policy by which I intended to be governed. The law was to be my guide; and this you well understand. I announced this determination in numerous public addresses, and uniformly in my private conversations. I successfully obtained a vote to sustain me in this course from every troop stationed at Carthage, or who was visiting there. From the detachment of your town and vicinity, who visited Carthage the day before the surrender of the Smiths, I obtained a similar pledge. I met them on the prairie, before they arrived in town, and as they most testily, stated to them at length the reasons which ought to influence them to keep the peace, and abide the operation of the laws. They gave every demonstration of satisfaction, and signed with unanimous acclamation that they would stand by me in taking a strictly legal course.

All the other portion of the Hancock forces under my command were repeatedly and deeply pledged to sustain me in the same course. Under the firm and confident assurance of support thus obtained, I demanded the surrender of the Smiths, and promised them security. In doing so, I now acknowledge that I erred and erred grievously, in relying with too much confidence upon men with whom I was but little acquainted. The idea that men could be treacherous under such circumstances was abhorrent to my nature, and rejected with indignation. Whatever your hatred of the Smiths might be, I was too confident you would respect your honor—the honor of your country and State, and the rights of defenceless prisoners. I could not believe that so much stupidity and baseness, as was necessary for such an enterprise as the murder of defenceless prisoners in jail would be, could be mustered in Hancock county. What aggravates the transaction, as a matter personal to myself, is that you betrayed my honor as well as your own, and that of the State; and you selected a time to commit the deed when you believed I was in Nauvoo, in the power of the Mormons, and would most probably be murdered by them, by way of retaliation. Upon the whole I cannot too strongly express my indignation and abhorrence of the base and profligate act which has disgraced the state, and raised suspicions in the minds of many in regard to my conduct in the matter of the most painful character to my feelings.

I am happy, however, to learn that these denunciations apply only to a small portion of the people of Warsaw and Hancock county. All the most respectable individuals ought to be acquitted of any direct participation with the conspirators. If they are culpable at all it is for not using their influence against the act, and for not communicating to me information which would have enabled me to prevent it. The intention of the people must to some extent have been whispered about and understood, and ought to have been communicated to me as commander in chief.

Under these circumstances, I am in but a poor situation to use influence with the Mormons, to procure their removal. Your own people have destroyed whatever influence I might otherwise have possessed in that quarter to serve you. Your own conduct has placed me in a painfully suspicious attitude; and I have no hopes that I could now have a more persuasive influence with the Mormons, than I had with the perpetrators of the horrid deed which I sought to prevent. Under the circumstances, I cannot ask the Mormons to confide in me.

It must appear to them that they have been betrayed by somebody, and they do not know by whom.

If you mean to request me to exercise a forcible influence to expel them from the State; I answer you now as I have uniformly done, that the law is my guide; and that I know of no law authorizing their expulsion. From this determination I have not swerved for an instant, from the beginning until this time. I see nothing now requiring any deviation, and besides if I were ever so much determined to drive them out, I believe such is the abhorrence against the base deed which some of you have committed, that I could not obtain voluntary aid from the people. I suppose that you are aware that a call for volunteers is the only mode in which a force can be raised, and the force when raised must be provisioned by voluntary contribution.

You had better not make too loud a call upon your fellow citizens; you may want their aid for defence; and may yet be glad to receive aid for defence, rather than aggression. I know the apprehensions which you entertain of Mormon violence. I will not now say, whether your fears are well or ill founded. A little time will develop what may be expected. Taking the law for my guide, I can assure you, that although some of you have treated me badly, in thwarting my policy and violating my honor, and have acted basely towards defenceless prisoners, yet you are entitled to and are assured of all the force of the State to prevent or avenge illegal violence towards any of you. An enquiry must be made concerning the murderers. They must for the honor and credit of the State be dealt with according to law.

I have no reply whatever to make to that part of your letter which treats of the history, character, and offences of the Mormons. You ask a small force to be stationed in your County as a protection against small parties. You have no probably, duly considered how large a force would be necessary for this purpose. A small force could protect but a few points of attack and must necessarily leave the residue of the County exposed. A large force cannot be stationed there permanently. Your best protection is the assurance that, upon the first aggression or well defused threats, an overpowering force is ready to march directly for the scene of action.

I am informed that a design is still entertained at Warsaw of attacking Nauvoo. In this you will not be sustained by myself or the people, it is a part of my policy that you remain quiet, and if you please, watchful, but strictly on the defensive; and I now announce to you that I will not be thwarted in this policy with impunity.

I am most respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
THOMAS FORD.

PUBLIC OPINION.

Of the Press on the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, by a mob in the jail at Carthage, while under the sacred pledge of the State for the protection of their lives.

With reference to the recent bloody affair at Carthage the O. S. Democrat of this morning says:—

"From all the facts now before us, we regard these homicides as nothing else than murder in cold blood—murder against the plighted faith of the chief magistrate of Illinois—murder of a character so atrocious and so unjustifiable as to leave the blackest stain on all its perpetrators—their aids, abettors, and defenders.

The Republican pronounces the deed "unprovoked murder."

The Reporter says:—"The conduct of the mob at Carthage cannot be justified."

The Reveille says:—"Joe Smith has been 'lynched' while under the protection of the Law."

The New Era says:—"It was cruel and cowardly to murder the unarmed prisoners when they had surrendered themselves, and were in custody of the laws."

In fact, the Press of St. Louis denounces this bloody deed, without a dissenting voice. [St. Louis Eve. Gaz.]

From the Lee County (Iowa) Democrat.

We also endorse the whole of the sentiments of the St. Louis Presses, and say that it was a premeditated murder, and that the offenders ought to be ferreted out and dealt with according to the strict sense of the law.

JOSEPH SMITH, THE MORMON PROPHET AND HIS BROTHER HYRUM MURDERED IN PRISON.

The following particulars of the most disgraceful and cold-blooded ever committed in a christian land is copied from an Extra from the office of the Quincy Herald. Rumors of the bloody deed reached this city several days ago, but were not believed until Tuesday evening, when there was no further room left for doubt. Next week we will have all the particulars. Every effort will be made to bring the assassins to punishment.

From the Quincy Herald Extra of Saturday.

Gov. Ford arrived in this city this morning, much worn down by travel and fatigue, having left Carthage yesterday. It is now certain that only Joe and Hyrum Smith are killed, and they were murdered in cold blood. It seems that while Gov. Ford was absent from Carthage to Nauvoo, for the purpose of ascertaining satisfactorily the strength of the Mormon force, an excited mob assembled near Carthage, disfigured themselves by painting their faces, and made a rush upon the jail where Joe and his fellow prisoners were confined.—The guard placed by the Governor to protect the jail were overpowered by superior numbers. The doors of Jail forced, and Joe and Hyrum both shot. Hyrum was instantly killed by a ball which passed through his head. Joe was in the act of raising the window, when he was shot both from without and within, and fell out of the window to the ground. Richards, whom we supposed yesterday was dead, escaped unhurt by shutting himself up in a cell in the Jail. Mr. Taylor the Editor of the Nauvoo Neighbor, was in the room with the Smiths, and received three balls in his leg, and one in his arm.—He is not considered dangerous.—Three of the assassins were slightly wounded.

It will probably never be known who shot Joseph and Hyrum Smith— but their murder was a cold-blooded cowardly act, which will consign the perpetrators if discovered to merited infamy and disgrace.—They have broken their pledges to the Governor—disgraced themselves and the State to which they belong. They have crimsoned their perfidy with blood.

The dead bodies of the Smiths were conveyed to Nauvoo by order of the Governor yesterday.—It was supposed by many that the Mormons on seeing them would break away from all restraints and commence a war of extermination. But nothing of the kind occurred. They received their murdered friends in sorrow—laid down their arms and remained quiet. Col. Singleton and his company of 60 men, are still in Nauvoo; and the Mormons submitted to their authority.

The 300 that left our city yesterday on the Bores are at present in Warsaw. A man was assailed and knocked down with a musket in Warsaw yesterday, for presuming to express disapprobation at the murder of the Smiths.

It will long be regretted that things have taken the turn they have in relation to the Mormons. After they had laid down their arms, and submitted to the laws, they were entitled to the protection of those laws. Gov. Ford in the name of the State pledged them that protection, and he extended it to them so far as was in his power. The conduct of the Governor stands pre-eminently untarnished in this matter. Party is lost sight of, as it should be, and all unite to award him the meed of praise. Several public meetings which have been held in this city during the excitement, have passed resolutions approving of his course. As the troops were leaving our wharf on the Bores yesterday, his honor, the Mayor, came forward and proposed three cheers for Gov. Ford, which were given in a manner that made the welkin ring. Geo. T. M. Davis, Esq., in an address to our citizens last evening, also bore testimony to the calm and impartial manner which has characterized the conduct of the Governor throughout the whole of this affair.

In what we have written above we would not have it understood that our remarks in relation to the assassination of the two Smiths, apply to the people of Hancock county generally. The actors in the disgraceful transaction are probably confined to a few desperate characters who are determined to ride over the law to effect their object.

It will be seen by the accompanying Proclamation, that the Governor has issued orders for the raising of troops to be in readiness in case of emergency. This is certainly a discreet and provident movement. For although quiet reigns at present in Nauvoo and vicinity, the prejudice and excitement is so great, there is no knowing how soon another outbreak may occur.

From the Sangamo Journal.

THE MORMON DIFFICULTIES.

Notwithstanding all the rumors which are afloat, we are unable to state any thing very definite in relation to affairs at Nauvoo, or in the "region round about" that city. It is certain that the Governor has called out some of the neighboring militia—that bodies of armed men had collected without waiting a call from the Governor—that the Governor had accepted the services of militia at St. Louis under certain contingencies, that he had demanded of Smith the State arms at Nauvoo, that it had been reported that they were given up, that Smith and his council had given themselves up to be tried by our laws for alleged offences. Thus far our news seems to be certain. Rumor says further, that on Thursday of last week, Joe Smith, Hyrum Smith and Dr. Richards were shot by a mob at Carthage. We are incredulous in regard to the truth of this rumor. We cannot think that under the circumstances of the case, the excitement against these men among the anti-Mormons, Gov. Ford would have received them as prisoners, to be tried under our laws, had pledged himself for their protection, and then placed them in a situation where they would be murdered. The rumor is too preposterous for belief. We wait with much anxiety to hear the truth on this subject; and this feeling is general in this community.

From the Mo. Republican.

The Murders at Carthage.—A letter from the editor, one from G. T. M. Davis, Esq., and a proclamation from Gov. Ford, give all the information which we have been able to collect from the seat of civil commotion and murder in Illinois. They were issued in an extra form yesterday morning, and are transferred to our columns today for the benefit of our numerous readers abroad. All our information tends to fix upon the people concerned in the death of the Smiths, the odium of perfidious, black-hearted, cowardly murder—so wanton, as to be without any justification—so inhuman and treacherous, as to find no parallel in savage life under any circumstances. Gov. Ford declares his intention to seek out the murderers, and he owes it to his own honor and to that of the State, whose faith was most grossly violated, never to cease his exertions for this purpose. The Mormons, it will be seen, were quiet, and not disposed to commit any acts of aggression: their enemies, on the other hand, were evidently disposed to push them to extremities, and to force them the State. This feeling may be checked by the alacrity with which Gov. Ford's orders were being executed, but it will be sometime before peace and order can be restored—the disgrace of past acts cannot be wiped out.

DITCH AND BANK FENCE.

I have noticed some time since, in Mr. McAttee's review, a laconic and amusing touch at sod fence, which called to mind some of my own experience in that business. About a year since I troubled your readers with a description of an outside fence made of ditch and bank with a superstructure, which I then believed was proof against any animal, but have since found that it was not high enough. As soon as the corn was in the milk, having occasion to walk through the part of the field next the sod fence or ditch, I found that my neighbors hogs had commenced "playing it by;" but my dogs being in company, and not liking their modus operandi, commenced an argument with them, which induced them to quit the premises with all convenient despatch; and by observing their exit, I perceived that the steepness of the bank did not trouble them much. They would raise up on their hind feet, and if the superstructure was not higher than their length, from the extreme points of their hind feet to the point of the shoulder, (well stretched) they would crawl over. On mentioning the circumstance to my neighbors, who do not believe in that mode of fencing, they repeated the old remark, that "Ditch won't do." But being more obstinate than they, I told them I could make it do, and offered to put a superstructure on some of their abandoned ditch, and warrant it for four years, for 12 cents per rod. I employed a man to help me complete my own, and got out the timber, split and nailed it on, all at the rate of fifty rods per day, making it one half higher, which made the height exceed the length of the hogs; and my field has not been troubled since. Unless my neighbor raises longer hogs, my crops will be as long as the fence lasts. In conclusion, I will say, that ditch and bank without any thing on it, will not last long as a fence against hogs, and (probably) sheep. But the principle of raising a bank of earth, and covering it with blue-grass turf, on which to make a fence, is a good one, and will be resorted to in a great measure, and that before long. The raising of a bank necessarily forms a ditch on one or both sides, which is very necessary, on that land, for draining. If a bank is raised, even as high as may be done by a Jewett or Cary plough, it will make the ground descend from the fence, and animals that would jump it, have to labor under the disadvantage of jumping up hill; consequently, much less fence will answer the purpose. I have adopted this last mode with most of my cross fences, and find it to work well. — Peattie Farmer.

Salting Horses.—A curious fact is mentioned in Parker's Treatise on Salt. "A person who kept sixteen farming horses made the following experiment with seven of them which has been mentioned to eat salt with their food:—Lumps of rock salt were laid in their mangers, and these lumps, previously weighed, were examined weekly, to ascertain what quantity had been consumed, and it was repeatedly found, that whenever these horses were fed on hay and corn, they consumed only about two and a half or three ounces per day, but that when they were fed with new hay, they took six ounces per day." This should convince us of the expedience of permitting our cattle the free use of salt at all times; and it cannot be given so conveniently as from a rock salt, it being much more palatable than the other article in a refined state, and by far cheaper. A good lump should always be kept in a box, by the side of the animal, without fear that it will ever be taken in excess.

Worms on Cabbages.—These nests of the garden are to be destroyed by taking off one of the large lower leaves of the cabbage, about sundown, and laying it on the top of the plant, stake side down. Take it off early in the morning, and the whole or a large part of the worms of that cabbage will be on it, and may be destroyed by pleasure. Says W. Chandler, in the Tennessee Agriculturist.

To prevent being Horses tossed by Flies.—Take two or three small handfuls of walnut leaves, upon which pour three or four quarts of cold water; let infuse one night, and pour the whole next morning into a kettle, and let it boil for a quarter of an hour; when cold, it will be fit for use. No more is required than to moisten a sponge, and before the horse goes out of the stable, let those parts which are most irritable be smeared over with the liquor, viz., between and upon the ears, the neck, the flank, &c. Not only the lady or gentleman who rides out for pleasure will derive benefit from the walnut leaves thus prepared, but the coachman, the wagoner, and all others who use horses during the hot months. — Farmer's Receipt Book.

Chinese Gratitude.—An English merchant, of the name of C —, resided in Canton and Macao, where a sudden reverse of fortune reduced him from a state of affluence to the greatest necessity. A Chinese merchant, named Chinqua, to whom he had formerly rendered service, gratefully offered him an immediate loan of ten thousand dollars, which the gentleman accepted, and gave his bond for the amount; this the Chinese immediately threw into the fire, saying, "When you, my friend, first came to China, I was a poor man; you took me by the hand, and assisting my honest endeavors, made me rich. Our destiny is now reversed; I see you poor, while I am blessed with affluence." The bystanders had snatched the bond from the flames; the gentleman, sensibly affected by such generosity, pressed his friend to take the security, which he did, and then effectually destroyed it. The disciple of Confucius, beholding the increased distress it occasioned, said he would accept of his watch, or any little valuable, as a memorial of their friendship. The gentleman immediately presented his watch; and Chinqua, in return, gave him an old iron seal, saying, "Take this seal; it is one I have long used and possess it in no intrinsic value; but as you are going to India to look after your outstanding concerns, should fortune further persecute you, draw upon me for any sum of money you may need, sign it with your own hand, and seal it with this signet, and I will pay the money."

The Nineteenth Century.—A deputation headed by Mr. P. M. Stewart waited upon Lord Aberdeen on Thursday, to call his attention to the case of Maria Joquina, a woman of Madeira, who has been sentenced to death for heresy and blasphemy; that is, for denying the Roman Catholic religion and becoming a Protestant. The Portuguese Judge who sentenced her is also British Judge Conservator. The result of the interview is said to be highly satisfactory.

Morse's Telegraph.—The Washington correspondent of the New-York Evening Post furnishes that paper with the following particulars of the modus operandi of that wonderful invention: I paid a visit yesterday to the room in which Professor Morse is directing operations and experiments on this new and most wonderful plan of communication. This invention has been so frequently and fully described that I could not hope to give a clearer idea of it than your readers probably now have. But in no account is the mode of writing indicated. The pen used may be called a three-pronged fork, or so many little pointed steel screws; the ink is electricity. In speaking of it therefore you may say that you write with a steel pen and forked lightning.

The manner of writing is this. The telegrapher takes hold of the base end of the magnetic wire. He flips this end in a little deposit of mercury or quick silver, which communicates the electric spark, and this spark of chain lightning passes along the wire with speed of thought, possessing sufficient force to press the steel points I have alluded to, down upon a piece of paper made to pass beneath them. The distance travelled by the fluid along the wire, twenty-two miles and back upon the other, is of course forty-four miles. The speed of its passage is indicated by the fact that the very instant the end of the wire is seen to dip into the quicksilver, the little points are pressed to the paper—in other words, there is no perceptible interval between its starting upon and return from its trip of forty-four miles. It would go round the globe in one seventh of a second.

But now to the characters employed in this new scheme of calligraphy. It is evident that the mere pressure of the points upon the paper would produce only dots. But when it is wished to make a communication, a slip of paper is made to pass along from a roller, under these points. The letters, the words, or the phrases; desired to be expressed, are indicated by the length of the marks, or by the frequency or paucity of the dots made. Thus suppose the letter A to be represented by three dots, the writer dips the point of the wire in and withdraws it as quickly as possible, so that the points only strike the paper and instantly fly back. They thus make, it is obvious, the least possible impression, that is, only a dot for each point. But suppose C to be represented by lines half an inch long. The writer has only to keep the end of the wire in the quicksilver until the paper has passed along that distance under the points which are pressing upon it. Of course C is made. It will be perceived that the usefulness of this system of communication depends in a great degree upon the efficiency of the plan of stenography devised. For if the distinctive characters employed were not more complete nor comprehensive in their separate signification, than the letters of the alphabet, a person could convey very little information in a day. — Tribune.

The Fruits of the Exploring Expedition.—At a soiree given by Captain Wilkes, the commander of the Expedition, the Geological Association were shown many of the beautiful drawings that will appear in the reports that are shortly to be published. They will form ten or twelve quarto volumes of plates and maps. The number of drawings made by the expedition exceeds 1000. The number of birds exhibited in the gallery, is nearly 2000; the number of fishes, 828; of reptiles, 140; of crustacea, 900; of insects, 1500; of shells, 20,000; Zophytes, 300; of corals, 450; of plants, 10,000 species and 50,000 specimens.

Representation in Greece.—The National Assembly of Greece having lately agreed on all the articles of the constitution, before their dissolution passed an electoral law. By this law, the provinces which have a population of 10,000 souls will elect, on deputy—those which have from 10,000 to 20,000 souls will elect two—those from 20,000 to 30,000 three, and those which have over 30,000 four deputies. The Ipsariotes resident in Greece will elect three deputies—the Hydriotes three—and the Spezzioties two. The Assembly ordered a statue to be erected in the Place des Platanes, at Napoli de Romania, in honor of the late President, J. Capo d'Istria, as a benefactor of Greece. — Bost. Adv.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.
Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colics, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by irritating, expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.
The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 100,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPFIRE LOZENGES.
For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. OSPREY.

REGULAR WEEKLY PACKET, TO NAUVOO AND BLOOMINGTON, IOWA.
THE new light draught swift passenger steamer OSPREY, ANDERSON Master, will leave St. Louis every Friday at 4 o'clock p. m. for Nauvoo, and arriving at Bloomington every Sunday evening. On her downward trip she will leave Bloomington at 7 o'clock a. m. Monday morning and pass New Boston, Oquaka, Burlington and Fort Madison Sunday; Tuesday will leave Nauvoo at 6 o'clock a. m. and arrive in St. Louis Wednesday forenoon.

The accommodations and safety of the Osprey are unsurpassed by any boat in the Upper Mississippi trade, and from her being of very light draught will be enabled to cross the rapids during the lowest stage of water. In attention to the interest of shippers and passengers no exertion will be spared by Captain Anderson and crew to render it pleasant to all who patronize her. She is supplied with Evans' Patent Safety Guard, to prevent explosion of her boilers, as also a Fire Engine and Hose attached in case of accident by fire. It is respectfully announced to shippers and passengers, that in no case the Osprey can be detained beyond the hours advertised.

EXTRAORDINARY DISCOVERY.

The following is an extract of a letter from a young American now travelling in Europe, which we copy from the London (La.) Gazette. We know nothing in the range of science to equal the discovery mentioned, except indeed some of the wonderful discoveries in Mesmerism.

Professor Von Grusselbach of Stockholm, has very lately brought to a state of perfection the art of producing a torpor of the whole system, by the application of cold of different degrees of intensity, proceeding from a lesser to a greater, so as to cause the human body to become perfectly torpid without permanent injury to any organ or tissue of the frame. In this state they may remain for a great number of years, and again, after a sleep of ages, be awakened to existence, as fresh and blooming as they were when they first sunk into the frigorific slumber.

The attention of the learned professor was first led to the subject by finding a lead enclosed in a solid fragment of a calcareous rock ten feet in diameter, which, when taken out, showed unequivocal signs of life; but it was supposed that the compression caused by blasting the rock occasioned its death in a few hours after. The opinion of Baron Grunthizen, who is a Geologist to the King of Sweden, was that it must have been in that situation for at least seven thousand years; and his calculations were drawn from the different layers of strata by which it was surrounded. From this hint, the professor proceeded to make experiments; and, after a painful and laborious course of experiments for the last twenty-nine years of his life, he has at last succeeded in perfecting his great discovery. No less than sixty thousand reptiles, shell fish, &c., were experimented on before he tried the human subject. The process is not entirely laid before the public as yet, but I had the honor, in company with a friend, of visiting the professor.

I shall give a slight description of one of the outer rooms containing some of the preparations. Previous to entering, we were furnished with an India rubber bag to which was attached a mask with glass eyes. This was put on to prevent the temperature of the room from being varied the slightest degree by our breathing. It was an arid room, lighted from the top by the sun's rays, from which the heat was entirely disengaged by its passage through its glass, &c., colored by the oxide of copper. (A late discovery, and very valuable to the professor.) The room is shelved all around, and contains nearly one thousand specimens of animals, &c. One was a Swedish girl, aged, from appearance, about nineteen years; she was consigned to the professor by order of the Government to experiment upon, having been found guilty of murdering her child. With the exception of a slight paleness, she appeared as if asleep, although she has been in a state of complete torpor for two years. He intends, he says, to resuscitate her in a few more years, and convince the world of the soundness of his wonderful discovery. The professor so graciously took a small snuff out of his cabinet into another room, and although it appeared to us to be perfectly dead and rigid as marble, by application of a mixture of cyanide paper and brim, it showed marked signs of life, and was apparently as active as ever it was in a few minutes, although the professor assured us it had been in a state of torpor for six years.

The Bill of St. Augustine's Church.—The Philadelphia Spirit of the Times states, that the bill of St. Augustine's, which melted and led in the flames of the burning church, was the bill which first chimed musical peals at the declaration of American independence—the dawning of freedom, political and religious, upon this Union. The parishage, flock of St. Augustine's was, at the time of the cholera, given to the city for a hospital, and the Rev. Dr. Murray, now deceased, attended in person at the bedside of the sick during that dreadful season. Several of the Sisters of Charity also attended, and ministered to the sufferings of the citizens.

An Affecting Scene.—The New Haven Courier relates the following: In a lawyer's office, in a remote part of this State, lay a mortgage for eleven hundred dollars, which was within a few days of being due. One morning, the man on whose place the mortgage was held, called and enquired if the payment could not be put off a short time. He was a man somewhat advanced in life, and very intemperate. The lawyer, in reply to his inquiries, said that the man who held the mortgage wanted his money—that he was sorry, but it could not be extended. The tears came to the old man's eyes, and after standing a few moments, a perfect image of despair, turned and left the office. He returned home, believing that in a few short days his aged and infirm wife and invalid daughter would have to quit that roof which had so long sheltered them, and seek for a home he knew not where.

He could say nothing to them about it, it would cause them so much grief. The mortgage became due, and in the morning early, the farmer again repaired to the lawyer's office. He pleaded for time, but to no purpose. Overcome with emotion, the old man sank in a chair, and there sat for about two hours, apparently unconscious of anything that was passing around him, when a carriage drove up to the door, and a lady stepped from it. She entered the office. After standing a few moments, eyeing the old man with interest and emotion, she spoke. The old man looked up. "Father, how do you do?"

"Oh, Sarah! I am well, but sad. I am glad to see you, but sorry for your aged mother and invalid sister. I cannot return to them, for it will be to tell them they have no home, and this I cannot bear, it will kill your poor mother."

"Father! Father!" said the daughter, "could you live a temperate man if this were paid?"

"Yes! oh, yes, I would; but it cannot be for I have nothing to pay it with."

The father was violently opposed to the tariff. In the village was a factory doing a good business. This daughter worked in it.

A SAD DISASTER.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writing from Patuxent, says:

We yesterday fell in with Capt. Flowers, whose vessel had been captured by a sudden blow of wind on Thursday night. There were five females on board, and four males, all of whom were drowned with the exception of the captain and his brother, who clung to the rigging until assistance arrived. The names of those that were lost were Miss Flowers, the captain's sister, Mrs. Cont, a widow lady, a little girl about 7 years old named Rockwell, a daughter of L. P. Rockwell, of Baltimore, Mrs. Trigge and child, and a white boy and black man deck hands.

At about 12 o'clock this morning we succeeded in righting the vessel, when such a sight met my eyes as I hope never to witness again. In the cabin we found the bodies of the four females, the little child having been, it is supposed, washed out and lost. Miss Flowers was standing up in the cabin cold and stiff, with her arms folded across her breast, as if she had died with the child in her arms. The other three were lying on the cabin floor, somewhat bruised.—Mr. Spackwell's daughter looked perfectly natural, and was not in the least bruised or disfigured. After the vessel was pumped out, and put in order, Capt. Flowers called for his home near the mouth of the Rappahannock river, carrying with him the bodies of the four females. We were unable to recover the other three bodies.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

We learn from an official source, that the sales of the public lands, during the last calendar year, amounted to 1,039,674 acres, and produced more than $2,000,000, exceeding the proceeds of sales for the previous year, by more than $600,000.

The Commissioners, under date of Dec. 14 1843, says: There have been surveyed, since my last annual report upwards of four millions and a half of acres, exclusive of private land claims, and some re surveys, where the field notes were lost or destroyed by fire. In the south and southwest the surveys are extending to the farthest point, and in the northwest are progressing with the extinguishment of the Indian title. These surveys, with the exception of private land claims, will, of course, from the basis of the boundary line between this country and Texas, under the convention of 25th April 1835, it was ascertained that some of our surveys and sales were within the Texian territory; and orders have been given to the surveyor general of Louisiana to correct his surveys so as to limit them to the true boundary, and make due returns thereof to this office, so that proper measures may be taken to refund the purchase money in all cases of sales thus erroneously made.

GEN. JACKSON.

The Hon. Mr. Allen, of Ohio, thus spoke in 1843, in the Senate of the United States, in defence of Gen. Jackson

"Who was he? He was an orphan boy, poor and friendless. And yet, by the energy of his character and the force of his genius, he has made the entire cycle of public honors in the first country on the globe; and now, at a good old age, he reposes within the peaceful precincts of his beloved Hermitage, with a heart still pure, a judgment unimpaired, and a character still victorious over malice and defamation. That motley rabble of British mercenaries, with arms in the hands of British stipendiaries, with characters in their pockets, of political wranglers and declaimers who make up the bridle factions of his country's enemies and of his persecutors, have served only to mark, by their fall, one by one, the dates and space between successive victories of truth, genius, and virtue, over their antagonist principles. There the man stands, the private citizen in the private fields of rural life his venerable form presenting the very incarnation of triumphant patriotism."

You Senators, who are his friends need no longer be concerned on this account. His character is now safe in the public affection; and when he shall pass down the deep declivity of his remaining days, his grave will be waileed around by the hearts of his grateful countrymen, against that vampire spirit which would violate the tomb to glut upon his blood."

While Gen. Jackson was operating in the Creek country, some twenty odd years ago, he invariably gave orders that all encampments should be made near the main body to prevent surprise and alarm; but he had one officer, Capt. G., who, although a brave man, was rather lawless, and disposed to prowl and bushwhack about on his own hook and account.—When the main camp fires were lit at night, his would frequently be off on some hill by itself, a mile, perhaps, from the others, and in a very exposed situation. Gen. Jackson finally got tired of giving his orders in relation to encampment, as Capt. G. was of receiving them, and seeing his fire one night on a distant hill, the commander sent an aid to arrest the brave but eccentric officer.

"Capt. G.," said the aid, "I am ordered to take your sword from you."

"Are you?"

"I am."

"Well, take the sword from Gen. Jackson, and tell him to keep the sword old thing. I only gave a dollar and a half for it when it was new, and know where I can get one twice as good tomorrow for the same money."

The Canal Loan.—The Chicago Journal contains the following paragraph, in relation to the Canal Loan. We have no information here on the subject.

We understand that Mr. Ryan has written a letter to a friend at Ottawa, concerning our Canal, which is highly favorable. The report comes to us by stage passengers from Ottawa. The purport of the rumor is that the heaviest European Bond Holders have agreed to advance the required amount, and that Mr. R. is to return immediately to complete the arrangement this side of the water.

Important.

The British government contemplate a great revolution in their system of paper currency. The plan of Mr. Peel is to separate the business of banking from that of issuing money; in other words, to divide the Bank of England into two branches, a bank of deposit and a bank of issue. The notes issued are to be limited in amount to 14,000,000 or about $70,000,000, based upon public debt, exchequer bills, and other public securities. This amount may be extended by permission of government, which will take all the profits of such extension. The joint stock and other banks of the Kingdom are to be placed on the same foundation with the Bank of England, being allowed to receive deposits and transact other banking business without limit, but will not be allowed to issue beyond a certain amount. All the banks will be required to publish a weekly statement of their condition: and thus the public may know, at all times, the amount of paper money in circulation.—Baltimore Era.

PROBABLE WITHDRAWAL OF PRESIDENT TYLER.

The Hon. John Wentworth, in one of his letters, home dated June 3, has the following paragraph:

Robert Tyler told me yesterday, that, where the Democrats now had a full electoral ticket in the field, his father's friends would support them. But where there was none, he should insist upon a compromise ticket.

We are all united and sanguine. You never saw any thing like the enthusiasm prevalent in our ranks."

From this it would seem, that Mr. Tyler will not stand in the way of the great race for 1844—a race in which Polk will fairly distance the Coon champion, Mr. Clay.

GENIUS.

Mankind are daily lavishing their praise upon men of genius, those whom chance has thrown forward from the sea of mind-like waves, wash beautiful shells upon the shore, telling us as we gather and admire them, that there are thousands more hidden from our view, no words can speak this fact like the poet's—

"Full many a flower is born to blush unseen
And waste its fragrance in the desert air."

Let mankind then consider that the flowers they see are not the only ones which bloom, or, putting aside similitudes, there are many bright ornaments to our species who never rise into public notice; and who though their virtues and their ingenuities may far surpass any which have been held up to our admiration, are doomed as it were, to struggle and struggle in obscurity, and pine away their existence in seclusion and want.

We wish all men to be elevated far above the position which they now occupy, but we know that nature always has and always will have an aristocracy of minds, or in other words, there always will be some men superior to others in physical and intellectual powers; but it is true also, that every man has a genius for some particular pursuit. He is thus organized, and if the proper direction is given to his organization, or if the pursuit which he follows is of his own choice, and therefore attractive to him, as a necessary consequence, he will be more proficient in that pursuit. This principle of attractive industry, if carried out with all men would be sure to make better workmen than we now have, and also develop more fully each one's particular genius.

Amongst the great variety of pursuits which occupy man's mind, poetry, painting, and sculpture have been pre-eminent

Aufu!—On the 29th ult., a house near Lebanon, Ohio, was struck by lightning, and four daughters of Mr. Henry Hamer were killed, the father and mother stunned, and one of the grandchildren of Mr. H. was thrown out of the door some distance. The daughters killed were all in separate rooms!! The roof of the house was said to be riddled as with a great number of grape shot.

Millbury Bank Robbers Sentenced.—Abijah and Jeremiah Larned, have been sentenced to imprisonment in the State Prison, the first for ten years, and the other, who is younger, for five years; James is allowed a new trial.

Extraordinary Disclosures.—John R. Rickett, formerly an Episcopalian minister, and more recently a dry goods dealer in Worcester, Mass., pretty well known in that place—has been arrested and confined in the Brooklyn (L. I.) prison. It has been discovered since his arrest, that he has been for several years perpetrating gross frauds upon the revenue, by smuggling false entries, &c., &c., at both the New York and Boston custom houses.

MEXICAN THIEVES.

Some time since, an English gentleman was quietly sauntering along the Portales, the most crowded thoroughfare of Mexico—his attention being occupied with a variety of wares offered for sale by small dealers: when suddenly he felt his hat gently lifted from his head. Before he could turn to seize the thief, the rascal was already a dozen yards distant, dodging through the crowd. Upon another occasion, a Mexican was stopped in broad daylight, in a lonely part of the town, by three men, who demanded his cloak. Of course he very strongly objected to parting with so valuable an article; when two of them placed themselves on either side of him, and the third, seizing the garment immediately disappeared, leaving the victim in the grip of his companions. His cloak gone he naturally imagined that the thieves had no further use for him; and attempted to depart.—The vagabonds, however, told him to remain patiently where he was, and he would find the result more agreeable than he expected. In the course of fifteen minutes their accomplice returned, and, politely bowing handed the gentleman a pauvres' ticket. "We wanted 30 dollars and not the cloak," said the villain; "here is a ticket, with which you may redeem it for that sum; and as the cloak of such a caballero is unquestionably worth at least one hundred dollars, you may consider yourself as having made, say, twenty by the transaction.—Vaga con Dios!—Mayer's Mexico.

Amongst the great variety of pursuits which occupy man's mind, poetry, painting, and sculpture have been pre-eminent in estimation, and those, too, who have most brilliantly shone in these arts have in most instances been endowed with such natural powers that they have in a manner subdued all opposing circumstances, and triumphed in the bent of their dispositions. Look for instance over the catalogue of poets and you will soon discover that it was not the education of men alone which made a Shakespeare or a Burns, or amongst painters and sculptors, which made a Michael Angelo or a Crevenger.

In the field of science, likewise, we find surprising instances of individuals in poor circumstances and without education making wonderful inventions and discoveries, many of which have of late so rapidly spread, improving and civilizing nations.

Praise and adulation are not justly to be awarded to such examples as we have noticed, for many a genius is to be found amongst our artists and mechanics, who labor incessantly for his daily bread, and who produces work which none but such a mind as his possesses could perform, and who in his particular vocation stands forth as great as Shakespeare a poet, or Raphael a painter. It is true indeed they are sometimes employed in work which is thought useless and patronized but by a few, though often their work is useful, but neglected through the too general deficiency of taste and knowledge.

But of all the employments of men, there is none more ennobling than agriculture. Both for peacefulness and simplicity, usefulness and beauty, this pursuit far surpasses all others which man turns his attention to, and why, but that it is the most natural pursuit. The cultivation of the soil and the production of our food brings us close in contact with nature and with nature's works.

In the various changes of the seasons, the budding of the leaf in spring, and its fall in autumn, the brilliancy of the many planets in our system, the gentle showers which hasten vegetation, and the gleaming snow which protects the earth, a field of inquiry and thought is ever open to the philosopher.

The painter goes to nature for his art, and all his aim is to imitate her; he pictures to us the evening with the setting sun and deep blue sky, and in the landscape places weary husbandmen retiring homewards, and blenting herds delighting in the evening shade. But though we deeply admire his work when put up in the crowded city, still we have more love for the reality and would glory more in contemplating nature herself.

The sculptor, likewise, when fully imbued with the truth of his art, goes to nature for his copy, not to the artificial forms of our cities, but by means of ever changing wearing apparel, too frequently deform themselves; not to the tame and pampered domestic animals of the fire-side does he find his chisel, but he flies far away to the lands where he can see nature in her greatest perfection. The poet, too, above all, wraps himself in nature's works, and gathers all his gems alone from her.

In the pursuit of agriculture, then, we have all these advantages; we can be continually studying cause and effect; we can enjoy all the beauties and varieties of each month of the year; we can breathe the sweet air of GUNPOWDER.

Gunpowder has been a perpetual dread to man since its invention. But who invented it we care not, and it is foreign to our purpose to inquire.

Every thing that man invents is destructive, he is a corrupt tree that brings forth good fruit; humanity is a vineyard of sour grapes, not sown in the foxey sense of the word, but absolutely and in fact sour. The cannon was a murderous idea, yet invented for the charitable purpose of killing off your enemies, and no doubt was brought to light by a sweet disposition. However, our express object is to consider the uses and purposes of this unforgotten composition and see if by comparison we cannot trace a great resemblance between the actions of gunpowder and those of man.

I have the utmost confidence in the belief that some men and women are made up exclusively, one of this chemical compound, the other of fire, and by coming in contact often produce such a combustion that they are glad to stand out of their own way. Your passionate man, hasty and rash, is the lighted rocket which works itself to its utmost height, bursting and falling by its own weight, so is he who is compared to it full of the gunpowder of anger, he goes off at the least spark, foams with fury, and alarming all within reach for his safety; but as soon as the horrible ingredient is spent he curls under the gentle admonition of reason, a picture for his own contemplation. Your good substantial and honest man is the Bengolá light, full of beauty and brilliancy casting its light on every object around, so the good man shines, not dazzling in brilliancy, but radiating from his sphere of action qualities so attractive that all turn their eyes with admiration to behold, and as they admire strive to take example.

Your pesky, cross, contentious, leaky house, and rainy day woman, is the Catherine Wheel, which we are anxious to avoid, first twisting, now contented and now in a terrible revolution. Then gently moving, now with the velocity of a planet. If any man can dodge her he shall teach me gymnastics.

Here is your fatty man drest in the hues of variegated colors. They are wonderful at first, but of short duration, they cease before we have fairly grasped at them, so the fancy gentleman, being as he is unsubstantial, is not a matter of wonder that he does not continue longer; but that he continues so long.

It is a pity, however, to mention gunpowder in the then fog of him lest he be alarmed, for recollecting the words of the poet "he calls sulphure villainous" (scandal!) and proclaims he would have been a soldier, but for vile guns.

I cannot call to recollection the licentious mob without thinking of Chinese crackers, nor can I see a wild dissolute fellow without remembering that there is a gunpowderly gentleman named the serpent or chase, the one flashing off at random, blinded as to his destination; the other as misguiding and terrible, often bringing ruin upon those into whose society it enters.

Who can be compared to the fiery pigeons spitting out their fiery escape; two persons in a pitch of passion dealing out words and blows, and we friendly advise all that they gaze upon the fireworks, to contemplate well their own characters and learn not to imitate this dry and just generous piece of mischief, or confine themselves most strictly to their ropes.

The unsteady gentleman may be likened to the grasshopper bounding about from place to place that it is totally spent. If gunpowder quickly destroys our enemies, man's passion often destroys our friends—it was discovered accidentally, and wholesale warriors rejoiced at the birth of this swift means of death. It is in itself harmless, man's passion more frequently kills than does the excessive tender mercies of man actually inflame it, giving it free scope and action. Man-kind as a body may be compared to the gunpowder, plot a terrible matter to resist unless timely discovered. Give the devil his due, for he is so ashamed of his chemical invention that he has adopted only one of its ingredients as an instrument of torment, man wither and waver embodies three destructive and is barely satisfied with them.

What then can we learn from so reckless a compound as gunpowder—why to be less destructive ourselves? He that hath rule over his own spirits is greater than he that taketh a city. When one is in a terrible passion provided he does not soar beyond the reach of reason; let him fire a rocket and let good judges decide if they both are not as nearly allied as twins. When he has concluded that such a comparison is just, he should resolve to give the rocket a sole companionship, for he must consider that all men are afraid of gunpowder and if a gun be even dangerous without it, what must man be with it, or rather with that cruel wrath which sulphure and brimstone (upon more mature reflections) ought not to be likened.

It is exceedingly fortunate for one little planet, that the passions of its inhabitants are not concentrated in its centre, if such could be the case directed by man himself, the whole earth would be driven assunder, the winds sent home, the fragments scattered in all directions, so that the rest of the solar system might possibly receive injury; yes, indeed it would be as terrible as Gay Fawkes could have desired.

The Pirate of the Mediterranean.—A letter received at Lloyd's from their agent at Malta of the 15th inst. of which a copy is subjoined, shows that this rover of the sea continues his lawless pursuit without hindrance or dread of detection. The many cases of recent piracy in the Mediterranean attributed to a Greek bark, which has escaped the vigilance of the men-of-war up to the date of the following letter, call for very active measures for its suppression. The great injury which the shipping interests both at home and abroad has sustained by the repeated depredations of this pirate would ensure much eclat to whoever may be fortunate enough to capture her. Certain it is, that the infamous but bold depredations, if not horrible butchery of this vessel, call for very prompt measures for her seizure. Malta, April 15.—We have already mentioned that a suspicious looking vessel had been filled in with in the month of March, off Cape Passari, by the Capper arrived at Smyrna. We now learn that two small craft which sailed from Sicilian ports on the same day for this port with specie, have not reached their destination. One vessel has not been heard of, while the other has been picked up at sea, abandoned, with the water casks emptied, and with other signs of having been plundered.

FESTIVAL AT NAPLES.

An English traveller gives the following very amusing account of the manner in which the confectioners of Naples exhibit their piety on the days when the church festivals are held in that city:

If you traverse the streets of Naples on the days of the church festivals, you see the most eloquent parts of the scriptures translated into words of pastry and sugar, to catch and amuse the curiosity of the vulgar. Here a sun of sugar candy is arrested in his course, to obey the voice of a Joshua in chocolate, who is tramping under foot a little army of biscottini, (little figures in biscuit.) In the neighboring plain, two armies are seen engaged, and disposed with a judgment and spirit not unworthy of Le Brun himself. Horses of combat lie streched on the plain; soldiers in combats rush with ardor to the fray; trumpets of vanilla incite by their clangors, the rage of the combatants, one of whom is inflamed with such a desire for glory, that he is seen in the act of rushing forward to tear from the candied arms of a standard-bearer a banner of pistachio—the glorious trophy of victory. The field is strewn with bodies of a most sweet and savory kind, which exhale the most grateful fragrance. Go a little further, and you will observe Sisera, who buried in sleep, perishes under the hand of Jael, who is driving, with unrelenting rage, a nail of crusted sugar into his head. If you feel inclined, you may also assist at the judgement of Solomon, and admire the wisdom of his decisions. He is seen seated on his throne of pasta-reale, preparing to announce his celebrated sentence in the presence of his people and of the guards, by whom he is surrounded. But who, think you, are these guards? Squadrons of sugar pulcinella, well armed with pikes of macaroni! Advance a step farther, and you are called to bow with reverential awe in the presence of two priests, seated in an attitude of profound contemplation, near the door of a cheese-monger's shop. Draw a little closer towards them, and touch the hem of their garments. What makes you smile! How whimsical! Their garments are composed of 'mortadelle' and 'sacocottini' (particular kinds of sausages), and the chalice encrusted to their hands is a Dutch cheese of superior quality!

AWFUL EXPLOSION.

Our city was yesterday shocked by the most terrible and mournful accident that has ever occurred in its vicinity. Yesterday morning, the steamboat Gen. Vance, Capt. S. D. Woodworth, left the wharf of J. N. Elbert, at 84 o'clock, with a full load of passengers and freight, for Toledo. She proceeded across the river to Windsor, and just as she stopped at the wharf, and was letting off steam, the boiler exploded. The sound was like the report of a cannon, and was heard with fearful distinctness on this side. The fore part of the boat immediately sank, and the aft soon followed. But this was of little consequence, compared with the melancholy loss of life.

Four persons at least, are supposed to have lost their lives. Mr. Samuel D. Woodworth, the captain of the boat, the eldest son of Mr. Benjamin Woodworth, the late well known proprietor of the Steamboat Hotel, was thrown into the air and killed. His body was found some hours afterwards, in the river. The body of George Sweeney, of Chatham, U. C. formerly employed on the Kent, has also been found. Robert Motherwell, engineer of the ferry boat United, who had just stepped on board the Vance, is also supposed to be killed, though his body has not been found. Major A. C. Truax, of Truago, one of our oldest and most respectable citizens, was frightfully and mortally wounded, and though living at the moment of writing, cannot survive. Mr. Gaylord, the engineer of the Vance, was severely but not dangerously injured, and also two of the firemen, whose names we have not learned. Some 30 or 40 passengers were on board, and their preservation is almost miraculous.

The boat is of course an utter wreck, and her cargo all or nearly all lost. It is of course, too early to judge calmly of the cause of the explosion, but it is due to Mr. Gaylord to say, that he is an engineer of skill, experience, and of the highest integrity and fidelity, in whom our citizens repose entire confidence. The following statement by him has been furnished to us for publication:

Mr. Gaylord, the engineer, says, her steam was low, and not so as to blow off, when she left the wharf on this side, but as usual on leaving port he caused the fires to be replenished, not knowing that the boat was to land on the other side. But on coming to the dock, he had her fire door opened, and himself raised the safety valve and tied it up, so as to blow off freely. At the moment of the explosion he was standing upon the rail, with his hand having hold of the shroud, saying to Capt. Woodworth, "that he should have given him notice of his intention to land there, that the steam was making fast, and he must not stop long," that instant, the explosion took place. Mr. Gaylord was blown from the rail where he was standing, on to the forward deck of the Ferry Boat United, and was badly bruised, and somewhat scalded, but not dangerously.

P. S. Major Truax has since died.

Holland Land Company and officers.

On Wednesday last, Sheriff White, in company with two of his deputies, two constables, and one other person, went into the town of Hinsdale to execute a writ of possession, in favor of one of the owners of land purchased of the Holland Company. The officers had succeeded in removing nearly everything from the house, when they were interrupted by a body of men to the number of about 150, who had assembled with guns and other weapons, many of them disguised with paint and Indian blankets, and driven from the premises. Sheriff White had his coat torn to pieces, and was badly bruised. Deputy sheriff also had his coat torn, and was injured by a blow upon his shoulder. After the officers left the premises, they were fired upon, and volleys of stones thrown after them until they were out of reach. The horses upon which they rode, were also badly bruised by the stones thrown at them. In their retreat they observed from 40 to 50 men, some of them armed, proceeding toward the scene of action, so that the whole number finally gathered together must have exceeded 200.

What course the sheriff intends to pursue we are not advised. This certainly is a bad state of things, and as the law and its officers are set at defiance, no one can foresee the result.—Cattaraugus Whig.

A Female Duel.—A rich and novel scene came off in the neighborhood of Bayou Bridge, at New Orleans, 30th ult. between Catharine Roach and Eliza Annis, who met for mortal combat. As in the recent duels at Vicksburg, where thousands gathered to see fair play and bet on the result, so at Bayou Bridge, a large crowd met to see which of the frail fair ones would first bite the dust. But the "fancy" in such matters were doomed to disappointment; after a few passes, when the "sport" was about to begin in earnest, the police interfered and carried off the combatants.

Shocking Tragedy.—This morning between 3 and 4 o'clock, the neighborhood of Dock and Pear streets, was thrown into great alarm and excitement, by the report of two pistols in quick succession and female shrieks proceeding from the French boarding-house No. 64 Dock street, next below the office of the Philadelphia U. S. Gazette. It was soon ascertained that a Frenchman named Julius Lesuer, had made an attempt to murder his wife, a Creole, and afterwards shot himself dead in their chamber.

Lesuer is a general trader belonging to New Orleans. They had had a difficulty, originating in jealousy on the part of the husband. This morning the wife was lying on a sofa, and her husband asked her to kiss him. She refused, and turned her back, and was in the act of leaving the room, when he deliberately discharged a horse pistol at her, the ball taking effect in the side, just over the right hip, and lodging in the body.

The wound is mortal, and the unfortunate woman lingers in great agony. The desperate man immediately seized another pistol which was lying on the bureau, and fired it at himself, putting the ball right through him between the sixth and seventh ribs.—He dropped and died instantly! The deceased was 42 years of age.—Phil. Gaz., Saturday.

Mrs. Lesuer, mentioned above, died on Saturday.

"Peter, why is it that you like Anna so well?"

"Because she is so amiable and retiring."

"Well, I must say that I like to see ladies retiring, myself, and whenever I do, I lead trumps or follow suit."

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1844.

Office Subscribers receive their papers on personal application, or to their orders only.

Out-break.—We learn that a second "out-break" has put a part of the city of Philadelphia, again into a state of unquietude, and by the Mayor was declared under "Martial law." It is said to have originated among the firemen, who made quick work of killing some two or three men. It seems that "out breaks" and murder are becoming the order of the day.

Stone Coal.—We are gratified to learn that a rich vein of Coal has recently been discovered some 60 or 100 miles north, and that measures have been taken to have a suitable quantity transported to this city by water, for the use of the steam mill, black smiths, and such citizens as prefer it for fuel. Such a valuable acquisition for the benefit and convenience of Nauvoo, cannot be too highly estimated.

The River.—The Mississippi has risen some six or eight inches during the past week, which brings the present stage of water on the "Rapids," within about six inches of the "old high water mark" of prior years. We have had high water nearly five months, a circumstance which has not occurred before for several years.

The Weather, &c.—The weather has been hot during the past week, Fahrenheit ranging as high as 96 degrees in the shade, or 120 exposed to the sun.

The harvest is coming in richly, and although our wet spring has retarded and reduced the corn crop, still we believe, calculating on the abundance of the wheat crop, "plenty" will crown the labors of the farmer.

Peace and plenty are among the sweetest enjoyments of life, and with an ardent desire to extend them, nothing should be wanting among honest men, to merit such necessary blessings for the comfort of life.

HONEY AT HEAD QUARTERS.

Annexation without the consent of the Senate;

And broadside to broadside for life as a partner;

But yet it is sunny;

John Tyler the President, beware how you enact!

Has married a wife—Miss Julia Gardiner.

A rich lick of Honey.

Compliment.—Capt. Anderson of the "Osprey" last week of the "Ione," has our thanks for the papers handed to us. Such interesting expressions of courtesy shall be duly reciprocated, and long remembered. What a pity it is that a union of good men cannot be tolerated in this century; the way we would live happy, would make the world wish, and wish again!

Thomas W. Dorr, the once Governor of Rhode Island, has been sentenced to the Penitentiary for life. Verily, the humanity of man is death or drudgery!

The Leo County (Iowa) Democrat comes out about right upon the late Carthage assassination. It is truly "time that such acts of violence should be arrested"—or our freedom is butchered. Hear that paper!

THE MURDER OF THE MORMON PROPHET AND HIS BROTHER.

The murder of Jo Smith and his Brother, has caused feelings of deep regret in the breasts of every peaceable and law abiding people; they look upon it as a high handed outrage, and as a cruel, cold blooded, cowardly and contemptible murder. That Jo and his brother were guilty of acts which required the interposition of the law, we are well aware, but after he, and his brother had voluntarily surrendered themselves up to justice, under the full assurance that they would receive the protection of Gov. Ford from all violence; they were entitled to all protection against all danger and all enemies. Yet still with all the assurance that were given to the Smiths and his people, and whilst in prison awaiting their trial, they were by a ruthless mob, shot down. A more deeper stain could not have fallen upon the state of Illinois, or a more outrageous butchery perpetrated. The State of Illinois has had her fair fame tarnished by the violence of an ungovernable mob, and it is time that such acts of violence should be arrested, or we may soon say, our laws are a dead letter and our freedom gone forever.—Every good citizen must feel interested in putting down such outrageous acts—and every good citizen should lend his aid in ferreting out the murderers, and bring them to justice.

PUBLIC OPINION.

We continue to extract such opinions as the Press advances on the recent unprovoked, cold-blooded, heartless, and unparalleled murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. In doing this let it be distinctly understood, that the speculations of Editors upon what the Mormons will do, is sheer opinion, or predictions upon their own responsibility. The Latter Day Saints as a body, have always honored, upheld, and abided, by the laws of the land; and in so doing, while executive influence or power has been exerted, they have thrice felt that power most severely, perhaps through a prostitution of honor or faith, or by some other means,—and now in their humility while endeavoring to calm the passions of inhuman calculations and keep the peace, for distant Editors to insinuate the least idea of smothered vengeance among the Latter Day Saints, is morally wrong. Facts and not supposition ought to rule the tone of a healthy news paper. The Latter Day Saints have been driven and murdered with impunity; and for what? Not for crimes so decided by a jury of their vicinage constitutionally, but upon the supposition that they were about to commit violence upon the inhabitants and country. * * *

Peace is now cheering Nauvoo, and that it may bless the country around, it is greatly to be hoped, that gentlemen of influence, public speculators on public opinion, magnanimous Editors who hold the helm of excitement, and all honorable men, will lead a band to "bury the hatchet," rather than chase a lion to hear him growl. Common courtesy, kindred affection, the benefit of posterity, and the interest of all, call for union, truth, benevolence, and friendship. We do hope therefore, and expect that the generality of the corps Editorial, except Davis of Alton, and one or two others who lack the greatest qualification on earth, will use so much of the Saviour's golden rule, as to do unto others as they would that others would do unto them; and when asked for bread, will not send stones!

From the St. Louis Transcript.

NAUVOO.

The following notice of operations and state of affairs at Nauvoo, we take from the report of the Editor of the Republican.

Upon our arrival, we took pains to learn the state of the public feeling, by conversing with persons, men and women, who are not regarded as leaders in the Mormon church.

It was evident to us that the Mormons are deeply wounded by the death of Joe and Hyrum Smith. They regard their deaths as unmerited, and the manner of killing them as bordering upon savage barbarity; they look for vengeance, in some way or other, upon the assassins, and many of them we believe, would cheerfully take the work into their own hands, were it not that they, and in fact, the whole people are restrained by fear of consequences. They are fully aware of the hostility of the community against them, and they believe that any overt act of theirs would draw upon them and their property the power of the surrounding counties. Their affection for Joe is as great as it has been represented, and the influence and control of the leaders over the mass, is unbounded. We saw no evidence of a disposition to outbreak, on the contrary, every manifestation was of a peaceful character; but under all these professions, there was evidently a deep feeling of injury and an acute sense of the wrongs which they believe they have suffered. This feeling may, and for a time will be kept down by their fears and the influence and counsel of their leaders; but it will not be forgotten, and cannot be eradicated. They will endeavor not to be the first aggressors, for it is not to their interest to be, but they will not probably regret a safe occasion to vent their feelings.

They have built up a considerable town in a very brief period. They claim a population in the city of about fifteen thousand, and we suppose they have at least ten thousand. The buildings are scattered over a wide space, extending along the river bank five or six miles, and back into the country three and four miles. With the exception of the growth of the city, there are but few other evidences of industry or enterprise among them. They appear to have but few work-shops or manufactories of any kind, and a stranger is puzzled to determine how they obtain the means of subsistence. There is at this time, a great scarcity of provisions among them, and the surrounding country is but little, if any better provided. These difficulties add greatly to the pressure of their condition. Their usual employments are in many instances suspended, and if the excitement continues long there will be a great amount of individual suffering.

There are a number of persons residing in the city who are not Mormons, or connected with the church. From several of these, we learned many things in relation to former events, and the present condition of the people. Several of the seceding Mormons have houses and other property in the city which thus far, have been guarded and protected. A strict police is kept up, and during the night, guards patrol the city; the avenues to the city during the night, are also guarded.

On our return we stopped at Warsaw, where the State commissioners were joined by Col. Wood, the Mayor of Quincy, and Mr. Conyers. These gentlemen had returned from Nauvoo through Carthage, and had been laboring to establish peace between the parties. The people of Hancock county, however appear to be averse to any compromise, short of the removal of the Mormons from the county. They assert that it is now absolutely necessary to peace and quietness, that either the Mormons or Citizens quit the county; and that sooner or later one must go, even if force be necessary to accomplish it. Mr. Jones one of the commissioners, addressed the citizens of Warsaw, and called upon them to say whether they would support the Governor in enforcing the law and upholding the constitution, and they unanimously refused to give the pledge. The same evening a Mr. Skinner, of Carthage, who professed to speak in the name of the citizens of Hancock, uttered the same sentiment. He deprecated as impossible the idea of settlement if the Mormons were to remain. A committee of the citizens waited upon Governor Ford, informing him of their fixed conviction, that it was necessary one of the parties should leave the county, and desiring him to decide. The Governor replied that it was not for him to decide such a question, or to order any body of citizens whether Mormons or anti-mormons, out of the county or state.

From the feeling evinced by the most active in the anti-Mormon ranks, we came to the conclusion, that nothing but a dread of consequences would prevent further outbreaks. The flame has been smothered for a time, but the fire has not been quenched, and slight causes may make it burst forth more fiercely than before.

Governor Ford has a most arduous duty to perform. Of his ability to discharge it, we will not now speak. At our latest dates, he was still at Quincy, and avowed the intention of maintaining the ascendancy of the law at all hazards. He has dismissed all the troops, and they have returned to their homes.

HURRICANE—LOSS OF LIFE AND PROPERTY.

We are indebted to Mr. Meegan, clerk of the steamboat St. Croix, for his attention in furnishing us with upriver papers—some of which the Bloomington (Iowa) Herald, of Friday last, contains the particulars of a most destructive whirlwind. That paper says:

On Wednesday evening last, one of the most destructive hurricanes or whirlwinds, with which our country has ever been visited, passed through our Territory—a little north of this place, carrying death and desolation with it. The morn of that day was as pleasant as usual, a very gentle breeze playing with the leaves, and a cloud occasionally shutting the sun from view; but in the afternoon, a dark angry looking cloud, covering the whole north-eastern horizon, seemed to stand still, while from the south a very severe gale was constantly blowing. As at a signal, the cloud started from the position it had so long maintained, and in a few moments the rain was pouring down in torrents and so continued for 20 or 30 minutes when it ceased, and about this time, after a very short calm, a strong gale was blowing in the opposite direction from which it came before. But this was not the place for its horrors. We have learned but few particulars, and they truly melancholy.

At about six o'clock, a whirlwind, raking a space of half a mile in width, passed through the Centre, or Randall's Grove, about twelve miles above this place, with such force as to tear down the dwelling of Mr. Randall, built of heavy logs, killing Mrs. Randall instantly and seriously injuring her son, a young man of 22 or 23 years of age. We also learn that within a few miles of Tipton, Cedar county, the residence of Mr. Mudge, (we believe that to be the name) was blown to the ground, dangerously wounding Mr. M., and injuring four or five of his family. In its course, it tore down five or six houses in the same vicinity, and left neither tree nor fence standing behind it. It crossed the Mississippi a few miles above Cordova, Ill., tearing down a barn unroofing a residence, and twisting off the trees at the ground, but without the loss of life, we believe.

What destruction was done between these points, or how far it extended, we know not, but fear it is great, and many lives have been lost. A hotel at Moline, at the head of Rock Island, Ill., was struck by lightning, injuring four or five persons.

Destructive Conflagration.—A letter from Trebizonde, of March 10th, contains the following information:

Reshid, the capital of the rich province of Ghilan, Persia, has been the scene of a calamitous conflagration, which has consumed its bazars, and several vast khans filled with merchandise. The property destroyed is valued at two and a quarter millions of dollars. The consequences to the commerce between Persia and Europe cannot fail to be injurious.

The province of Ghilan consist of a long narrow plain, confined between a range of mountains, penetrable by only a few passes, and the Caspian sea. Its soil is of great fertility, producing large crops of wheat, rice, and other varieties of grain; but the staple production is silk. All the Persian silks of a superior quality, sold in Europe, come from Reshid. The city is built in the midst of a forest, and contains about two thousand houses. It is situated two leagues from the Caspian Sea, on which it has a harbor, unsafe in stormy weather. Its prin-capital commerce consists of silk and cotton stuffs and in druge. A treaty of peace between the Russians and Persians was signed there in 1732.

Dreadful Accident at Williamsburg, Va.—Six children were killed on Friday evening last, and one badly hurt, by the caving of a bank of earth in North Second street near the junction of Second St. Williamsburg. It appears that they were playing beneath the bank, when it gave way, and buried them under many tons of earth. A ship from the Williamsburg Democrat says: "Vigorous men, with spades, were instantly at work, and succeeded in rescuing alive the adopted daughter of Mr. Cleveland, ferry master, named Ella Higgins, who is now able to speak, although horribly bruised and deprived of an eye. The other six were dead before the men at work reached them. One is the daughter of Mr. Paul, druggist, aged 9 years; three are children of Mr. Lewis Jones, carpenter, of Grand St., aged about 9 and 6 years, and one about 18 months, a daughter of Geo. Darlington, aged 4 or five; the sixth is Della Spencer, aged we learn, 14 years, daughter of a laboring man."

The Flood in the Mississippi—The Ohio running upstream.—The Cincinnati Atlas of Tuesday last, says a gentleman who reached that city the day previous from New Orleans, reports that the extraordinary flood in the Mississippi has backed up and completely reversed the current of the Ohio, from its mouth to Smithland Ky., a distance of more than 60 miles! Such a reversal of the waters of the Ohio was never before known. Boats on the downward trip, between Smithland and the Mouth land, now down stream, instead of rounding too, as usual.

Great fears are entertained that the immense floods of the Missouri, Arkansas, and Red River, and other tributaries, all pouring into the Mississippi at the same time, may occasion great devastation at New Orleans and other places below.

Tornado—Eight houses blown down.—Two steamers injured—Timber blown down.—We learn by the officers of the Sea Bird, arrived at our wharf from below, that a tornado swept over the country bordering on the Ohio river on Saturday last, devastating whole clusters of timber to an extent not yet known. At Smithfield four or five buildings were blown down, and the Sultan lying at the wharf, had both her chimneys carried away. At Paducah three or four houses were blown over. The Sea Bird lost her pilot house three miles above New Madrid. It is feared that immense damages have been done to the country below Smithland. We did not hear that there were any lives lost, but from the accounts which we gather of the violence of the storm, we should not be surprised to hear so by the next arrival.—Cincinnati (O.) May 31.

Disgraceful Riot in Baltimore.—There was a false alarm of fire about half past seven o'clock, says the Clipper, on Wednesday Evening which took several of the fire companies to the western section of the city. On reaching the corner of Eutaw and Lexington streets, a volley of brickbats were thrown at the New Market Fire Company by a number of boys, who apparently had charge of the riot of the Independent. This led to a general melee, in which brickbats were thrown in every direction, pistols fired, and windows broken the apothecary store of Dr. Wm. K. Orrick, on the corner of Eutaw and Lexington streets having a number of window panes broken. Besides one of the sashes. A colored man named Wm. Jones was arrested.

PETRIFACTION.

In the Post of Wednesday I see the following notice:

"Mr. Kennedy, in his late work on Texas, says one of the most remarkable natural curiosities in Texas, is a petrified forest, near the head of the Pecos River. It consists of several hundred trees, in an erect position, turned to stone. These now growing are partially petrified. This is a startling fact for the natural philosophers, and must cause them to modify the existing theory of petrification."

The philosophy of petrification, as taught in the electric philosophy and science of the day, is simply this: "Petrification is an electric effect, and takes place whenever the electric condition of the medium, be it air or water, and of the matter, be it flesh or vegetable matter, necessarily demand it. The old theory of slow decay and a regularly floating of silicious matter is now exploded. Matter, vegetable and animal, is found turned to stone in the air, as well as in the water and earth. We have rocky sand hills, pieces of pitch pine with the turpentine, the refuse of the worm, and the color of smoke made when in a partially consumed state, turned to silex. Centres are formed in all chemical changes to more dense formation, or more fine and rapid circulation, and the result is as to the fineness and density, depending on other things being the same, on the conditions specified. There is but one element, the electric fluid, and all formations on the analytic method, are resolvable into it, and on the synthetic created by it. The air around and water in the earth, as it regards these 'trees,' are such as that when the trees, from age, acquire a certain consistency, millions of centres are formed, and the result follows. See Prof. Hare's Dec. 1840—Olcott's Animal Electricity.

Who are the "Natives."—The whole of the races that people the broad territory of this republic, wherever born, are one and indivisible. They are one race—one people—foreigners and adventurers are they all. All came here to better their condition, and the only unaltered, God-Almighty made native of this land is the poor Indian that we have robbed and plundered of his patrimony.

Edna Burritt, the learned Blacksmith, has a better fancy of the steam horse, than I remember to have met elsewhere before. This is his way of describing him.

"I love to see one of these huge creatures, with sinews of brass and muscles of iron, strut forth from his smoky stable, and snuffing the long train of cars with a dozen snoring pulls from his iron nostrils, fall gently back into his harness. There he stands, champing and foaming upon the iron track, his great heart a furnace of glowing coals; his lymphatic blood is boiling in his veins; the strength of a thousand horses is nerving his sinews—he pants to be gone. He would 'snake' St. Peter's across the desert of Sahara, if he could be fairly hitched to it, but there is a little sober-eyed, tobacco-chewing man in the saddle, who holds him in with one finger, and can take away his breath in a moment, should he grow restive and vicious. I am always deeply interested in this man, for, be grunted as he may be with coal diluted in oil and steam, I regard him as the genius of the whole machinery, as the physical mind of that huge steam horse."

CAVES IN IOWA.

The following notice of some of the natural curiosities of Iowa we find in the Dubuque Transcript:

Mr. Editor:—I presume few of your readers are aware that we have in our immediate vicinity, one of the most remarkable natural curiosities to be found in the west. I allude to Burt's Cave, as it is called, situated between the forks of the Makoketa river and their junction, in Jackson county. Being in that neighborhood, I lately visited and explored it in company with some ladies and gentlemen, and can assure you I was well rewarded for my pains, and I should have felt that I was so, had I gone 100 miles to see it. There is not simply a cave, but three most wonderful works of nature. The first consist of a Natural Bridge, extending across a ravine through which runs a small stream. It is of limestone formation, about 30 or 40 feet in height from the bed of the creek, and of at least 100 feet span; while the rock of which it is formed is not less than 100 feet broad, the whole being beautifully arched and executed, as to speak, by nature, in the most workmanlike manner. I can scarcely conceive of a more grand and imposing object. It called forth a simultaneous burst of admiration from the whole party the moment we beheld it. It is not as high as the natural bridge in Virginia, but it is broader, and of greater span, and in some respects more wonderful. No lover of nature can behold it without admiration and astonishment.

The second object of curiosity is just below the bridge and connected with it. It consists of an immense shelf of rock rising from the left bank of the stream in the form of the segment of an arch and projecting in striking grandeur over the stream, filling the spectators with the deepest awe as he stands beneath it and gazes upward. We had no instrument for measurement, but we judged by the eye that this shelf was 200 feet in length, and projected an equal distance on a graceful curve forming one of the most sublime objects which I ever beheld. And the third curiosity which attracted our attention was the cave which opens from beneath the last named arch. The entrance is low, but soon expands in height so that a man may stand in it upright. The cave is about 30 feet wide and 600 feet long and has an outlet at each end. The stream already spoken of runs through it. It resembles the mineral caves found in this vicinity. At the lower outlet, the opening expands into a spacious amphitheatre, surrounded with huge craggy ledges, and rocks piled up in irregular and fantastic forms, while the ravine stretches away to the south, in the most romantic manner as far as the eye can reach, and through this the little murmuring and gurgling creek finds its way to the Makoketa. We also entered two other caves opening out of this ravine, but as our lights had been previously extinguished, we did not explore them. But we were of opinion that they would have amply rewarded our curiosity had we been able to penetrate their recesses. The cave is in Jackson county, 35 miles from Dubuque.

The Annual Exhibition of Paintings of the Academy of design, in New York, is now open, and is noticed in the papers of that city with considerable commendation. The Republic states, that one of the most beautiful ly finished pictures in the exhibition is by Weir—its subject, a compositor setting type. The critic writes of it knowingly, as follows:

"This picture attracts a good deal of attention, for it is unique in its way, and we doubt if Gerard Dow himself could have surpassed it. The compositor, a pale, intelligent looking young man, is in the act of anxiously regarding his copy, which seems to puzzle him by its illegibility. This work might suggest many salutary reflections to authors, on the annoyance given to compositors, by an unreadable manuscript. There is a story told of a clever compositor, who had been so perplexed during his life by typographical and written errors, that on the approach of death he wrote, with some cheerfulness, an epitaph containing these lines:

"No more shall copy bad perplex my brain,
No more shall type's foul page my eye balls strain."

THE RISE OF THE WATERS.

The rise of the waters of our great western rivers is unexampled during the present century. The Illinois river spreads over the bottom from bluff to bluff. The damage will be great.

The upper Mississippi spreads from bluff to bluff in the same manner. All the farms on the bottom are destroyed.

The Missouri river is evidently the highest. The accounts from these are truly distressing. The river is from twelve to fourteen feet in depth on all the bottoms, reaching from bluff to bluff everywhere.

The lower Mississippi is still rising by the last accounts from St. Louis, at the rate of one foot in 24 hours. Illinois town and Cahokia have been long since abandoned by their inhabitants. The steam ferry boat is passing from St. Louis to the bluff—a distance of ten miles. The lower part of St. Louis submerged. Brooklyn (north St. Louis) is flooded, and the inhabitants have applied to the St. Louis authorities for relief.

The Missouri river is said to have made another mouth for the discharge of its waters—coming in to the Mississippi about 12 miles above Alton. It is now making across at the rate of ten miles an hour.

A rise of fifteen feet in the Arkansas river is reported by the Alex. Scott, and the previous information with respect to the inundation of many towns on the lower Mississippi confirmed.

Lakes Huron and Superior.—The estimated expense of constructing a canal 12 feet deep and 100 feet wide, in the most substantial manner, connecting lakes Huron and Superior, is $454,107.66. Its length will be about a mile. One of the bills before Congress contains an appropriation for this object. The canal is intended to be large enough to admit the passage of steamers of 600 tons.

From Halifax.—Large Halifax papers contain the following intelligence.

The ship of the line Illustrious, and several other ships of war at Halifax, were about to proceed to Havana for the purpose of protecting British interest in the Island of Cuba.

The ship Saladin, from Valparaiso, Feb. 27, bound to London, laden with guano manure, 60 tons of copper and $8500 in money, was run ashore at Island Harbor on the 20th, without officers. The survivors of the crew reported that the Captain, McKenzie, died about the 5th, and also the mate, that the second mate and two men were lost by falling from the yard arm, and that the six remaining men were unable to navigate the ship, and she consequently came ashore; so far from her regular track. Suspicious circumstances had come to light, to throw discredit on the story told by the survivors. Twelve vessels arrived at Halifax on the morning of the 25th, of which four were from Great Britain and one from Ireland.

THE TROUBLE IN ST. DOMINGO.

Correspondence of N. Y. Express.
Aux Cayes, April 29, 1844.

This is and is again suffering the horrors of civil war. The Spanish part of the island, so called, have raised the standard of revolt, and the President left Port Au Prince six weeks since, with an army to quell the insurrection. They had a battle at Atwar, two days' march from the city of San Domingo. They took possession of the town, which was given up to the soldiers for pillage, and the inhabitants, men, women and children to massacre. I saw a letter after the battle stating that the President did not think that the women and children would be murdered, but he could not restrain the soldiers.

The French Commandant at San Domingo, hearing this, went to Atwar, it possible, to settle the difficulties, and remonstrated with the President about the horrible massacre, and stated to him that such cruelties would not be permitted by civilized nations. The President promised that it should not again be permitted. The army of the President consisted of about fifteen thousand men, with two pieces of cannon. The Commandant then visited the Spanish army, so called. He could make no arrangements with them. They were determined to fight until the whole army was annihilated, if they were not victorious. Their army consisted of about six thousand infantry, a large body of cavalry, and six pieces of cannon. The army was encamped six miles without the walls of the city. A battle had undoubtedly been fought, but the result we have not yet learned.

The blacks in the plains of Aux Cayes taking advantage of the absence of the President, with his army, collected a large force and took possession of the city. A battle was fought between the blacks and the national guard on the 31st inst., and the city surrendered on the 4th. The two Generals who commanded the National Guard, Auguste and Colon, were black men. They led their troops into an ambush, and there defeated with the black troops they had with them, leaving about two hundred malattoes to withstand an army of four thousand or five thousand blacks. About thirty of the Generals were killed and some wounded. Very few of the blacks were killed. A great part of the colored population fled on board the shipping in the harbor, and a great part of them went to Jamaica. The Government of the colored population was great beyond description, and indeed no foreigner felt himself secure at the time the city was taken, until he was on board some vessel in the outer harbor. No one was willing to risk his life among the infuriated company of half-drunken blacks. The army of the blacks are now at St. Louis, opposed by an army under Gen. Zelaya, at Aquin.

May 1. I have just heard that a battle has been fought at Aquin, and a great many of the blacks were killed. But the blacks having a much larger army, took possession of the town and commenced a general massacre of malattoes, women and children. Yesterday they commenced taking most of the malattoes men and women who had not fled, and committed them to prison. I fear the result. I fear there will eventually be a general massacre.

FROM TEXAS.

By the New Orleans papers we have Galveston dates to the 11th of May.

The exports from the port of Galveston, for the quarter ending first of May, amounted to $2,279,550, and the importations were $1,452,254-15.

The United States frigate Potomac, Com. Condit, from Peasecola, arrived off Galveston on the 20th inst., and sent in her launch. On the 21st inst., an engagement took place between a party of Mexican traders, on their way, as is believed, from Texas with goods, and a company under one Pena, with a commission from General Wolf to suppress smuggling into Mexico from Texas. Pena and fifteen of his company were killed in the action. The traders sustained no loss. The attack was begun by Pena on a portion of the traders who were in advance of their companions, when the main body came up, the assailants retreated, but were pursued and the number killed added. The traders numbered about ninety—the other party between forty and fifty. The affair took place about 70 miles N.W. of Corpus Christi.

It is stated that in order to prevent goods from being introduced into Mexico duty free, the authorities are willing to issue commissions to who apply, and allow the whole amount of goods seized to be returned by the captives. Such however, is said to be the only thing of the people to pay the heavy duties exacted by the Government, that they occasionally band themselves together in strong parties, determined to resist any interference with their operations.

It is stated that Mr. Thompson, who has gone to Mexico upon the steamer Parley, is charged with important negotiations from the United States. Two millions of the indemnity due and acknowledged to the United States remain unpaid, while four millions more of claim, the justice of which is said to be undoubted, remain unadjusted, for the payment of all of which, in some way, the American Government is said to be unwilling longer to wait, as justice to her citizens has long since demanded that they should be satisfied. It is reported that the United States Government is no longer willing to admit the claim of Mexico to Texas, yet a very liberal allowance to be paid by the assumption on the part of the United States of debts due by her citizens to Mexico would be made for the relinquishment by Mexico, of her title to the territory in dispute between her and Texas, including all ever claimed by this Government.

THE OREGON EXPEDITION.

We learn from the Western Examiner printed at Independence, Missouri, that the Oregon emigrants started from their place of general rendezvous at the "Lone Elm," on the 14th ult., and that although they had been gone upwards of two weeks, they had, in consequence of high waters, only travelled about one hundred miles. The Examiner gives the following particulars, which are of general interest:

Major Moses Harris, a native of Union county, South Carolina, is their pilot; and Col. Nathaniel Ford, of Howard Co. Mo. is captain of the company. There are several small parties on their route, which have not yet reached Col. Ford's company, embracing in all 27 families, numbering about 125 souls. They also have 10 wagons, 130 cattle and some few horses. In Col. Ford's company there are 51 wagons, 503 head of cattle, 60 horses, and 28 mules.

There are a good many on the route who have reached Col. Ford's company by this time. The aggregate strength of Col. Ford's company, with those who may have reached him by this time, may therefore be set down as follows: 55 married men, with their wives, 110 Their children, 53 boys and 85 girls 163 Single men, 353

When all are together, there will be about 61 wagons, 610 head of cattle, 65 horses and 20 mules—quite a number. Col. Ford's company, it is thought, will reach Gen. Gilliam's in about two weeks, the latter having crossed the river near Fort Leavenworth, and is now encamped on the Nishnaberry, waiting on Col. Ford's company.

In Gen. Gilliam's company, there are 18 families, 108 men, 60 of whom are young men, 167 children, in all 323 persons. There are also in his company 72 wagons, 713 cattle, 54 horses and eleven mules. The two companies when united will number as follows:

103 married men and their wives,	206
Their children,	336
Single men,	140
Total	670

136 wagons, 119 horses, 41 mules, and 1,333 cattle. There were a good many families who came on here for the purpose of going to Oregon, but changed their route and have gone to Texas. This it is said, was in consequence of the supposed annexation of Texas to the Union.

The Oregon emigrants are well supplied with provisions, and if no unlooked for accident happens them, will reach their place of destination about the 1st of October.

A few days after the Oregon emigrants took up their line of march, one of the ladies, Mrs. Shook, gave birth to a fine boy, who was at once fitted out with the flourishing name of Oregon Snooks!

FATAL AFFRAY.

Coroner Pratt held an inquest on Sunday, on the body of James Gorman, who resided with his family in Hancock Key, near Marshall street. He died yesterday morning, and the cause of his death was blows received in Sudbury street, Saturday afternoon between five and six o'clock, from Charles Greenleaf, a teamster from Roxbury, near the stable of Mr. Laverne. It seems that Greenleaf came in to get a load of manure from Meacham's stable, near the northern hay stack, and engaged Gorman to assist in loading the wagon, agreeing to pay him thirty seven and a half cents for his services. The work being done Greenleaf would not pay him but twenty five cents. Gorman remonstrated, but Greenleaf refused to pay him and was followed by Gorman to Sudbury street, the latter still asking for his pay. Not receiving any satisfaction from Greenleaf, he took hold of his horses, when Greenleaf with a stick some three feet long, said to be a cart or wagon stake, struck Gorman twice on the arm and then once on the head, felling him to the ground and fracturing his skull, besides inflicting other injuries. Greenleaf then went on his way.

Gorman was taken home in a senseless state, thence to the Hospital, and back again to his house yesterday morning, it being found that nothing could be done for him. He died soon after his return, leaving a wife and five children. Greenleaf was arrested yesterday forenoon at Roxbury, and committed to jail. He has a wife and two children.—Boston Bee.

The Grand Jury and the Late Riots.

The Grand Inquest of the city and county of Philadelphia have been sedulously engaged in the investigation of the late riots since the subject was committed to them by Judge Parsons. A great number of highly respectable witnesses have been examined before them, subpoenas for the attendance of others have been issued, presentments have from day to day been made to the Court, but the purpose of the same have not been publicly announced. Writs have been issued, and other steps taken in relation to the matter, and the present indications are that the guilty parties, those who murdered citizens and those who fired churches, will be ferreted out and brought to justice.

has a great effect upon the countenance. It is a foe to wrinkles of all kinds. A woman lately died at Peoria, over 70 years of age, and it said her face was as smooth and her skin as soft as a young girl's. But she was a quiet, tranquil, cheerful creature; care never troubled her, and she had never been known to frown. Verily indeed, "How noiseless falls the foot of time, When it only treads on flowers."

From Trinidad.—Accounts from Trinidad state that rain had been falling there almost incessantly for months. Vessels were compelled to leave without cargo, as little or no sugar could be made. Barbadoes and the other windward islands have suffered from the same cause.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPBELL LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally, Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

POETRY.

BALLAD.—From Faust.

BY C. D. STUART.

I was a cottage, rich and low,
Which stood beside the way,
Where often round the window door
In summer hours I used to play.

And well, ah! I remember well
The two sweet babes, her only joy,
And how they grew like tender flowers—
A fair haired girl—a gentle boy.

From now it comes, their merry laugh,
And fancy rings it in my ear,
Though cold the earth that veils the forms
Of all that bound the widow here.

They grew till Youth's sweet flush had set
Its light among their sunny smiles,
When Death spread forth his chilly wing,
And made them captive to his wiles.

Down yonder in the grassy mead,
Where swelt the brook's clear waters lave,
Strange bands the Seraph Singers bore,
And hid them softly in the grave.

And I was there—for I had seen
Their blooming cheeks from day to day,
Had rocked them in their cradle bed,
Who now beneath the willows lay.

Like two twin buds the frost had nipt
Their deep was calm and beautiful,
And as I knelt above their grave,
My beating heart was overfall.

Few words were said, few tears were left,
For, oh! the widow's heart was broke;
And all its rushing blood had dried Beneath the burning of that stroke.

And to their couch one calm, clear eve,
Beyond the widow's cot I stayed,
And sat me down beside the turf
'Nath which those gentle ones were laid.

She too was there—the warm and pale,
A watcher by the gray bed;
But pointing up, she whispered low,
"They are not dead, they are not dead."

Looked, and lo! between the clouds
Two silvery stars were peering bright,
And something like an angel said,
"They dwell beyond, in Glory's light."

A year—and sleeping side by side,
The widow and her children lay,
And grass and flowers above them grew
Where summer winds were wont to play.

Oh wandering there, my heart would turn
To those dear words the widow said,
And I repeated o'er the grave,
"They are not dead, they are not dead."

For lo! I saw thro' opening clouds
One silvery light had joined the twins;
It was the Widow's Evening Star,
For she was with her own again.

THE CHEROKEE ALPHABET.

The myth of the discovery of the Alphabet by Cadmus may after all be no fable but a sober fact, for within our times a similar discovery has been made under circumstances of at least as much difficulty by a person too, who was of a race from whom least of all it might have been expected. The Indian languages being peculiar in their character and structure, possessing sounds which an European finds it difficult even to imitate, far less to express, it seemed almost impossible to adapt to them the Roman character. They have, for example, deep gutturals and aspirates to which no letter or combination of letters can be applied, and therefore it seems that the various attempts of the Protestant missionary & of the Catholic Society de propaganda in addressing the Indians by books, had so signally failed. To the Indian, reading and writing had seemed as it did to Deglery, to come by the grace of God, and he looked at the mysterious lines traced by the white man upon the scroll as we would upon the hieroglyphics of an ancient monarch. This idea seemed to be universal to the natives of the whole hemisphere. The Caciques encountered by Oglea in Hayti, the Inca and the Mexican Emperor had all shared this idea with Opechankanough, and every chieftain, who, until our own times, had made himself remarkable. Some twenty years ago, however, a Cherokee, of the full blood or nearly so, by dint of constant pondering upon this miraculous gift of God to the whites, conceived the possibility of inventing a similar system for his countrymen.

The first thought upon which he dwelt was to express the various syllabic sounds by the figure of a beast, or natural object whose cry most nearly resembled it. Upon analyzing, these however, he discovered that they could not be reduced to a less number than seventy-four or five, and that he would have the greatest difficulty then in expressing them by symbols. Convinced that this would be impracticable, he next succeeded in carrying yet farther his analysis from syllables to simple sounds. His next object was to find characters for them, which, simple and easy as it may appear to us, was no easy task. In this, chance assisted him. At the store of "the trader," he found a piece of printed paper, whose characters he adopted arbitrarily to express his simple sounds, to form his Alphabet. From the mingling of Arabic numerals and Roman letters, this piece of paper appears to have contained a statistical table, for more than one of the numerals, is used to express a vocal sound, and we have been told that the 8 expressed, in the first attempts at an alphabet, some vowel sound. The alphabet was formed and secretly tested by Guess alone. A great difficulty yet remained, to impart it to his countrymen. Upon a council-day Guess appeared in his place; the ordinary business having been finished, he announced his achievement. The Indian seldom smiles and yet more rarely laughs, but one burst of derision arose from the assembly, such a one perhaps as greeted Copernicus when he announced his important theory.

He was treated unanimously as a madman, driven from his position, and his discovery was on the point of being lost. With much trouble, however, he persuaded a daughter to attend to him, and imparted quickly his art.

At length he persuaded the council to hear him, once more, and going into it, requested that it might be tested. At the dictation of the council he wrote down a sentence, in all probability on a piece of the inner bark of the beech tree. This was taken to his daughter by one of the Conscript fathers of the nation and read at once by her. But a moment before, her father was all but lost. He was now hailed as one of the Nation's saviors. Before long a font of types was cast for the Cherokee nation, and at New Echota, in Georgia, the first number of the Cherokee Phoenix was printed, and within eighteen months a correspondence between that part of the nation beyond the Mississippi and the part in Georgia was instituted. Guess, four years ago, was living honored and wealthy, a member of one of the courts of the nation, and with his grand children and family living around him. He is a partisan of John Ross.

Closely connected with the history of the Cherokee Alphabet is that of Elias Boudinot. Of his early life but little is known, except that he was a half-blood and educated with more care than his countrymen of that day usually were; that he married an educated and refined woman from one of the eastern States, who became the mother of his family, and identified herself entirely with his own interests and those of his tribe. When the state of Georgia began her unholy persecution of his people, looking at matters with different ideas from those which had taken possession of the other chiefs of the tribe, he saw no other alternative for the salvation of the Cherokee but to seek a new home and under more favorable auspices to build up a new edifice. Whether he was right or wrong in these opinions he was certainly honest; but he had violated one of the fundamental laws of the nation, which allied the penalty of death to even offering to sell any of the Cherokee lands. This may seem unreasonable, but upon reflection its justice will soon be apparent; were it legal even to talk of the traffic of Indian lands, these simple minded beings would be continually deluded by the swarms of slavers that hover around them, and before long the Indian would have no resting place. For violating this law, by proposing in the national council, in Georgia to relinquish their possessions, immediately on the removal of their people to Arkansas, where for the first time the supremacy of the Cherokee law was acknowledged, Boudinot was arraigned, and not appearing before the council, with his coadjutors, the Ridge, who had participated in all his deliberations, was sentenced to death. The sentence was executed, a sad necessity, regretted by the chiefs of the very party which thought it its duty to carry it into effect.

Under the guidance and auspices of Boudinot, the Cherokee Phoenix became an able paper and a talented expounder of the demands and rights of the Cherokee people, and gave an impetus to the desire for information which has not yet passed away. Boudinot was one of those men whose death we can but lament, though we cannot censure his execution.

PHILADELPHIA RIOTS.

On Saturday last, the Grand Jury of the city and county of Philadelphia made their presentation to the court of Quarter Sessions. Judge Parsons adjls, the Philadelphia Gazette, told the Grand Jury, that the court had read the presentation with great satisfaction, and were much obliged to them for the labor they had taken in preparing it; that they approved of the report entirely. On the subject of the late disgraceful riots, the Grand Jury made the following statements:

"The Grand Jury have been instructed by the court, to enquire into the origin and cause which led to the recent gross violations of law, and to present the first and last aggressors, if possible. Upon this branch of inquiry, and from all the facts which came under their notice, they have come to the following conclusions:

First.—That the origin of these riots may be attributed to the very imperfect manner in which the laws have been executed by the constituted authorities of the city and county of Philadelphia, for several years past, and more especially in the district of Kensington, crime having met with little rebuke and scarcely any punishment. Emboldened by this impunity, the abandoned and vicious have been encouraged to hold the law in contempt.

Second.—To the efforts of a portion of the community to exclude the Bible from our Public Schools—the Jury are of opinion that these efforts in some measure gave rise to the formation of a new party, which called and held meetings in the district of Kensington, in the peaceful exercise of the sacred rights and privileges guaranteed to every citizen by the constitution and laws of our State and country. These meetings were rudely disturbed and fired upon by a band of lawless irresponsible men, some of whom had resided in our country only for a short time. This outrage, causing the death of a number of our unoffending citizens, led to immediate retaliation, and was followed up by subsequent acts of aggression, in violation and open defiance of all law.

Acts of violence similar in character, though not equal in disaster to those which now press so painfully upon our attention, have thus become matters of frequent occurrence; the life, peace and property of the well disposed citizens have been left to the mercies of the vile and lawless.

The disturbance of public meetings, for political, moral or social purposes, as well as those of a religious character, cannot be too severely condemned. The right of all mankind to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and that of peaceably assembling for the expression of their opinions upon public affairs, is of the highest importance, and should be fully protected. It is a fact worthy of particular notice, that the most destructive riots, at various periods for some years past, have originated in an unjust and grossly unreasonable disposition to suppress these rights, justly deemed of the highest magnitude by the founders of our liberties.

In the course of their investigation the Jury have noticed the names of many persons connected with the late riots who had been implicated in similar scenes in the days of the late sheriff. And it is a question difficult to answer on satisfactory grounds, how these men have so long set at defiance our courts of justice, whose strong arm should be safely relied upon, promptly to rebuke and punish crimes which have disgraced us as a civilized community.

In further pursuance of their duty the Jury have presented to the Court various individuals as connected with offences springing out of those scenes of tumult and bloodshed. It is hoped that prompt action in regard to these presentments will secure to the offenders their merited punishment.

The Jury was also instructed to inquire whether the officers in the city and county, entrusted with the execution of the law, have faithfully performed their duties during the recent riots. In pursuance of the duty thus devolved, much testimony has been taken, and upon an attentive consideration of the evidence introduced before them, the Jury are compelled to the conclusion, that if the Police Magistrate of the district of Kensington, and the Sheriff of the city and county of Philadelphia, had been more energetic and efficient, many lives might have been spared and much valuable property saved from destruction. It may be that these officers will be able to show that they have done all that was possible for them, under the circumstances, to perform; but judging as the Jury necessarily must, from the ex parte proof before them, they are of opinion that the conduct of these officers should receive a full, fair, and legal investigation by the appropriate tribunals of the country.

The Jury in responding to the opinion of the Court that our government, if faithfully administered, is sufficiently energetic and powerful; deem it proper to refer to the fact that a doubt has heretofore and still exists as to the extent of the powers of the Sheriff.

The imperfect organization of the Police force of the city, and incorporated districts to suppress any popular outbreak has been so often noticed by previous Grand Juries, and has been so often witnessed, that to speak of it now is a work of supererogation. It is however manifest, to every reflecting mind, that the time has arrived when the security of the public peace and the preservation of life and property in this community, imperatively demand such a re-organization of the present police force, as will be competent to ensure these ends; and to render such force effective, its jurisdiction must extend over the city and county alike, and be subordinate to one head.

THE NEWLY DISCOVERED WEST COUNTRY.

In our last publication we gave the sailor Harris's description of the fine country traversed by himself and Cummings, and occupying so considerable a portion of the hitherto almost unknown region intervening between Fowler Bay and Port Lincoln. The particulars of the adventurous journey, as narrated by Cummings, have since obtained publicity through the intervention of Matthew Smith, Esq. The narrations are very similar; but the latter embraces some additional and important particulars.

It is confidently rumored that his Excellency intends forthwith to visit Port Lincoln and that he will send a party thence to explore the good country thus brought to light by those singular and unexpected incidents which mark the progress of discovery in Australia. The principles of concentration has hitherto been unjustly prejudicial to Port Lincoln, and we sincerely hope that the excitement produced by recent events will not be permitted to subside until some decisive step is taken by the colonial government; convinced as we are that the importance of that immense district has never yet been sufficiently appreciated even by the most sanguine proprietor of the special survey of Boston Bay.—Monk's Herald.

A Painful Leap and Narrow Escape.

The Northampton Democrat of June 4th contains an account of a curious but perilous accident which occurred a few days since in that vicinity. On Friday morning last, at the Silk Factory of the Northampton Association, a building four stories in height, George Washington Sullivan, a young man connected with that Association, went out on the roof for the purpose of picking up a mineral which he had accidentally dropped there while standing in the belfry. To secure himself from falling, he took off his shoes. Notwithstanding this precaution, after descending the roof a few steps, finding himself slipping, he took off one of his stockings, but whilst attempting to take off the other, his motion became so much accelerated that further efforts to save himself from falling, were useless.

He then with remarkable presence of mind, rolled himself over upon the roof whilst he was sliding, in order to prevent falling upon the platform, and when he reached the eaves, having first drawn in and held his breath, clenched his teeth and hands, and contracted his muscles, he leaped to the ground, a distance of 40 or 50 feet! The concussion was so great as temporarily to deprive him of the power of standing. He was carried into the house and placed in bed, and was soon after examined by a surgeon, who decided that no bones were broken and no joints dislocated, although there was reason to apprehend serious injury to the muscles about the spine, where there appeared to be great soreness. The young man's friends then wrapped him in sheets wet with cold water, after the manner prescribed by the "water cure" system, which soon produced perspiration. A cold bath was afterwards administered. In the afternoon of the same day, he walked out without assistance, and the next day was running about with his usual hilarity, complaining of no unpleasant effects from his fall excepting a slight lameness in one of his feet! A remarkable fact connected with this occurrence is that symptoms of serious disease with which he was previously suffering, have since in a great measure disappeared. It seems as if the change of action which was produced in so unusual a manner has been salutary, and that instead of so frightful an accident being fatal in its effects, as might be expected, it has been the means of restoring him to health.

FARTHER MEXICAN NEWS.

In the hurry of looking over our files, brought on Monday by the Mexican steamer Perilla, we did not observe an official notice in the Diario del Gobierno of the 14th ult. in relation to the Congress which has been ordered to hold an extraordinary session on the first of the present month. The decree of Senor de Bocanegra, Minister of Foreign Relations, and which has been approved by Valentin Canalizo, the acting President, sets forth that the time of the Congress will be occupied on the following important points:

First. In receiving the oath of the President so that he can enter at once upon the duties of his office.

Second. In giving to the Government the power to increase the army, and furnishing the necessary means for so doing.

Third. In empowering the government to procure ample pecuniary means, and every thing else which may be deemed necessary, in order that Mexico may recover Texas and preserve the entire National domain.

Fourth. In taking in to consideration every thing that the Government may send to the Congress, to the end that the Republic may be secured and its Independence and honor preserved.

Such is the substance of the measures which will occupy the time of the extraordinary session of Congress of the first of June. In the mean time, it was recommended that the Deputies should hold preliminary meetings and consultations.

The special messenger of the Mexican Government, who went through our city on Monday, en route for Washington, met Santa Ana as he was coming down from Vera Cruz. The President was on his way to the City of Mexico.

We have heard it rumored that the Mexican Government had heard of the contemplated movement of Gen. Sentinaga, and had sent two or three vessels to the coast of Tobasco to cut him off.

The Diario is filled, for the most part, with Government documents, and articles upon the all-engrossing subject of the Annexation of Texas to the United States. The Mexican Editors, one and all, say that Texas always was and always shall be part and parcel of that Republic, and that the people will contend to the death before an inch of territory will be relinquished.

Gen. Tornel has resigned his station as Minister of War and Marine. A new Minister will be appointed on the arrival of Santa Ana at the capital.

The cura of San Borja, a small town in the State of Chihuahua, with two other individuals, recently were killed by the daring Apaches.

The Voz de Michoacan gives the particulars of a successful balloon ascension at Patzcuaro, on the 15th of April, by Capt. D. Benito Leon Acosta, a young Mexican, and the only one, we believe, who ever attempted any thing of the kind. The aeronaut was afterwards received at the theatre with warm plaudits. [N.O. Pic.]

NEWS FROM THE COLUMBIA RIVER EXPLORING PARTY.

A letter was received on Wednesday by the Department of State at Washington from Thomas O. Larkin, U. S. Consul at Monterey, covering the following very interesting communication from J. A. Sutter, the Alcalde of the new town of New Helvetia, on the river Sacramento, one of the new branches of the San Francisco. All parties by land from the Oregon, or from the United States to California, touch at this establishment first, most of the emigrants on land from the States since 1840 have settled near Mr. Sutter.

The following is the letter:

New Helvetia, March 26th, 1844.

Sir: On the 6th instant Lieut. J. C. Fremont, of the United States Exploring Expedition, arrived here in distress, having been forced to deviate from his course on account of deep snows, loss of animals, and want of provisions; he informed of having left the Columbia river, a short distance from Fort Vancouver, with the intention of crossing to the head waters of the Arkansas river eastward, through the lower or Southern part of the Oregon Territory, but finding a succession of high mountains covered with snow, which, with the distressed condition of his company, forced him to abandon his route and strike for the settlements of California, reit, and cross the mountains farther to the South. On the morning of the 25th instant, he left here direct for the United States; his party consisted of twenty-five men. The visit of this exploring expedition I attribute entirely to accident; for a month previous to their arrival, the company had subsisted entirely on horse and mule flesh; the starvation and fatigue they had endured rendered them truly deplorable objects.

(Signed) J. A. SUTTER.

Thos. O. Larkin, Esq.
U. S. Consul, Monterey, California.
Lieut. Fremont, through the kindness of Mr. Sutter, obtained the supplies of provisions, mules and horses that he required for proceeding on his homeward route.

THE TOMB OF WASHINGTON.

The remains of the old family vault are about 300 yards to the south of the Mansion—the removal of which, though contemplated by Washington for some time previous to his death, did not take place until an attempt was made, many years ago, to desecrate the remains of the illustrious deceased. At that time the vault was entered, and a skull and some other bones carried off. The robber however was discovered, and the treasure surrendered, which proved to constitute no part of the remains of Washington.

In 1831, a new tomb was constructed on the spot long before selected by Gen. Washington. The structure is exceedingly simple, the walls being built of brick, and arched over, eight feet above the level of the ground. The front of the tomb has a plain iron door, over which is a stone panel, bearing this inscription:—

"I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

In 1837, the vault was enlarged in order to prepare it for the reception of the beautiful Sarcophagus presented by John Struthers, Esq. of Philadelphia. Upon its removal at that time, a silver plate was found upon the leaden coffin on which was inscribed:—

"George Washington—Born February 22, 1732. Died, Dec. 14, 1799."

The Sarcophagus alluded to, is of modern form, being formed from a solid block of marble 8 feet in length, 3 in width, and 2 in height, resting on a plinth, which projects about 4 inches round the base. The lid is a block of Italian marble, bearing the arms and insignia of the U. S. States. The design represents a shield, divided into 13 stripes, which rests on our flag, and is attached by strong cords to a spear, embellished with tassels, forming a back ground to the shield, by which it is supported. The crest is an eagle with open wings, perched upon the superior bar of the shield; and in the act of clutching the arrows and olive branch. Between these armorial bearings and the foot of the coffin, upon the plain field of the lid, is the bold and deeply sculptured name of "WASHINGTON." On the foot of the coffin is also inscribed the following:—"By permission of Lawrence Lewis, Esq., this Sarcophagus of Washington was presented by John Struthers, of Philadelphia."

The remains of Mrs. Washington are now deposited in a marble coffin, sculptured in a plain manner, and occupies the space on the left of the entrance to tomb. It is mentioned as an incident honorable alike to all parties, that during the late war with Great Britain, while the fleet was descending the Potomac, in passing Mount Vernon, the officers and men uncovered their heads, lowered their flags, and fired minute guns as a token of veneration for the memory of Washington. "It was," said a somewhat veteran looking man, who spoke of the incident in our hearing, "a noble notion of a noble race." [Auburn J.]

The Flood.—The river has risen about twelve inches since yesterday at noon, and is still rising. The water is in all the stores above Locust street, from three inches to three feet in depth, and the sidewalk is not visible above Olive street.

"Within the memory of one of our oldest inhabitants," Mr. Cerre, the river has been about six feet above its present level. This was in 1785.—From present appearances the river will rise several inches higher, and an incalculable amount of injury be done, above and below this place.

The officers of the latan report a rise of six or seven feet yet to come down the Missouri, and suppose that there will be a rise here of at least two feet. St. Louis Transcript.

PHILADELPHIA MOB!

PHILADELPHIA,
Sunday, July 7th.

Dear Sir:—I am sorry to inform you of another tremendous outbreak among the Natives and the Irish. You have Friday's news by the papers, on Saturday morning at an early hour, the natives, numbering some thousands, gathered in front of St. Philip's Church, and continued there till midnight. This morning, Sunday, they again gathered, and there was great excitement among them.

11 o'clock, there is not less than 5,000 Natives on the ground, they had 3 pieces of cannon stationed in front of the Church, and demanded possession of it. The Irish Greens a volunteer company composed of Catholics, were placed in the Church to protect it, but it was no go; the Natives were too strong for them—they sent in a volley of stones, and the Greens in return, fired on them; report says one dead and two wounded, one of the wounded was an Irish Green. The mob, now, 12 o'clock, are in search of the captain of the Greens, but have not succeeded in finding him. The mob went back to the church and said it must be burnt.

2 o'clock.—The church is in the hands of Lewis C. Levin, editor of the Sun, who is making a speech to the Natives, and hopes that they will disperse, they cheer him, and are somewhat quieted. Two American flags are placed in front of the steps; the mob says that is no place for the stars and stripes, and they were immediately removed. The crowd rushed into the church, and completely gutted it, tore up the seats, &c.

4 o'clock.—An alarm of fire—they say the church is on fire, but it is a false alarm. The military are about 1500 strong. The State House bell rings eight times. That is the signal for the Peace Police to turn out, which is composed of citizens. They are at the place of meeting in a few minutes, awaiting for commands from Headquarters. Things remain in this state till dark.

3 o'clock.—Military and companies in from the country. They will now number 3000, and are on their march to the church.

9 o'clock.—They are on the ground, and have commenced action. They have fired on the Natives with their field pieces; report says, that six are killed and as many more mortally wounded. Among the killed is one woman.

10 o'clock.—There is a continual firing of cannon, muskets, rifles and pistols. The whole city is in an uproar; none knows where it will end. They are afraid the city will be fired. Report says about

ONE HUNDRED KILLED, AND MORE THAN THAT NUMBER WOUNDED!

Now five minutes of twelve.

FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE PHILADELPHIA RIOTS.

Order once more restored.—By the Philadelphia papers of yesterday morning, it appears that the withdrawing of the military from the scene of the riot, and the substitution of the civic authority of the district, has had the promised effect of restoring order. The United States Gazette says:

It is impossible to say, but for this movement, what might have been the consequence. It is certain that a war of extermination was meant to have been waged upon the military. No less than three thousand people (we really believe) were under arms in the district. They had, beyond doubt, at least six cannons; there was not a store in the district from which all the ammunition had not been purchased during the morning. Their threats were of the most fearful character; a spirit of determined resistance to the constituted authorities was every where evinced, and energetic measures were taken by them to procure cannon, in order to attack the military, who were doomed by them to certain destruction, unless they quitted the district, and gave it up to the charge of the civil authorities.

About ten o'clock an exceedingly large meeting—certainly not less than 5 or 6,000 people—was organized at the lower end of Wharton Market, and resolutions were passed in favor of the vacation of the district by the military. Meantime, the Aldermen of the district had united in the expression of a similar desire, in writing, addressed to the Sheriff. The Commissioners also met, and resolved to address the Sheriff, and to state to him that in their opinion the peace of the district would be promoted by a substitution of the Peace Police of the Sheriff for the military. An inquiry was made whether the district could preserve the property without the military, and an answer was received stating it a conviction of the writers that the property would be entirely safe in the hands of the Peace Police and the District Police.

An interview was had between the Sheriff, Aldermen Palmer and Sanders, and Judges King and Jones, by which it was determined to accede to this request, and that the Sheriff would be justifiable in acceding, under the circumstances. Aldermen Sanders and Palmer immediately after this decision started down to the church in a carriage, but the news of the determination of the civil authorities reached the church before them, and the military took up their line of march to the arsenal, and when the Aldermen reached the church they found it in possession of a self-appointed body of citizens.

The Aldermen, assisted by Mr. Grover, Mr. Penrose Ash, and other popular citizens, immediately commenced the organization of an effective peace police; and this had been effected, and all was quiet, as early as three o'clock in the afternoon.

Gov. Porter arrived in the city by the afternoon line from Harrisburg.

We have thus given a hasty sketch of the proceedings of the day. It yet remains to speak of the killed and wounded in the encounter on Sunday night. Queen street, from Second to Third, presents a melancholy spectacle. The windows of the buildings shattered by the heavy concussion of the guns, and the doors and shutters riddled and torn with grape shot.

Col. R. K. Scott, of the Cadwalader Grays, is pronounced to be out of danger. The ball was extracted yesterday morning, and found to have lodged inside of his left shoulder, and not in his spine as previously reported.

Several balls passed through Gen. Cadwalader's coat, but did not injure him in the least. It is said that at least ten bullet holes are torn in his uniform. His escape is wonderful, for he was constantly in dangerous positions, notwithstanding the fearful threat of vengeance upon him by the mob. A gallows was actually erected at Wharton market for the purpose of hanging him if he should be taken.

The corps of Germantown Blues stood their ground gallantly, and though exposed with the companies of Germantown Artillery, Cadwalader Grays, and the first company of State Fencibles, to a raking fire from Queen and Third streets did their duty like men.

All these companies behaved with perfect coolness and intrepidity, all the efforts of the mob could not shake their front for an instant.

The following items are from the Ledger and other papers of yesterday morning.

About 5 P. M.—Two or three Irishmen in the vicinity of Queen and Third streets, who were heard to express violent language, were roughly treated by the mob.

In the evening, some three thousand military in all, were under arms at their armories, the arsenal, &c. A large civil force had also been enrolled.

Half past eight o'clock, P. M.—At half past six o'clock, P. M., there were not more than four hundred persons in the immediate vicinity of the church in Queen street. The church was in the possession of a large body of the police of the district of Southwark, headed by the constituted authorities. They wore white badges, with the proper designation printed upon them.

The indications generally gave assurance that the worst was over, and that no farther outbreak was intended.

The different companies of horse patrolled the city and districts all the evening.

All is quiet. There are some collections of persons in front of the State House, and in the neighborhood of the riots the crowds are many, but not very large.

In the building and yard of the Girard Bank, a large number of troops from the country are stationed, ready for an emergency.

Half past 10 o'clock.—All is quiet. The Natives have several pieces of cannon in the Wharton Market, and are clustered strong. They openly say they are only waiting for the military. They are well-organized—have appointed officers, and are in good drill. There will not be any occasion for their preparations. So long as the present quiet remains, the military will not remove from their quarters.

Eleven o'clock.—There are very few persons in the vicinity of the St. Philip de Neri Church, Queen and Third streets. The authorities have control of the church and district, and there does not appear the slightest disposition to violate the arrangement so amicably entered upon. A general order has just been issued by Governor Porter. It points out decisively the course to be pursued by the constituted authorities.

Shortly after midnight, two parties of boys were seen approaching St. Paul's Church, at Tenth and Christian streets, apparently with the intention of attacking it. They were stopped when at some distance from it, by Dr. Stratford and others, and questioned as to their intentions. Finding that they were of a hostile character, Dr. S. addressed them at some length, and succeeded in getting them to disperse.

Another party had in their possession a gun mounted upon a dray, which they were dragging toward the church. These were also stopped, and prevailed upon to retire. Beyond this, no demonstration of violence was made in any part of the district.

At midnight, in the vicinity of St. Philip's Church, every thing was perfectly quiet—but few persons were in the streets, and the citizen police were gathered in and about the church to protect it from assault, if any should be made. Every turbulent feeling seemed subdued, and the fearful riot is now apparently at an end.

We find the following letter in the Baltimore Patriot of the 10th inst. Philadelphia, 9th inst. 3 1-2 P. M. Since this publication this morning, nothing of particular moment has transpired. A large police and military force continues on duty.

The Governor's orders, issued this morning, have astonished many; although his Excellency would be rather pacific. But he comes out boldly.

The Natives continue to strengthen their forces in the lower sections of the county, and openly say that if the military approach they will resist them to the death.

Some two thousand troops, horse and foot, are here from the country, ready and determined in case they are called upon to do service. With them it would be different than with the volunteers, who had friends and brothers in the people's ranks on the pavements and amongst the crowds.

The rumor now is that Gov. Porter will send the troops into Southwark this evening. Should it prove true there will be a terrible fight, for there seems to be an evident disposition on the part of the Natives to have all in their own way.

The Philadelphia North American, of the 9th inst., gives the following list of killed and wounded:

Killed.—Enos Waters, Wm. Crozier, Fairfield, Fred. Capt. Teal, John Cook, Jam. Dougherty, Gerhard Ehleres, Sergeant Guyer, Corporal Troutman and three others, names unknown. Total 14.

Wounded.—Col. Pleasanton, Capt. R. K. Scott, James Linsinger, T. C. Saunders, David Kitcher, Wm. Manning, James W. Barr, John Husted, Eliza Jester, James R. Tully, Warner, Grey, Mrs. Lis'e, Wm. Bangs, Dr. Appleton, John Quin, Lemuel Paynter, T. D. Grover, Joseph Silby, Henry Slack, Thomas Faulkner, James Lawson, Edward McGuire, Thomas Street, H. Jones, Frost, Croy, Sergeants Starr and Marsten, privates Russell, Morrison, Ashworth, Waterhouse, Williams, Ball, Woodridge, Dougherty, McCarron and Crawford, and five or six others. Total, 50.

Governor Porter has issued an energetic proclamation, in which he states, that "orders have been issued to the major generals of the several nearest divisions, to have all the volunteer companies under their command in readiness to march at a moment's notice;" and he gives the assurance, that if the riots be renewed, the whole military force of Philadelphia, and that ordered to be in readiness, shall be employed to restore peace. He correctly observes, that "if the laws cannot be maintained without the use of force, then force becomes as much an act of patriotism as of duty, and must be applied when the awful necessity arises."

The requisition from Philadelphia for the aid of the U. S. troops in quelling the riot, not coming from the Governor of the State, could not, of course, be complied with by the Executive. The President, on the occasion, reiterated the determination to be governed by the Constitution in all cases!

From the St. Louis Gazette.

SPIRIT OF "MOBOCRACY."

It is fearful to contemplate the consequences to our common country, of the spirit of lawlessness and outrage which now pervades the length and breadth of our land. Momently does the blighting simoon gather strength, threatening in its course every fair institution, and every trait of moral advancement of which it might have been our pride to boast. This state of things cannot surely exist without a prevailing cause adequate to its production; a common cause, or rather common, causes, effecting alike the inhabitant of the densely crowded city, and of the sparsely settled frontier. What these are, it should be our duty to enquire.

And in the first place, it seems to us, that the evil of which we have so much cause to complain, is in some degree attributable to a want of confidence in the justice and efficiency of our statutes, and judicial tribunals.—A supposition that, under existing laws, the guilty and the innocent are likely to suffer, or escape, each about in the same ratio; or in other words, that the innocent suffer with the guilty, and the guilty escape with the innocent, almost without distinction, making justice a mockery, and law a reproach,—this supposition, which has alas too much foundation, has caused the mass to despise law and order, and substitute therefore the erring dictates of popular prejudice and passion.

It cannot be expected that our laws will be perfect any more than those who frame or administer them. Particularly in the infancy of our national existence must these laws be other than best fitted to our wants and capacities. But we have a remedy within ourselves, and if we do not apply it, we must not blame the genius of our institutions. The laws emanate from the people or are freely adopted by them. Now it requires no argument to show, that if bad or insufficient laws been framed or adopted, the remedy is at hand. If in the hurry of forming a judiciary, we have based our legal code on the absurd, contradictory and tyrannical laws of a country from which our fathers were driven by oppression, let us abrogate these laws, and enact new ones. But let it not be forgotten that despotism is less destructive of social good than anarchy. Until our laws are remodeled and perfected, let us obey them as they are. A partial law may be but a partial good, but the absence of all law cannot but be productive of unmitigated evil.

We cannot but think that the principles of law should be made an element of popular education. We are well aware, that the objection stares us in the face, that the so-called Science as it now exists is almost devoid of any thing like principle, and that the task would be, as its commencement, an unenviable one. If such be the fact, however, the greater is the necessity for the undertaking. The wheat should be winnowed from the chaff, and the chaff given to the wind. A people whose proud task it is to frame the laws by which they themselves are governed, should most assuredly understand the principles on such laws are based.

We shall again advert to this subject.

ROWDIES IN BOSTON.

The good city of Boston "disgraced itself," as the Times says, by endeavoring to break up, or interrupt the proceedings of a Mormon convention held in that city on the 1st of July. We shall give the particulars with suitable remarks in our next.

MOB! MOB!! MOB!!!

Appalling as it is, we have to give more particulars of mobbery in the once goodly city of Loving brothers, Philadelphia. Fourteen years experience in the horrors of persecution, mob violence, and the signs of the times, which the junior Editor of this paper, has had in four states, has not left him destitute of feeling, reflection, hope, anticipation, or sorrow for a day of retribution,—of vengeance as a whirlwind from the Almighty! But the people sit in darkness, and seem determined to leave the government to its own destruction, while, under a pretence of falling back upon their reserved rights, they butcher each other with impunity.

O Liberty where hast thou fled?—Has the Lamb opened the second seal, spoken of by John the Revelator, and given the rider on the red horse the great sword, and power to take peace from the earth? If such is the fact, the people will kill one another, until the cities are wasted. One of the strangest circumstances of this fury among the people, is, that the mob party seek to "exterminate" their opposers. Condition, country, kindred, and compromise are terms that have lost their utility; sounds that die at the cannon's mouth; and bubbles that drift off among the flood wood of high water and lodge in the gulph of fallen nature. Oh! men, women and children, of the once delightful United States, why shed your own blood?—Why oppress one another? Why resist your own laws? Why will ye die by your own hands? Shame, shame on your boasted government if it has no protection! What will become of your beautiful cities; splendid towns, and wide spreading conveniences? Ah! let me tell you, as a friend that would rather enjoy peace than gold or diamonds, that unless you "cease from all evil and learn to do well," your country and government shall speedily be a heap of ruins; your cities tenantless, and your houses desolate. Summon virtue, subpoena sense, try violence and jealousy and mulct them in sufficient damages to keep the peace; and bind all mobs in bonds as strong as death, and the golden days of right will return: otherwise not. Desperate cases require desperate doses. Every inch given to a mob will cost a mile of means and life. Up! up! and sweep away the refuge of lies; break the covenant with death, and destroy the league with hell, or you will be trodden down—for the scourge will go forth and take you and your wickedness—morning by morning it shall pass over you; and day and night it shall waste the inhabitants of the land; so that it shall be a vexation only to understand the report—for I have heard from the Lord of Hosts, that a consumption is determined upon the whole earth.—For particulars of the Philadelphia mob see another column,—and for a remedy, let every man who meddles with his neighbor's rights and privileges, be transported to the Islands of the heathens—as Great Britain has done with her convicts.—bad men can be tamed in that way and learn from necessity how to feel for others, as well as themselves. Experientia docet.

The Osprey.—We are happy to say that "the Osprey," the most regular steamer packet upon our shores, has recently received a thorough repair, and render her one of the best crafts of conveyance on the great Mississippi. She will leave St. Louis on Friday next, and arrive at this city on Sunday morning, at her usual hour. The Messrs. Andersons for their perseverance, punctuality and plausibility as masters of said boat, deserve the patronage, and confidence of the public. Accommodation begets accommodation, as easy as "merit wins the prize."

POLITICAL.

There is such a tact among parties at the present day, to ridicule by names, that we have thought, among the "softs" and "hards," Locofoco, Whigs, Polks; and Clay, which squashify the dignity of American freemen, a couple of names might be used that would just touch the case of such lawless politicians as compose many of the Locofoco and Clay clubs:

I tell thee what, they are the "Lokes," Who now would live by raising Polks; And as to Fed'ral, Whig or Clay, From pressing Curds, they are the "Whys."

Now those will fall for want of ballast, By holding on to Polk and Dallas; And these will dip of gangrene poison, Caught from Clay and Frelinghuysen!

WHAT IS TO BECOME OF MOR-MONISM.

In the intervals of excitement and enquiry regarding the riots at Philadelphia, the question is eagerly asked on all hands, "What will become of Mormonism now? Joe Smith is dead—probably butchered in cold blood, while a secure prisoner, and without the power, even if he had the will, to offer provocation for violence; but Mormonism has not died with him. Gross and monstrous as the delusions and perhaps the abominations practiced in the name of that faith, yet it is a vital, living thing. Men and women made of the same sort of flesh and blood, and actuated by similar sensations and passions, as Protestants, Catholics, Methodists, or whatsoever creed or worship the sun shines upon, do actually believe in this Mormonism—are content to live and to die by it—to yield up worldly wealth, domestic ties, and the strong bonds of love of Native land, for it; and thus feeling and thus believing, to their dimmed and distorted spiritual vision Joe Smith is as much the Martyr Hero as any whose shadow has ever fallen upon the world. The blood of Joe Smith, spilled by murderous hands, will be like the fabled dragon's teeth sown broad cast, that everywhere sprang up armed men.

We would prefer to be mistaken; but we look for further and bloodier histories from Nauvoo! The conduct of the Mormon chiefs, since the murder of their Prophet, shows plainly enough that there are cool, stern, controlling, powerful minds among them; that they have learned either from history or their own instincts, the great lesson to hide their time; and the cut-throat enthusiasm which thought to exterminate a City and a Creed will be wretchedly deceived. It may be—it is indeed very likely—that in a formal declared war the Mormons will at least get the worst of it and be destroyed, but what a series of horrors does not this conclusion presuppose!—[N. Y. Tribune.]

Well said Mr. Greeley: Pure religion always did hide its time; and while their is a line of prophecy unfulfilled upon the sacred pages of THUS SAITH THE LORD, you and all men, will be witnesses, that honest believers will live by it, and die by it; and be resurrected by it; and finally reign with Christ upon this earth a thousand years by it, when there will be none to shed their blood.—

Traitors and tyrants will then fight in vain. Death cannot conquer the hero again.

THE TROUBLES AT NAUVOO.

We begin almost to fear that the terrible scenes of cruelty, devastation of peaceful homes and indiscriminate hunting down of men, women and children, which disgraced Missouri a few years since, during the expulsion of the Mormons from that State, are to be re-enacted in Illinois. The history of these deeds has never been, and probably never will be written; but enough of their atrocities has been heard from casual recitals of eye and ear witnesses to make the soul sick with horror at their contemplation. We are not the apologists of Joe Smith. We are not the mummeries of Mormonism; we are ready to admit that the existence of that sect in the shape which it would seem Smith is bent on imparting to it, is fraught with danger, and should be looked to by the proper power; but in the name of common humanity we stand up for the lives and security of helpless women and innocent children. The executives of Illinois and Missouri have had loud and fair warning, by the meetings in Carthage, Warsaw and St. Louis, of the dreadful scheme of arson and assassination that is going on to exterminate the Mormons; and if they permit the monstrous crime of the sacking of a city, the murder of men in cold blood, and the sacrifice of women and children to the demonic fury of an inflamed mob, they will not, they cannot be held guiltless.

There are other means by which the course of the Mormons, if unlawful or destructive of the rights of others, can be restrained and punished; but even if there be no immediate legal redress, are murder, rapine, desolation, the brand of civil war hurled among those who should be friends and neighbors—are these a suitable substitute for a little time and patience? Let the citizens of Illinois look to their votes when next they approach the ballot box, and examine well for whom and for what principles they are cast, and they can restore the Government of their State to hands, that will remove their grievances and reassure them in their rights, much more speedily than they can rebuild one log hut sacrificed to brutal war, or alone for the blood of a single human victim.—[N. Y. Tribune.]

These sober thoughts are from the Tribune also, and in a tone that cannot be misunderstood; they speak:

"In thoughts that breathe, and words that burn, That men in high places, with the dreadful threats and moves of the mob before them, who have not taken the necessary measures to stop 'extermination' and the shedding of innocent blood, are guilty, and all men, and God, and angels know such is the fact. Talk of outbreaks and aggression! Who has made the first step in every case? Let him that is without sin cast the first stone."

Millerism.—Many people have supposed that the Millerites and Millerism, had dropped into the gulph of fallan nature, where vanity, foolish inventions, and idle speculations, have been tumbling in for ages, but such is not the case; Miller, and the strong ones hold on, and though they have no assurance when the end of the world will be, still they wait, and mean to wait and continue to "wait," till it comes. The firmness, faith, and folly of this sect, considering the prophecies of scripture yet future, surpasseth common understanding; Mr. Miller though completely vanquished, frustrated, and baffled in his calculations twice, further discourses on this wise, viz:—

The events in the history of the world, and the signs of the times all assure us that the end is near.

The prophetic periods, as we have understood them from the first, bring us to the same result. Indeed we have felt for more than a year past, that their termination might be expected at any time; and although there may appear to be a delay of the events which are then to come, we are confident that our views of these periods are based upon data and interpretations which no man has been able to overthrow. It is true we have been called to wait beyond the definite time at which it was supposed there was reason to expect the end would come! But we believe as fully as ever, that those periods express the time of that event, that at the time appointed the end shall be, and that it cannot be far distant in the future.

Well may it be said, "the gullibility of this generation, is as wide as a barn door, and thousands get sucked in!" for as a long drouth exhales and wastes the moisture of the earth, so has a want of prophetic rays expelled the reason of men, and there is commencing a famine for hearing the truth.

From the Mo. Rep'n. Lib'n.

The Sufferers by the Flood.—We have heard of many cases in which individuals have suffered great loss of lands by the recent flood. In one case a respectable, and once a wealthy farmer, on the Missouri, has lost two thousand acres of land; that is, it is rendered entirely useless for the present; and for years to come. In places, large deep holes have been gouged out or dug up, and the sand is carried and deposited on another part. These deposits, in some cases, are ten feet deep. Some idea may be formed of the great depth of the deposits by the river, by observing the amount of deposit at the foot of the cross streets, Front street, and upon the wharf.

A few days ago we suggested that the General Government should give some relief to those whose lands have been destroyed or seriously damaged by the flood, as was done in the case of the lands destroyed or injured by the earthquakes at New Madrid in 1812. These men purchased their lands from the United States—a general calamity has rendered them valueless, and the United States Government could well afford to give other lands in lieu of these destroyed.

At the same time, we suggested the propriety of the legislature of the state relieving the sufferers from the payment of state and county taxes, for a given period—say one, two, or three years. There is to our minds a manifest propriety in throwing off all taxes from lands which have been destroyed or greatly injured by this flood. Besides the injuries to the lands, many persons have saved little, some nothing, and to enforce and collect a tax from such, will increase their distress. There are hundreds of families, who, in former years, have been large tax-payers; that now have scarcely the means to subsist till their next crop comes round. Their crops for this and the past year are gone—their lands rendered unprofitable, and portions of stock and fragments of property saved, will not be more than sufficient—in many instances not sufficient—to procure for them the necessities of life until another season comes round, and another crop is raised.

We recur to the subject now for the reason that upon the eve of an election seems to be an appropriate time to press the consideration of it on all, and especially upon the candidates for those offices which will have to act upon the subject. Its importance and its justice we confidently believe, will commend it to the favor of men of all parties, and of all political faiths. We hope the press will consider these propositions, and if any other more feasible can be devised, we are ready to second them. Our knowledge of the injury done convinces us that the subject requires legislative action.

Very merciful, indeed, for the flood sufferers! The Republican is certainly waking up to the cries of humanity. One step further, Mr. Editor, and a noble work will commence: From 1831 to 1839, about 15,000 Mormons suffered similarly by a mob instead of a flood. They lost much land, cattle, and property in the same "infected," unfortunate, or troubled district; and now, if the General Government and State Legislature, will go the "clean thing," according to the Republican's suggestion, and serve the Mormon and Missourians equal, by "repeal" for the Mormon land was entered, or purchased from the United States, then there will be two good deeds done, without partiality. Perhaps the Republican did not think of this second part of charity, when he penned the above but now his pure mind is stirred up by way of remembrance, no doubt he will go in for the benefit of all suffering citizens of Missouri, or the United States, law or no law, with a patriotic determination to sustain every man's rights alike. Mob, flood, or famine, brings ruin, and no honest men ought to extend the hand of charity. Hurra for St. Louis! a spur in the head is worth two in the heel.

TWO MINUTES IN JAIL.

Possibly the following events, occupied near three minutes, but I think only about two, and have penned them for the gratification of many friends.

Carthage June 27th, 1844.

A shower of musket balls were thrown up the stair way against the door of the prison in the second story, followed by many rapid footsteps. While Generals Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Mr. Taylor, and myself, who were in the front chamber, closed the door of our room, against the entry at the head of the stairs, and placed ourselves against it, there being no lock on the door and no key that was useable. The door is a common panel, and as soon as we heard the feet at the stairs head, a ball was sent through the door, which passed between us, and showed that our enemies were desperadoes, and we must change our position. Gen. Joseph Smith, Mr. Taylor, and myself sprang back to the front part of the room, and Gen. Hyrum Smith retreated two-thirds across the chamber directly in front of and facing the door. A ball was sent through the door which hit Hyrum on the side of his nose when he fell backwards extended at length without moving his feet. From the holes in his vest, (the day was warm and no one had their coats on but myself,) pantaloons, drawers and shirt, it appears evident that a ball must have been thrown from without, through the window, which entered his back on the right side and passing through lodged against his watch which was in his right vest pocket completely pulverizing the crystal and forcing the hands and mashing the whole body of the watch, at the same instant the ball from the door entered his nose. As he struck the floor he exclaimed emphatically, "I'm a dead man." Joseph looked towards him, and responded, "O dear! Brother Hyrum!" and opening the door two or three inches with his left hand, discharged one barrel of a six shooter (Pistol) at random in the entry from whence a ball grazed Hyrum's breast, and entering his throat, passed into his head, while other muskets were aimed at him, and some balls hit him. Joseph continued snapping his revolver, round the casing of the door into the space as before, three barrels of which missed fire while Mr. Taylor with a walking stick stood by his side and knocked down the bayonets and muskets, which were constantly discharging through the door way, while I stood by him, ready to lend any assistance, with another stick, but could not come within striking distance, without going directly before the muzzle of the guns. When the revolver failed, we had no more fire arms, and expecting an immediate rush of the mob, and the door way full of muskets—half way in the room, and no hope but instant death from within: Mr. Taylor rushed into the window, which is some fifteen or twenty feet from the ground. When his body was nearly on a balance, a ball from the door within entered his leg, and a ball from without struck his watch, a patent lever, in his vest pocket, near the left breast, and smashed it in "pieces," leaving the hands standing 5 o'clock, 16 minutes, and 26 seconds—the force of which ball threw him back on the floor, and he rolled under the bed which stood by his side, where he lay motionless, the mob from the door continuing to fire upon him, cutting away a piece of flesh from his left hip as large as a man's hand, and were hindered only by my knocking down their muzzles with a stick; while they continued to reach their guns into the room, probably left handed, and aimed their discharge so far around as almost to reach us in the corner of the room to where we retreated and dodged, and then I re-commenced the attack with my stick again. Joseph attempted as the last resort, to leap the same window from whence Mr. Taylor fell, when two balls pierced him from the door, and one entered his right breast from without, and he fell outward exclaiming, "O Lord my God!" As his feet went out of the window my head went in, the balls whistling all around. He fell on his left side a dead man. At this instant the cry was raised, "He's leaped the window!" and I leaped on the stairs and in the entry ran out. I withdrew from the window, thinking it of no use to leap out on a hundred bayonets, then around Gen. Smith's body. Not satisfied with this I again reached my head out of the window and watched some seconds, to see if there were any signs of life, regardless of my own determined to see the end of him I loved, being fully satisfied that he was dead, with a hundred men near the body and more coming round the corner of the jail, and expecting a return to our room I rushed towards the prison door, at the head of the stairs, and through the entry from whence the firing had proceeded, to learn if the doors into the prison were open. When near the entry, Mr. Taylor called out "take me!" I pressed my way till I found all doors unbarred, returning instantly caught Mr. Taylor under my arm, and rushed by the stairs into the dungeon, or inner prison, stretched him on the floor and covered him with a bed in such a manner, as not likely to be perceived, expecting an immediate return of the mob. I said to Mr. Taylor, this is a hard case to lay you on the floor, but if your wounds are not fatal I want you to live to tell the story. I expected to be shot the next moment, and stood before the door awaiting the onset.

From an old Paper.

The following Sermon was written for a respectable New York Audience, and will serve for any place.

SHORT PATTENT SERMON, BY SECTARIUS JUN.

"The cloak which I left at Troas bring with thee."

These are the words of the great Apostle of the gentiles, and are doubtless the word of God; and as God does not take care for cloaks, there must be a mystical meaning; therefore, my hearers, I have chosen this portion of the sacred word, for my text this morning, and may they be attended with power to every heart, in the divine presence.

This text naturally divides itself into four heads:—

First, we shall consider the cloak.

Secondly, the Troas from which it was to be brought;

Thirdly, the messenger who brought it, and lastly, the act of bringing it, and its use.

Firstly, then, to begin. The cloak is a robe of imputed righteousness, prepared for those who have no righteousness of their own; a cloak for their sins. O my hearers, do we not all need a cloak for our sins? if so it must come from Troas, for we poor sinners have no righteousness of our own, and except we have imputed righteousness, we must stand naked with our sins all exposed, and the devil, with his lake of fire, stands waiting for us, ah, ah! awful ah! will be our case ah.

Secondly, we must consider the Troas. Now this Troas, my hearers, must mean heaven, because heaven is the place from which imputed righteousness is brought ah.

And O ye sinners! would you not like Paul feel a desire ah, to have imputed righteousness brought from heaven ah! Think ah, O think ah, ye poor sinners hardened wretches ah! think, I say, how many lies you have told ah; how many ah, times ah, you have broken the Sabbath ah, think ah, of ah, the poor you have oppressed ah, the goods you have stolen ah, and of the many times you have cheated your neighbor ah. Think of the many scenes of debauchery in which you are often engaged ah, and think ah, that you are still engaged in all these and ten thousand other sins ah; and that you never can do any better ah; but will be just such creatures as long as you not live ah. O ye wretches, will you not need a cloak from Troas ah! A mantle ah of imputed righteousness ah, to cover up ah this sink of iniquity ah! O me thinks it will be an awful time for those who have no cloak from Troas ah.

Thirdly, we shall consider the Minister who is to bring the cloak from Troas ah.

This my hearers, is no less than the pious Ministers who are engaged in the holy work of bringing imputed righteousness from heaven ah, to cover up poor naked sinners ah; yes these are the Timothy's ah, who feel ah, constrained ah, to tell poor sinners ah, that they can do nothing, of these yes ah, but to continue to live and cheat and steal ah, and to commit fornication ah, and all kind of abomination ah, and that they must have a cloak from Troas ah, to cover ah their sins ah, or they will look horribly naked ah, and will be no better off than poor impenitent sinners ah.

Fourthly and lastly, ah, we shall consider the act of bringing the cloak from Troas ah. O my poor hearers, ah! have you not often witnessed some poor minister ah, in the act of sweating ah, and toiling ah, and laboring ah, with his heart brim full of cloaks from Troas ah;

to cover ah poor sinners ah; yes poor self-denying missionaries of the cross ah. How they toil ah, for poor sinners ah; they are called from their dear homes, and from their quiet fire side ah, and from wife and children ah, and from all things dear to their heart ah, and have to get into their carriage ah, and ride a mile or two ah, and labor in the pulpit for half an hour ah; and some times this repeated two or three times a week ah, and some times for the piteous sum of one or two thousand dollars a year ah; and then, O the persecutions they have to endure ah, and some hardened wretches even dare to say they preach for money ah, and all this they must endure to bring cloaks from Troas, to cover ah the iniquity of poor sinners ah.

O sinners! sinners!! let us all speak for a cloak from Troas ah.

There was old Deacon Longface ah, whose pious heart was desperately wicked, and deceitful above all things ah; his righteousness was like filthy rags ah; he was full of rottenness and deceit ah, and spent a long life in misery and pain, in which he continually robbed the poor and oppressed the needy ah, and he cheated the hireling out of his wages ah, and the hungry and needy were turned empty from his door ah; but he was a praying man, he always attended church ah, and was faithful to pay the priest ah, and at last he died, in hope of a cloak from Troas ah, yea he died in full hope ah, that he had a hope ah. Come O sinners, come and get a cloak from Troas ah; and let our last end be like his ah, Amen.

AWFUL MURDERS AND PIRACY.

From the Halifax Nova Scotian.

The city for the past few days has been thrown into a state of feverish excitement, from rumored disclosures, by one or more of the crew of the Saladin, now confined in the county jail, of awful murders committed on board that vessel.

Two of the crew, Carr and Galloway, the cook and steward, confessed these murders to the Hon. M. Tobin, (agent for Lloyd's) in the presence of the sheriff, the jailor and subsequently, of the Attorney General. Carr, (the cook) is a native of Newcastle upon Tyne, a middle aged man. Galloway, (the steward) is a native of Galloway, Scotland, a lad about 19 years of age. Both these persons shipped at Newcastle, where the Saladin was owned, and went the whole voyage.

Several of the crew of the Saladin having deserted at Valparaiso, four of these unfortunate men now in prison were shipped at that port. One of these, a sailmaker, (a cripple), to work his passage. A Captain Fielding, whose vessel had been seized by the Chilean Government, and confiscated, for an infringement of the revenue laws of that country, with his son and about 15 years of age, took passage also. When the Saladin sailed from Valparaiso, which was sometime in February, there were on board in all, fourteen persons. About the middle of April, a plan to murder the captain, mate and a portion of the crew, was concocted by Captain Fielding and the sailmaker, who engaged the assistance of a Swede, and two others of those of the crew shipped at Valparaiso. The whole plot was planned and executed in less than 48 hours. It was on a Sunday night, in the forenoon (or mate's) watch, the mutiny broke forth.

The mate was the first victim, he was in a delicate state of health, and while reclining on the poop, he was struck with an axe, and knocked overboard, without the least noise being made. The captain's watch was then called, and the men came on deck they were knocked in the head and pitched overboard, almost without a groan. Two of the murderers then entered the cabin to dispatch the captain; but his faithful dog was beside him in the berth, and they were afraid to approach him, lest he might be aroused by his barking. Another man who came on deck, and was in the midst of chains, was split open with an axe, and he fell into the sea—his blood streaming upon the deck.

The cry was then raised, in order to draw the captain out of the cabin, of "man overboard!"—the plan succeeded, and as he ascended the companion ladder he received a blow on the head with a hammer, from one of the mutineers, when he rushed upon deck, (his antagonist retreating) but was attacked by others, and thrown overboard also. By this time the noise reached Carr, who, with Galloway, was exempt from keeping watch, he went on deck, and on inquiry what was the matter, was told what had occurred, and that he then saw before him all that remained of the crew, except Galloway, who was below. The attack was most systematic—six lives were thus taken without a struggle, even without noise, and almost without leaving a trace of murder behind.

Fielding, who appears to have been a most desperate villain, immediately after the commission of these murders became suspicious and fearful. He threw overboard all the arms and ammunition in the ship excepting a pair of loaded pistols, which he secreted under the cabin table, and a large carving knife in the possession of his son. He then proposed to Galloway to murder all the crew but two besides themselves—that they would then get the ship to land—sink her, and make their escape. Galloway would not consent to this heinous project, and told the crew of the proposal. They immediately became aroused at Fielding's treachery, and on searching for arms, suspecting his design was to reduce their numbers that he might eventually free himself altogether of accomplices; they found the secret pistols, and resolved to pitch him and his son into the sea.

The money on board was previously divided, and, as is generally the case on such occasions, the ring-leaders were not well satisfied with an equal share of the plunder. Fielding and his son were immediately tied hand and foot, and left in the cabin until the next morning, when they were thrown overboard, the former by Carr and others, (the having been obliged to act, although he expressed a wish, when he saw what had taken place on his coming on deck, that he had been thrown overboard with his messmates,) and the latter by Galloway, also against his will. They must either do this or die themselves.

After the death of Fielding, Galloway was the only navigator on board. The pirates intended to go into the St. Lawrence, scuttle the vessel, and escape with the specie and bullion, but were led astray by a wrong course given them by a captain of an American schooner, which they spoke a few days previous to the time when the vessel struck; and this is the cause, perhaps providentially, for the ends of justice, of their making land where they did.

A third person, (Johnson,) we understand, has also confessed, and corroborated the statements of Carr and Galloway.

The foregoing particulars, we believe, are nearly, if not altogether correct.—The whole affair is of so awful a character that our very blood curdles in our veins at the contemplation of it.

From the Randolph Co. (Ill.) Records.

DISGRACEFUL MURDER OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH.

One of the most disgraceful and infamous outrages ever committed in a civilized land, is the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. For the present, we forbear an expression of opinion upon the act. Our readers are already aware of the division among the Mormons—that those who separated from the Prophet, had procured a press and type, for the purpose of commencing the publication of the "Nauvoo Examiner." The paper was commenced, and Joseph Smith, in conjunction with the City Council of Nauvoo, pronounced it, by an ordinance, a public nuisance. Whereupon, Jos. Smith, Mayor and Commanding General of the Nauvoo Legion, issued his proclamation, commanding the City Marshal to execute the order of the City Council, by destroying the printing establishment from whence issued the "Nauvoo Examiner"—and at the type of the same in the street. This order was promptly executed, and due return made by the Marshal. This resulted in an arrest of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and others connected with the affair. They were severally tried and held to bail in the sum of $500 each, on a charge of riot, in destroying the aforesaid printing establishment. They procured the necessary bail, and were then set at liberty. But this did not satisfy the Counterfeiter, Horse Thieves, Gamblers, and renegades, connected with the "Nauvoo Examiner." They were immediately arrested upon a charge of treason and placed in close confinement. The arrests and proceedings took place on the 26th ult. at Carthage. The excitement of the lawless rabble about Carthage, is said to have been so great, that it required an armed force to escort the prisoners to and from the court house during the investigation. The murder of the Smiths was on the evening of the 27th, at about six o'clock. The official conduct of the Governor, in this matter, is given at length, in his proclamation, which will be found in another part of this paper. It will be seen, that the Mormons had done every thing required of them by the existing laws of the State, and submitted peaceably to the orders of the Governor, and placed themselves under the command of an officer, commissioned by him for that purpose—pledging themselves, as in duty bound, to resist any and all attempts at the violation of the public peace, and the protection of the lives and property of the citizens of Hancock county. All these surrenders could not satisfy the back-headed scoundrels congregated in the city of Nauvoo, for the sole purpose of committing depredations upon the rights of the Saints. Our limits prevent us from saying any thing more at this time but will speak upon the subject next week, and publish the ordinances referred to.

Governor Ford, of Illinois, has made a requisition on the United States Government for five hundred troops to be stationed in the neighborhood of Nauvoo, to prevent any bloodshed by the Anti-Mormons or the Mormons.—[St. Louis Reveille.]

THE BLOOD HORSE.

To the Editors of the Prairie Farmer:—Among the various objects that should engage the attention of the agriculturist of Illinois, the rearing of domestic animals must necessarily become of primary importance. In the foremost rank of these is justly placed the horse. But not withstanding the pre-eminence generally awarded to him, I fear there is less attention and interest felt by our farmers generally to improve the qualities of our horses than in almost any other of our domestic animals. I desire in what I have to say to awaken an interest in that matter, believing that it will not only be a source of pleasure but of profit to all who may pursue the proper course for improving the qualities of this kind of stock. We all know the great difference in value placed upon the different individuals of the horse kind, some being estimated at three or four times the value of others—the difference in price being caused by the great difference in appearance and qualifications for performance in different individuals. In a general way it costs no more to rear a good animal than a bad one. There is no person that would not prefer rearing a good rather than a bad one. Then why is it that there are so few good and so many indifferent? I can only account for this by supposing that most people imagine that it is a matter of chance about rearing a good horse. They have seen a fine horse the get of an indifferent sire, and a mean and worthless one got by a stallion of fine appearance—consequently it must be a matter of accident. That this is the fact from the common stock of horses in this country I freely admit. And when we consider the mongrel character of our common stock, composed as it is of all the known species of horses mingled, it is not to be wondered at that the stock possesses no identity of character.

In rearing horses, as well as any other of the domestic animals, it is necessary to have a specific object in view, and endeavor to arrive at that object by pursuing a uniform and unvarying course in breeding; by this means the horse can be bred to any desirable form, having his character so strongly established as to become a distinct breed; and capable of marking his character strongly upon any other breed with which he may be crossed. It would require a long time to establish and bring to perfection a distinct breed of the horse, and but few of us would undertake it; but all who rear horses could make an approach towards the form they desire by selecting stallions to breed from them that possess as near as possible the desirable form and character.

It may be asked what kind of horse it would be advisable for us of Illinois to rear. I will answer—a horse, having capacity for performing well in all places that may be required: Under the saddle, to the pleasure carriage, the common wagon, or the plow. I will give my idea of a perfect horse. I prefer a horse of medium size—say 15 hands high, rather short legs, large round body, short back, broad full loin, full stifles, broad hoofs, broad flat legs, pasterns moderately long and inclining at an angle of 45 degrees. His head should be fine and bony; eyes full and prominent; neck of medium length and light; shoulders deep and inclined well back. His muscles should be well developed and distinctly marked by indented lines, and his bone and tendon large. Thus much for his outward appearance. His disposition should be mild and tractable, yet generous and lively. As regards his internal organization, giving the power of long continued exertion, to one can accurately judge from outward appearance, although good judges of the horse can give a near guess. It depends, in addition to form, upon the degree of nervous excitability of that part of the brain and nervous system which influences the action of the muscles. The thoroughbred race horse possesses this nervous energy in a greater degree than any other known breed, and as this breed of horses has been brought to a high degree of perfection, and possess their peculiar characteristics and identity of character so strongly as to impart to other breeds a considerable portion of their peculiar characters, it is to this breed of horses we must look for a cross for our common stock, to obtain fine action and capacity for enduring long continued fatigue. For this purpose we should select stallions of correct form and pure blood to cross upon our good common mares. I would scrupulously require the stallion to be thoroughbred. A half-bred horse is not capable of imparting to his offspring the requisite nervous energy. This is well known to breeders of the blood horse; and it is affirmed that there never was a good race horse gotten by a stallion of impure pedigree. Two crosses of pure blood I think would be sufficient for our stock intended for general purposes. Horses that are three quarters bred generally possess more size, and their forms please the generality of persons better than the full bred. This is owing to their being more inclined to take on flesh, and their muscles being more full. Such will have sufficient stamina for all useful purposes; but still the nearer you approach full blood, the more endurance you will obtain.

York, Clark County, March 1844.

Envy.—Envy may justly be defined to be that hatred that one person hath for another from some supposed or real advantage over them. Ignorance fortifies this vice, and knowledge destroys it; because knowledge teaches us the doctrine of necessity, that things must be as they are, and therefore, we discover the folly of being envious; because to be envious of the inevitable destiny of another is to repine at our fate, which could not have been otherwise; consequently, there could have been no remedy, and this envious feeling can only be the result of the greatest ignorance. Therefore knowledge suppresses envy. Indeed, a man might as well be envious of the swiftness of a horse, the strength of an elephant, or the wings of the bird, as to be envious of the destinies of another man, which have come down through all eternity in the stream of successive causes, all things being of necessity and beyond our control.

THE GIRL WITH THE TIN PAUL.

Some sixteen years ago, I was a "prince boy" in the "City of Mud," now the goodly city of Rochester. The business of which I was obtaining a knowledge was conducted upon Exchange street, though I boarded in one of the streets in the western part of the city.

In going to my tea, I was in the habit of meeting almost every evening, for many weeks in succession, a small, well-dressed girl, with a little tin paul in her hand. At length my curiosity became excited, and I resolved to ascertain, if possible, the daily errand of the girl. Having met her the following evening, I accordingly turned upon my heel, and followed her at a distance that would not excite suspicion in any one. I at length saw her enter a small shoemaker's shop on South St. Paul Street. I subsequently learned that the shop was owned by an industrious, young man and an excellent mechanic, and that he was the girl's husband. He had been married a few months, and possessing no other capital than a good trade, a good name and a robust constitution, had resolved to economize in his rent by hiring a house in the suburbs of the city. His breakfast was always ready by daybreak, and taking his dinner with him, he saved the hour each day which most persons spend in going to and returning from that meal. Many economists would have been satisfied with the saving of as much time as this between the rising and going down of the sun; but not so with the shoemaker. He also wished to save the hour usually devoted to tea, and therefore had that meal daily taken to him by his pretty little wife. This arrangement enabled him to spend the whole of the day, and so much of the evening as he chose in the shop.

The industrious habits of the shoemaker were discovered and met with their due reward. Customers flocked in upon him, and he was obliged not only to rent a larger shop, but to employ an additional number of workmen. But the increase of business did not wean him from the plan he had early adopted for the saving of time—his third meal still having been taken to him by his wife in the little tin paul.

About this time I left the city and did not return for some twelve years. I had not, however, forgotten the shoemaker, having from my first knowledge of him, discovered the germ of success in his manner of life. I visited the spot where his old shop had stood, but it had given place to a new brick block. In vain I looked about for his sign—it was nowhere to be seen. I was at length informed by a friend, that about two years previous he had removed to Ohio.

"Do you know any thing of his circumstances?" I inquired.

"I do. In the first place he took to Ohio about five thousand dollars in cash, from three thousand of which, invested in real estate near Cincinnati, he has already realized three times that amount. The other two thousand he put into a pork establishment, and that sum has yielded him a large profit. But even had he not resorted to speculation, added my friend, he could not but have succeeded in life, so thorough were his business habits, and they were seconded by an industrious little wife."

I have recently returned from a visit to Ohio, and again seen the shoemaker and his wife. He is now in the prime of life, and possesses an ample fortune and an unsullied reputation for probity. Never having any personal acquaintance with him, I inquired him out, and introduced myself to him as a Rochesterian. This was late in the afternoon, and I very cheerfully accepted an invitation to take tea with him. Improving a moment of silence at the table I remarked:

"I fear, Mr. H., that you are not so great an economist of time as you used to be."

"Why not?" he enquired.

"When I first became acquainted with Mrs. H. you could not afford time to go to tea, and she used to carry it to you."

"In a little tin paul," said she, bursting into laughter.

"Exactly."

"Indeed, Mr. —, have you known us so long?"

"I then made myself known as the former apprentice of Mr. R., and was immediately recognised by Mrs. H. as one of her earliest street acquaintances in Rochester."

"But that tin paul—what do you think has become of it?" asked Mr. H.

"That, I suppose, has been long since numbered with the things that were," I answered.

"By no means," said he with a smile, at the same time tipping a wink to his wife.

She arose from the table and left the room, and soon returned with the identical paul, as they both assured me. I need hardly say, that it bore palpable evidences of the ravages of time.

"But what is your object, Mr. H., in preserving that paul?"

"His associations. We look upon it as one of the earliest instruments which contributed to our success in life, and as such we shall ever cherish it."

I soon afterwards took my leave of Mr. and Mrs. H. and their interesting and happy family; and not a day since then has my mind been without its remembrances of the girl and her tin paul.—Rochester Democrat.

STATES EVIDENCE.

A good story is told of George White, a notorious thief, in Worcester Co., Massachusetts. He was once arraigned for horse stealing, when it was supposed he was connected with an extensive gang, which was laying contributions upon all the stables round about. Many inducements were held out to White to reveal the names of his associates, but he maintained a dogged silence. An assurance from the court was at last obtained that he should be discharged, upon which he made oath to reveal all he knew of his accomplices. The jury were accordingly suffered to bring in a verdict of "not guilty," when he was called upon for the promised revelations. "I shall be faithful to my word," said he: "understand then that the devil is the only accomplice I ever had—we have been a great while in partnership—you have acquitted me, and you may hang him if you can catch him."

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPBOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, Insults and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.

LAMENTATION

Of a few among the afflicted and mourning Sons and Daughters of Zion, at the assassination of the Two Chief Apostles, Peter and Paul.

JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH.

These two people knowing the hour of Jehovah,

In the light of his countenance they will walk,

How can we, a people in sackcloth,

Open our lips before thee?

Thou hast rejected and slain our leaders,

Thou hast slain our fathers,

Our eyes are dim, our hearts heavy;

No place of refuge being left,

Between the people that in thee only trust.

Thou hast slain our fathers and our mothers,

Thou hast slain our fathers and our mothers,

Thou hast slain our fathers and our mothers,

Thou hast slain our fathers and our mothers,

Thou hast slain our fathers and our mothers,

CONFESSION OF GEORGE DENNY,

CONVICTED OF THE MURDER

OF ABRAHAM WANZER.

I am about 18 years of age; I was born in Punham county. My mother died when I was an infant, as I am informed, insane. My father abandoned his wife and children a short time before my birth, unprovided for and unprotected.

When I arrived at the age of eight years, he returned and took with him my sister and myself to the State of Michigan, where we remained about one year, during which time he was convicted and sentenced to prison, for two years, for robbing a store. He made his escape by digging under the walls, and returned to his suffering children.

Within a few days he was retaken and imprisoned. My sister, about fourteen years of age, and myself, about eight years of age, without friends or necessary means, after many hardships returned to my grandfather's in this county. That sister from my infancy up to this moment has been my warmest and I can almost say, my only friend. She has often given me good advice, and it is my earnest prayer that she may yet be rewarded. Here I would say to parents, and to all who have the charge of children, cultivate in them habits of industry and honesty, as I have every reason to believe if my mind

had been turned into the proper channel during my infancy, I should not be where

I am.

Two or three years after our return from Michigan, my father visited us and remained about one month. His mind seemed to have undergone a sad change since we had last seen him. He published a pamphlet founded on the book of Revelations, in which he represented himself as Jesus Christ. I recollect of his saying to grandfather one day, that

Buffalo was the promised land—that he should assemble all the people there, and among them the Queen of England. I stepped out and told him he was a damned fool; he became very much enraged, and pursued me out of the meadow, but I got out of his reach. The first enquiry he made of me was,

'George, are you old enough to handle the sword?' He left, and we have not heard from him since.

During the time I lived with my grandfather I had an opportunity to attend school, but having the privilege of doing as I pleased, I seldom attended—my attendance at church came under the above rule. My grandmother indulged me in every evil habit, and my education in consequence is very limited. I can make out to read by spelling some of the words, but cannot write. When I pilfered money from my grandfather, which was not unusual, I was sure to find protection by appealing to my grandmother.

With the boys of the neighborhood I bore the appellation of 'the cunning little thief,' and many times have I been reproached and called a fool by some of my relatives for acknowledging my thefts, which was usually the case if I was accused. With the exception of some trifles and the money I took from grandfather and Mr. Wanzer's key, the first I ever stole was $175, from Andrew Miller's trunk, which I opened with Mr.

Wanzer's key. I went on from one petty theft to another, until I was com-leading to Mr. Wanzer's. I went to his door, and made a noise, took hold of the string and raised the latch. Mrs. Wanzer asked who was there? I answered a friend. She enquired what a friend wanted that night? I answered to stay all night.

I walked away from the door and laid

my hat under a peach tree about two rods distant. I stood there about five minutes with my gun cocked and pointed towards the door intending to shoot him if he opened it. He did not make his appearance and I retired to his barn and slept there till sunrise the next morning, when I went into the bushes and continued firing my gun at intervals in the neighborhood of his house all the day on Tuesday, once I shot at Mr. Wanzer's fowls. He was at work in his garden and buckwheat field the most of the day.

At one time I lay within thirty yards of him, my gun pointed towards him, and said to myself 'how I will pop him over to night.' The family all went away at one time, and I took a circuitous route, thinking to go in the house, but on reflection, the thought occurred to me, that they might return and find me there.

As soon as it was dark I went to his barn and thence to his dirt cellar. The little dog went away while at the barn, and I whistled low for him two or three times. I pounded on the dirt cellar and then stood with my gun ready, thinking

he would come out. He did not come around the corner of the house, but went in again immediately.

I then went in front of the house, took of my hat and laid it under the same peach tree where I laid it the night before.

I whistled to induce Wanzer to come to the door, but he did not come. I went up to the house and looked into the window adjoining the road. As I looked in some of the family said 'hark.' Mr.

Wanzer's gun stood up against the wall;

he took it in his hand and went to the door. I stood ready to shoot him if he came to the corner of the house. I trembled very much all the time I was there.

From thence I went by the dirt cellar into the road and put my gun through the fence. I stepped into the middle of the road, got a stone and threw it against the house. Within a minute after I saw Mr.

Wanzer coming down the path with his gun in his arm, he came within a rod and a half of where I lay. My feelings were such that I did not take particular aim. I fired, intending to hit him in the breast, he sprang up, threw back his head, gave a loud groan, and fell, apparently without bending, wheeling around at the same time.

AN IDEA OF HELL.

We clip the following from a late number of the Tipton Journal. The editor, who by the way, is a Methodist, and a very good man too, says, it was told him by a Methodist Preacher, a Presiding Elder. 'There is more truth than poetry in what the Judge and Preacher said, if hell, as John Wesley asserts is an ocean of material fire.

'By the way, I must give you an idea of Hell, which this gentleman told me was given to a congregation in Tennessee, by a distinguished judge, who, having embraced religion, became a preacher.

He would preside at court during the week and preach on Sundays. On one of these occasions, it became necessary for him, inasmuch as his subject had a quinting in that direction, to give something of a description of the infernal regions. 'You have no doubt seen my hearers—at least many of you—a furnace aware of the intense heat that is neces-

Foreign News

From the N. Y. Herald.

Important from Africa—Aggression of the British.—The brig Robert, Captain Cook, arrived yesterday afternoon from the west coast of Africa, with advices to the 10th ult.

We learn from Capt. Cook that the English continue to interfere with the American trade. The British steamer 'Albert' declared war against the natives of the river Nunas and blockaded that stream from the 24th January to the 12th February, allowing neither vessels nor boats of any flag to pass up.

On the 7th February the supercargo of the Robert went on board the steamer to ascertain about the blockade. The person in charge, an acting Lieut. in command, said that he had thought proper to blockade the river and forbid the supercargo of the Robert from trading with the natives.

The said commander ascertained there were two men belonging to the Robert which were British subjects—he therefore demanded them and was refused. He said he would take them by force. One of them being in the boat with the supercargo at the time was detained on board the steamer, with an order to send the other man immediately or he should board the Robert, haul down the flag and take him by force. To prevent any trouble the man was sent on board the steamer. The two men were shipped on board the Robert in this city as seamen.

The Elizabeth, of Salem, was blockaded in the river from the 24th January to the 12th February.

The Robert and Oriental were detained two weeks and then were obliged to leave the river on account of the war against the natives and the blockade which had materially injured the voyages of five American vessels which trade to that river.

The British brig of war "Ferret," at the leeward fired into two American vessels on the coast. Capt. J. was seven months on the coast trading from Gambia to the Rio Ponzas. He saw only one man of war, the Porpoise. She came to the Gambia in January, stopped eighteen hours, then proceeded to leeward. She passed the Nunas at the time of the war, but without stopping.

The American merchant vessels suffer more from the insults of the British squadron than by the natives on the coast.

Trade was dull. American goods were plenty and very low, while African produce was scarce and high.

We hope that when this news reaches Washington, our government will immediately send orders to Commodore Perry of the American squadron on the coast of Africa, to either protect our commerce or come home.

Great Fire at Hudson.—Twenty or thirty buildings destroyed. We learn from the Journal of Commerce that at about 5 o'clock on Friday evening, a frame building adjoining the wool warehouse of Seneca Butts, Hudson, took fire from the sparks of the steamer Fairfield, "as she was firing up" for New York. The flames spread then with fearful rapidity in a South-easterly direction to Front st., and South to the Hudson and Berkshire Railroad depot, consuming every thing in its way, except the brick store at the corner of Front and Ferry sts., and the machine shop of Mr. Clark. Among the buildings destroyed, was the large store of Seneca Butts, filled with Wool estimated at various sums from $10,000 to $20,000—the freight warehouse of Hermance & Co.—the extensive Oil and Candle establishment of Barnard, Curtis & Co. The Lumber Yards of C. McArthur & Son, and George Powers & Hubbell—Coffin & Co.'s Grocery Store. The schooner Victory, which had just arrived from Albany, loaded with Flour and Grain, got aground by the wharf, and was destroyed. The Fairfield was despatched to Catskill for assistance and engines. Loss estimated at from $200,000 to $300,000.

A letter from Hudson, by Livingston & Co.'s Express, dated at 7 o'clock P. M., Friday, states that the fire was nearly subdued, and it was hoped would not extend further. The pier used by the Tow Boat Company was consumed, together with the coal stored on it for the use of their steamboats.

"Forty buildings, it is said, are consumed, being the largest fire that has ever visited that city. The destruction of property is immense. Every building each side of Still street, is swept by the board. A large quantity of oil was consumed, one account estimated the value at $60,000, another at $80,000. At least $20,000 of wool was also consumed, and all the lumber in the two extensive lumber yards on the dock. The schooner Victory, which was lying at the wharf, loaded with flour, was entirely consumed.

med. The total loss by this fire could not be ascertained. It will probably exceed $150,000—about one half of which is covered by insurance.

Immigrants.—We learn from an official source, (says the New York Journal of Commerce) that 212 vessels arrived at this port during the month of June just closed, being 47 more than during the same month last year. The above 212 vessels brought 12,898 passengers being an increase of 7664, upon the number arrived in June 1843.

During the last quarter, ending 30th June, the number of passengers arrived was 25,098; being a large increase upon last year. At Quebec, on the contrary, down to June 22, only 8,327 passengers had arrived this season being 1171 less than last year to same date.

Deadly Accident.—To-day about noon, the foundation of a house in Ryder's alley, occupied by Mr. Bloomer, for storing packing boxes, lumber, &c., gave way, and precipitated the building into a large hole, where a number of laborers were at work. One man was badly injured. His name is Robert Burns, a Scotchman. He was immediately dug out and taken to the hospital. His head and face were badly cut, but his limbs were not materially injured. The other men were but slightly injured. It appears they were engaged in excavating the earth for the purpose of building a house alongside the one that fell, and were preparing to brace up the house when the accident occurred.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

The Chinese Embassy.—Letters from Washington state that much anxiety and serious fears are entertained there, in consequence of nothing having been yet heard of the arrival of Mr. Cushing, at Macao. The last news from the East India Squadron was published in the Pennsylvaniaian of the 26th of March, in an extract of a letter from a gentleman on board the ship Brandywine, which carried Mr. Cushing from Bombay. The Brandywine, at the date of the letter, 20th December, was off Colombo, in the Island of Ceylon, and the writer states that they did not expect to reach Macao before the close of February.—As the last dates from China are to about the 20th of that month, there is therefore no cause for anxiety. The next Liverpool steamship will probably bring news of the safe arrival of the embassy.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

The Philadelphia Times says that a very serious disorder appears to be prevalent in that city. It is accompanied with a fatal diarrhea. The same prevails to an alarming extent in our city. We know at least a half score ailing with it. It attacks and carries off children principally. For the sake of humanity, we give place (to the exclusion, perhaps, of a news item) to a remedy. We believe that even after all other remedies, have failed, a certain cure for it will be found in rice water. Boil the rice, take the water, make it palatable with salt, and drink it copiously while warm. We never knew this simple thing to fail.—Aurora.

Great Storms.—The town of Burlington, Vt., was visited by a violent storm of thunder, lightning and rain, recently. The Free Press says, the lightning struck the Winooksi Church, and the side-walk near Mr. Catlin's, on the hill. But the evening brought the severest and most violent rain which has occurred there for fourteen years. It rained torrents for two hours, flooding the streets, and carrying away bridges and huge masses of earth, almost in an instant.

An extra stage coach from the South, about one o'clock at night, was precipitated in a deep gully across the road, made by the carrying away of a bridge, and one of the passengers, Mrs. Whitney, was drowned before she could be extricated. The other passengers, four in number, were rescued. Two horses were also lost.

The Lexington, Ky., Express, also mentions a recent storm and flood by which Mr. Isaac Cox, wife and four children, were all swept away with their house, during the night, and drowned. It is supposed that they were all asleep at the time. Their house was situated on quite a bluff.—On Sunday evening the bodies were all found. The rush of waters down the valley, in which the creek is located, was so great that it prostrated the timber like a tornado.—Reveille.

UNBURNT BRICK HOUSES.

This subject is important to settlers on Prairie lands, where timber is scarce and clay abundant. The Ohio Phalanx, an Industrial Association, opposite Wheeling, having written to Mr. Ellsworth on the subject, obtained the following answer:

Washington City, May 16, 1844. My unburnt brick houses have exceeded my utmost expectations. I have one here two stories high, renting for $100, and am now building three more. Mine have stood two winters without the least injury.—These houses are very cheap and dry; they are cool in summer and warm in winter, and can be made (the sash and doors being furnished from a factory) by common laborers.

Before the Ohio Phalanx expend much money in building, I advise them to examine my mode; the published account is in my last Report. A man had better just come here and see all, and then he can do all. Hon. Walter Forward (who has my Report of last year and this year) visited, while here lately, my mud houses, and will give you his opinion cheerfully, having considered the matter fully.

Very respectfully yours,
H. L. ELLSWORTH.

SYMPTOMS OF MOBBISM IN RHODE ISLAND.

Since the incarceration of Mr. Dorr there have been one or two night gatherings at Providence. We learn from the Providence Gazette that on Friday evening, just before dusk, another crowd began to collect on the bridge, which by nine o'clock had exceeded in numbers that of Thursday night. There was no indication of a riot, but the people seemed to have collected together, to talk over peaceably the news of the day. Still, the public mind being in such an excited state, the authorities of the city headed by the Mayor himself, were early upon the ground; ready to nip in the bud, any indications of a violent character. Now and then a shout would be raised, which appeared to be started by boys, and which simply consisted of cheering for Mr. Dorr, but until about half past nine o'clock, nothing more of importance occurred.

At that hour, the crowd on Market square had become very dense, so much so, that the walks were completely blocked up. There were hard upon two thousand people collected, men and boys, in proportion as the crowd became thicker, it became more noisy, until finally, the police found it necessary to arrest a man, who was cutting up some strange antics, and as it is thought, endeavoring to excite a riot. He was seized upon, and borne towards the watch house, in college street, the whole mass following the officers, amidst shouts of "hurra, for Gov. Dorr," and a variety of noises of all kinds and keys. When the crowd had arrived in front of the Franklin house, an attempt was made to rescue the prisoner, and the police took into custody, one or two, who were most active in the business. The whole gang were then marched off to the Watch house, followed by the crowd, which as it ascended College street, presented a formidable sea of heads.

The prisoners were lodged in the watch house, and after some time the crowd descended the hill, and stood on the walks, and the street near the market, where they remained till quite a late hour, at night, but without attempting any further disturbance.

Since writing the above says the (Gazette) we learn that there was a large meeting of the friends of Mr. Dorr, at independent hall on Cove street, when speeches were made by Dr. Ferris, Nathan Porter, and Mr. Cavanaugh. A vote passed appointing a committee of seven to prepare an address to the people of Rhode Island, and to call a Mass Meeting in this city, some time next week. After the meeting, which was a very excited one, had adjourned, it proceeded into Cove street, just opposite the State Prison, and gave several rounds of cheers for Mr. Dorr.

PRINTERS.

No trade sends into the world smarter and more active men than that of printing. Look to officers of trust and honor—where talent and energy are required—and you will be most likely to find them filled with printers. Who make our editors, lawyers, preachers, mayors, and Congressmen?—Printers. Printing is a glorious business, thus to fit men for honor and usefulness. A college of education is not to be compared to an education at the case.—One of the great lawyers England ever produced was a printer. The greatest philosopher of America was a printer. Who are mayors of Glasgow, Edinburgh and Perth? Printers. So also are the Mayors of New York, Washington and Savannah. Printers by trade.—The recent Mayor of Boston was a printer.

There are something like a dozen of printers in Congress—all of them honors to their profession.

Certainly the best conducted journals of this country are under the control of printers.—Look to this city for instance: Gen. Todd, of the American, Edwards, of the advertiser, Becket of the Bulletin, and Nichols of the Washingtonian, are all printers and reflect honor on the craft.

Printers are looking up. Who would not be a printer? To the young apprentices at the case, of roller stand, with smutty faces or dirty fingers we would say, don't be discouraged. A few years ago, all the distinguished men we have named above were similarly employed. Stick to your business and every leisure hour you have, employ it in the perusal of useful books and in the cultivation of your minds. Then the day will not be far distant, when, if you are true to yourselves and contract no bad habits, you will become useful and honorable citizens exerting a wide and healthy influence.—Portland Tribune.

Coffee Electricity.—Although it is not quite new, it is not generally known that a man may be literally and truly electrified with newly ground coffee. The manner of doing so was exhibited to the writer of this, says the correspondent of the Scotsman, a few days ago at a shop in New Town. A large coffee mill driven by a steam engine, was grinding coffee into a huge barrel. In the barrel stood a copper scoop, directly under the fall of the fresh ground coffee. An iron rod being held within an inch or so of the copper-scoop, an instantaneous flash of lightning, or stream of electric fluid, was attracted by the iron. The same result followed when the finger was employed instead of the rod, and a slight shock like the puncture of a pin was quite perceptible. By a rude contrivance a shock was also communicated from the ground coffee to the tail of a cat, when off scampered the bewildered animal in a state of the most earnest astonishment. Altogether the matter is curious, and not beneath the attention of the philosopher.—Phil. Times.

Outrage in Canada.—The Montreal Herald of Thursday contains account of no less than three outrages. One was committed on Sunday, June 16, near the Beauharnois canal, where an Irish laborer, Patrick Dalton, fired a musket at another, John Cowley, the shots taking effect, some in the right hand, and some in the abdomen. Dalton was seized, but made his escape. On Friday, June 21st, a terrible attack was made upon Robert Anderson, by a dozen laborers at the Trent, near Belleville. Cause, the old animosity between the ribband-men and orange-men. Anderson's recovery was almost beyond hope. Three of the assailants were arrested.

In Montreal itself, or rather in one of the suburbs, on Saturday evening of last week, a party of gentlemen were attacked by a much larger party of ruffians, without provocation, and cruelly maltreated. A policeman saw the attack but would not interfere, because it took place beyond the limits of his beat.

At Lachine, a few days since, a criminal assault was made upon a young girl, in resisting which she received a blow on the head, given with a bottle, and inflicting a wound which caused her death. Commercial.

A Promising Damsel.—The Philadelphia Sentinel contains an account of a young lady now being exhibited in that city, whose age is ten years, and whose weight is two hundred and sixty-five pounds. She is four feet nine inches high, and nearly five feet broad across the shoulders.—Her name is Hannah Grouse; and in the language of the Sentinel, "she is dutiful, playful, cheerful and an angel."

Bulls vs. Locomotives.—The engineer of the morning train from this city to Baltimore, has been frequently annoyed of late on the railroad a short distance beyond Gray's Ferry, by a huge bull, belonging to one of the farmers of King'sessing, which has regularly attacked the locomotive. On Saturday morning last, the engineer being put completely out of all humor, and patience with his troublesome opponent, went at him in good earnest with an effective head of steam, and gave him an effectual quietus. The concussion knocked the whole train off the track, and caused considerable delay to the passengers. The bull was dashed to pieces.—Phil. Times.

FROM THE BALTIMORE SATURDAY VISITOR.

MORE RIOTS IN PHILADELPHIA.

We appropriate a considerable portion of our present issue, to a description of some of the horrible scenes of another bloody riot which has cursed Philadelphia—as the result of that most unchristian and dangerous religio-political party organization, known as "Native American"—or rather, an attempt at organization for the impression is general now that Nativism has thus found an early and bloody grave! We have no room for reflections upon these hellish scenes, and their causes—and we prefer, at any rate, awaiting till the smoke of battle clears away hoping then to be able to get at the facts in all the fullness of their horrific array.

From the (Mt. Carmel Ill.) Plough-boy.

The last PROPHECY is dead—at least we hope it is the last one.—JOE SMITH is dead! He and his brother Hyrum were shot in the jail at Carthage. Who knows but what Carthage, of Illinois, will yet become as noted in history as is its ancient namesake, of Punia memory. Joe and his brother Hyrum, will be looked upon as martyrs, by the Latter day Saints; and in their future church history, Carthage will figure, as the place where died the Prophet, by the hands of the ungodly—hope it may be the only one, whom they may, with some degree of propriety chronicle as such—hope that all the rest of the Mormons may die in their beds, as good christians ought to; and we yet again hope, that hereafter the Mormons may be judged by our laws and punished accordingly, and not by our muskets, in the hands of those, who are ever ready to commit outrage, when tumult and excitement give them a probable chance of doing so with impunity. We may expect that Fanaticism will flourish more and more, if we but manage to persecute it a little now and then; and possibly, in the end it may become troublesome.

Improvement of the Rapids.—With solemn deference to the great Ruler of the Universe, we must say, that for the past five months, he has improved the navigation of the rapids, beyond the power and capacity of Congress, by a supply of water sufficient for every emergency. It is now within two feet of the highest high water mark for many years.

LAST MOVE OF THE GOVERNOR.

We lay before our readers the following last move of Governor Ford towards the mobbers of Watsaw. In the main, the language of this document is strong, pointed and to the purpose, and the public peace requires it. The blood stained soil of Hancock county needs the acid of double fortified—strong—law to purify it, and should a reward of one or two thousand dollars a head be offered for those assassins and 'appeals to arms'—who have disgraced the state and nation, in murdering Gens. Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and would, if they had means enough exterminate the Latter Day Saints might show seven or eight hundred millions of people on the globe, that there are a few honest officers of government in the western states left, who will magnify the law and bring murderers to punishment. 'God knows we have no apology to make for murder and mobbing, but we go for peace and amity.'

TO THE PEOPLE OF WAR-AW, IN HANCOCK COUNTY.

I am continually informed of your preparations and threats to renew the war, and exterminate the Mormons. One would suppose that you ought to rest satisfied with what you have already done. The Mormon leaders, if they ever resisted the law, have submitted to its authority. They have surrendered the public arms, and appeared to be ready to do any thing required, to make atonement for whatever wrong may have been done. Since the assassination of their two principal leaders, under circumstances well calculated to inflame their passions, and drive them to excesses for the purposes of revenge, they have been entirely peaceful and submissive; and have patiently awaited the slow operation of the laws to redress the wrongs of which they complained. There has been no retaliation; no revenge; and for any thing I can ascertain, there will be none. Those of your people, who are charged with being the most hostile to them, have lived, if they knew it, in perfect security from illegal violence. I am anxious for a pacification of your difficulties. You can not drive out, or exterminate the Mormons. Such an effort would be madness, and would not be permitted by the people of the State. You cannot be sustained in it either by force or law. You are blinding yourselves to your weakness, and keeping up an agitation which must fail of the purpose intended, and recoil with terrible energy upon your own heads. I exhort you to reconsider your infatuated resolutions. Try your Mormon neighbors again, and if you cannot dwell together in amity, you may at least refrain from injuring each other. From the moderation of the Mormons, under what they conceive to be the deepest injury, you might well hope that if they ever entertained designs inconsistent with your liberty and happiness, that those designs have been abandoned. They are also interested in preserving the peace.—It is not natural to suppose that they any more than yourselves, wish to live in continual alarm. They hope for quiet, and will be peaceful and submissive in order to enjoy it. But you are continually driving them to desperation by an insane course of threatening and hostility, and depriving yourselves of peace by the same means used to disquiet them.

If I have said any thing severe in this address, I pray you, attribute it to my deep conviction that your course is improper and unwarrantable. Such is the opinion of the people at large in the state, and all over the country. From being right in the first instance, you have put yourselves in the wrong, and there are none who sustain you. As men of sense you are bound to see, if you will open your eyes, that you cannot effect your purposes. Nevertheless you are still training and drilling, and keeping together, and threatening a renewal of the war. I have said to you often that you cannot succeed; by this time you ought to see it yourselves. What can your small force do against two thousand armed men, entrenched in a city, and defending themselves, their wives and their children? Besides if you are the aggressors, I am determined that all the power of the State shall be used to prevent your success. I can never agree that a set of infatuated and infuriated men shall barbarously attack a peaceful people, who have submitted to all the demands of the law; and when they had full power to do so, refrained from inflicting vengeance upon their enemies. You may count on my most determined opposition—upon the opposition of the law and upon that of every peaceful law abiding citizen of the country. This is not spoken in anger.—God knows, I would do you no injury unless compelled to do so to sustain the laws. But mob violence must be put down. It is threatening the whole country with anarchy and ruin. It is men-ing our fair form of government, and destroying the confidence of the patriot in the institutions of his country.

I have been informed that the Mormons about Lima and Macedonia, have been warned to leave the settlements.—They have a right to remain and enjoy their property. As long as they are good citizens, they shall not be molested; and the sooner those misguided persons withdraw their warning and retract their steps the better it will be for them.—THOMAS FORD.

July 25, 1844.

A Candidate.—A western newspaper says:—"Philip E. Barrett has a wife and thirteen children—poor—afraid to steal—too lazy to work—and would like to be elected constable."

Great! we actually believe the balance of officers of the American government, are ditto, in many respects.

A Religious Bull.—The story, related below, is one of a thousand, but although perpetrated by a bull is very far from being one of the Pope's. It is barely possible that this bull, from the fact of his trying two churches, was for the "anxious seat," in order to save himself from this untoward generation.

A Fight.—Last evening, about 8 o'clock, a bull, made almost wild by being chased, ran in the basement of a Church in Sixth street, near the Second avenue, where some of the congregation were at a prayer meeting. The animal bolted in just at the commencement of the exercises, and the scene that followed may be imagined such a screaming and scampering and jumping out of the windows pell mell was never before seen.

The animal went the entire length of the room knocking down one lady, but doing her no injury save a slight fright, and after butting at the wall until exhausted fell down, and ropes being obtained was secured.

This was the second church the animal had visited, we understood, in the course of the evening, breaking up the exercises in both places. [American.

SYMPTOMS IN BOSTON.

We mentioned in our first edition this morning that a "State convention" was held in this city yesterday to take into consideration the claims of Gen. Joseph Smith for the Presidency. It was convened in the Melodeon, and was attended by a large assembly, many of the audience having probably gone to the meeting for the purpose of interrupting its proceedings. Although we have no sympathy in the objects of the meeting, yet we acknowledge the right of all to assemble peaceably in our midst to be secure against disturbance and violence. We are sorry to say, that was not the case yesterday, and that the Mormons were interrupted through the day, by various noises, and in the evening the Melodeon was blessed with the presence of several well known rowdies, many of them being young gentlemen, who always act a conspicuous part in endeavoring to break up every assembly, which does not happen to be of their own political party. Many of the proceedings and speeches were eccentric of course, and characterized by a vein of ridiculousness and broad farce in the estimation of those who dissent from the Mormons in opinion, but those things offered no justification to others to rush in and break up their meetings.

If this is the spirit they meet with in Illinois, then are they more sinned against than sinning. Abby Folson was there in the course of the evening, and tried to get a hearing, but the cat calls and other cries abounded so much, that even she was ashamed of the disturbers and retired from the hall in disgust. Gen. Wright of Nauvoo openly declared in the course of the evening, that he had seen Eastern missionaries among the Indians of the west trying to civilize them, but if the proceedings of the rowdies that evening were a sample of Boston civilization, he thought that for the future the missionaries had better stay and begin the work at home. Gen. Wright also said that he would send a mission of Sacs and Foxes to civilize Boston. In fact the Mormons appeared to great advantage by the side of the Boston elite. During the latter part of the evening, while one of the speakers was addressing the audience, a young man in the gallery rose and commenced a series of rowdie remarks, in the delivery of which he was encouraged by some companions. He kept on, and when the police came in to take him out, they were assailed and beaten badly by a set of young desperadoes. After much hard fighting however they succeeded in clearing the gallery. One of the assistants, Mr. Sheldon, a fine athletic fellow, was cut badly, but not dangerously in the face, by a stick in the hands of one of the cut-throats. The meeting was soon after broken up. These things are a disgrace to Boston, and are owing to the culpable conduct of a portion of our respectable six-pennies, who make fun out of, and encourage these violations of the rights of others, and also to the supineness of the Mayor and other officers. The influence of such papers as we have referred to, if it continues to be exerted, will make Boston a Pandemonian shortly, where human devils will reign triumphant. The Mormons adjourned their meeting to Bunker hill.

We give the doings of the convention

below, as a feature in the history of the times:

Hon. Brigham Young, of Nauvoo, President.

Hon. W. Smith and Gen. Lyman Wight, of Illinois, Vice Presidents.

Hon. Wilford Woodruff and Professor Orson Pratt, of Illinois and Ananias McAllister, Esq., of Boston and J. H. Fell, Esq., of Salem, Secretaries.

The Convention was addressed with much animation and zeal, in the course of the day and evening, by the President, Gen. Wight, Hon. Orson Hyde, Daniel Spencer, Hon. W. Smith, Prof. Orson Pratt, all of Illinois, and George B. Wallace, Esq., of Boston.

From Boston Mail, July 2.

The Mormon Convention last evening at the Melodeon broke up in a row. A set of uneasy spirits continually annoyed the speaker, until finally Aunt Nabby Fulton rose in her place and essayed to speak (she only asked the modest time of two minutes to tell her story) when the cries of hear her, hear her, drowned every thing else, and Nabby put on her dignity and left the place. A young gentleman in the gallery then rose, and in spite of all the efforts to put him down, made a sentimental speech and sung a sentimental song. This, it is, either the song or the speech, or both, was too much for Mormon Philosophy to bear; and a party of the faithful having been sent for the police, an attempt to take the last speaker into custody caused confusion to confound itself, and such a scene came off as has not been seen since the great Tyler mass convention at Faneuil hall. Finally the lights were partially extinguished, and it was voted to dissolve the meeting. The audience mostly left, and another attempt was made to organize; but some of the saints seemed to be of opinion that it was useless to expend their eloquence upon bare walls, and they gave it up. The whole affair was disgraceful enough. The Mormons had hired the Melodeon, and had a right to work off their own folly in their own way, so long as they did not interfere with the rights of others. That they are a set of ignorant designing men, there cannot, we think, after what has transpired, be any doubt among intelligent men; but still they have their rights, and these should not be interfered with.

Such is the account of the symptoms of Mobocracy in the good city of Boston. It is however highly creditable to the character and dignity of the "Times" to treat the subject properly. Had the American press generally pursued a course as purely patriotic against mobs, Missouri persecution of the Mormons; riots and rowdies, which have so simultaneously disgraced our country for the last fourteen years, we certainly have reason to believe that the storm of wrath and folly, seemingly now ready to drench the United States in a "flood of blood" would have been retarded and averted. What is more noble, than for the press, boasting of freedom, to stand forth and defend the rights that give it vigor? Patriotism and Printing ought to go hand in hand, rather than "extravaganza" and mockery. He that exalts man's acts gaily, and he that degrades him, does the drudgery of the devil.

We are sorry to witness the contemptible spirit of the "Mail". That folly, to tickle the vanity of a priestly pretending community, which sticks out in ruffles, from the "little cabin" to the "great congress, of a free people, is momentarily wasting the virtue of society and the sanctity of liberty. If stern order and princely majesty do not characterize the dignity of the American press, and united vigilance, and swift justice magnify the policy of protection for the future, the glory of our country will have departed, and we shall have worked ourselves into slaves to fatten the vanity of a penny tyrant. More than that, if the majesty of the press and the people do not unite to abate the misuses of freedom, the press in the hands of the officers of Church and State will become the bow-knife to stab the vitals of our institutions, and spill the best blood of the sons and daughters of liberty.

As the "Times" says "these things are a disgrace to Boston," unless we greatly miss our calculations, the American mob spirit, will disgrace the whole "Asylum of the oppressed" in the eyes of all nations. Would to God, Boston had maintained her "old good name," that the following plaudit might have hung up among the "fall of empires and crush of worlds," as an eternal badge of excellence: "The high esteem in which I have always held the respectable inhabitants of the town of Boston, brightens the pleasure with which I receive their kind and affectionate address—to their honor and good will I am indebted for my first appearance in a public character, and this debt is greatly enlarged by their kind acceptance of my past feeble efforts to promote the security and welfare of this and the other United States."

THE FINALE.

The Mormon Prophet, Joseph Smith, and his brother, have been murdered, as the awful finale of the recent disturbances in the Mormon country. The reports relative to the manner in which they were killed, are various and contradictory. The latest version is, that upwards of fifty men, in disguise, rushed past the guard, who were posted in and in front of the jail at Carthage, in which the Mormons were confined, and shot Joseph and Hyrum dead on the spot. Some accounts say that the Mormons in prison made no resistance; others say they did, and that the prophet discharged a revolving pistol several times. The last accounts from Nauvoo, state that the city was quiet.—The bodies of the Smiths had been received there for burial.

We shall have something to say hereafter of the illustration of our tormented "religious toleration," given in the cold-blooded murder of these Mormons.—Baltimore Saturday Visitor.

From the N. Y. Herald.

MASSACRE OF THE MORMON PROPHET AND HIS BROTHER; FATE OF THE MORMONS.

According to the last accounts from the west, and those most to be relied on, Joe Smith and his brother were actually massacred in the midst of a civilized community. The first accounts from that quarter came from sources hostile to the Mormons, and hence a representation was made that an attempt was made by Joe to escape and that in this attempt he was destroyed. But it appears from other and subsequent accounts, that a mob, disguised in all possible ways, entered the prison, and actually massacred, in cold blood, the Mormon chiefs. Such a brutal, bloody, and dark tragedy perhaps never before took place in any civilized country.

Instead of sealing the fate of Mormonism, we are now rather inclined to believe that this revolting transaction may give only additional and greatly increased strength to that sect. Joe and his brother will be regarded as martyrs to their faith, and but little knowledge of him in nature and the history of the past, is necessary to inform us of the fact that violence, oppression, and bloodshed strengthen in stead of subduing fanaticism.

The bitterness with which the war against the Mormons has been waged, appears to us, at this distance, altogether unaccountable. We have Mormons here and there, and all sorts of fanatics, who exhibit themselves in a variety of phases, ridiculous, impudent and foolish; but they never have excited this intensity of hatred, producing murder, massacre and assassination. There must be something not yet revealed behind the curtain, and we await with great anxiety, further intelligence from the scene of these melancholy and revolting transactions for more insight than we have yet obtained into their origin.

From the N. Y. Herald, July 13.

THE RECENT RIOTS AND INSURRECTIONS—PUBLIC OPINION HERE AND ABROAD.

The recent riots in Philadelphia and Illinois—the terrible outrages in South-west, and the bloody tragedy in Carthage, Illinois, involving the destruction of so many lives, have created a vast sensation throughout this country, and elicited a very prompt and gratifying expression of upright and patriotic opinion from the independent press.

But there is another ordeal to which this matter is to be subjected, and that is the public opinion of Europe. What will be the tone of that opinion? What will the advocates of the monarchical and aristocratical institutions of Europe say to these things? How they will gloat over the accounts of these acts! With what eagerness they will point to them as evidence of the incapacity of man for self-government.

A great deal of sensitiveness has often been manifested here, in consequence of the abuse and sarcasm of English travelers—Dickens, Featherstonhaugh, Fidler, Trollope, and so on. The criticisms on the peculiarities of manners and society in general have excited a great deal of indignation. But how ridiculous must all this sensitiveness about these trifles appear, when viewed in connection with the feelings which will be aroused against us in Europe by these melancholy reports, with which our newspapers have been daily filled, are read on the other side of the water.—There can be no question that these things will have a tendency to cast discredit on democratic institutions, and the great cause of human liberty. To all the old grounds of assault upon this country—dishonesty of the repudiating States—the gross financial mismanagement—will now be added these dark and bloody scenes of discord and blood—the riots in Philadelphia, and the massacre of Joe Smith in Illinois. These sad events will be ascribed to the inadequacy of our free institutions to preserve peace and order. It will be overlooked that they have resulted from want of energy in the authorities, and the unfaithfulness and inefficiency of much of the newspaper press—the organs of public opinion.

And yet, in spite of all that can be said of the dishonor of the States in refusing to pay their debts—of the mismanagement of financial institutions by rogues and rascals of all descriptions—and of the terrible condition of some portions of the population of our large cities, produced in a great measure by the pernicious and demoralizing volunteer system of extinguishing fires—in spite of all this, we are not afraid to place the condition of our community in contrast with that of the people who are groaning under the despotisms of Europe. The history of the past and of the present day discloses a picture of society in Europe, in many particulars, painful and revolting in the extreme; and to which the out-breaks which we all now deplore afford no approach to a parallel.

The foregoing calculations are well suggested. Not only Europe, however, but the nations of the whole world, will "point the finger of scorn," at the boasted land of liberty. Ah! Ah! The globe will require that the United States atone for the blood of those men, or sink.

THE MORMONS—BRUTAL MURDER OF JOSEPH SMITH.

In this day's paper will be found the details of the murder of JOSEPH SMITH, the Mormon Prophet, and his brother HYRUM SMITH. We have scarcely ever read of a more cold blooded and cowardly assassination. Whatever may have been the complaints against the Mormons—however deluded, or dishonest, Joe Smith ever been, the circumstances under which the murder was perpetrated, must, in the estimation of the reflecting portion of community, stamp upon the character of those engaged in the foul deed, the seal of heartless, cowardly assassins.

In obedience to the requisition of the Governor, Smith had surrendered himself into the hands of the officers of the law, and had been conducted to prison to await his trial. The Legion that could and would have defended him, had by his orders, given up the State arms in their possession, and whilst thus acting in good faith, and resting as he supposed, secure from danger, under the protection of the law, his prison is surrounded by a blood-thirsty, cowardly and reckless mob the guard is dispersed, and Joe Smith and his brother are inhumanly butchered. In this act we see not only the murder of conflicting citizens, but we recognize in it a spirit of lawlessness at war with, and dangerous to the perpetuity of our Republican Institutions.—Wayne County (Ind.) Record.

CHEAP POSTAGE IN ENGLAND.

Prof. E. Wright now on a visit to England, has the following remarks on Cheap Postage in one of his Letters published in the Boston Chronicle:

"You may send a letter of no matter how many pieces of paper, or containing no matter what dry substance, if it does not weigh more than half an ounce, to any part of the kingdom for a penny or two cents; if it weighs less than an ounce, four cents, and so on. This has wonderful consequences. It sets all the people to corresponding, resuscitates old friendships, creates new ones, facilitates all manner of traffic, and pays the government a clear profit of $3,000,000 per annum! It may be called the grand civilizer and universal educator of the people.

The poorest girl that can express her ideas by postcards, now corresponds with her poor parents while out at service; and she wishes to remit them a few shillings of her earnings, she has only to pay three pence or six cents at the post-office for a money order and enclose it in her letter; and the government then becomes not only the bearer, but the insurer of the money. It cannot be lost, and the party to whom it is sent is as sure to get it as if it were handed over in silver. The convenience of this arrangement for making little purchases, collecting little debts, &c., must be felt to be understood.

In connection with the great carriers, whose arrangements for the delivery of parcels, after the manner of Harnden & Co., ramify all over the kingdom, the cheap postage and money order system give the country all the advantages of the city. They give a life-blood circulation, which make people strong, wise and happy. I wish I could blow a trumpet on this subject that "would reach every log house beyond the mountains." Fellow-countrymen, we have the power in the United States to have a system as good and as cheap. For Heaven's sake, do not let us pick our own pockets any longer for the benefit of people who will never thank us. If our Federal Government cannot do this for us, it is not worth having. This postage system is the best thing I have seen in England. For the sake of it, I could almost put up with the monkey tricks and the mean tricks of the aristocracy. And this aristocracy are cutting anticks about this time, I assure you. As to dinners and balls, these are every day matters, or rather every night. For instance, the Duke of Wellington has a ball at Apsley House. The company begin to assemble at 11 o'clock, P. M.—900 of the highest nobility, all riding in their coaches, with 3 or 4 liveried lackies apiece, all loaded with diamonds and enriched with fandangos inconceivable.—They pass through gorgeous rooms hung with paintings and perfumed with tropical hot-house plants; they look at each others diamonds, dance the polka, or see it done, sip head-aches or guzzle the gout, in the shape of champagne, and it is one, two, three, or four o'clock, and they go back as they came. This is their ordinary business, the every day work of these 900 highest nobility, for which they are truly to be pitied. The head-aches and the heart-aches, (if they have any hearts,) and the toe-aches they have to bear, but as to the expenses, they do not have to bear them; for they really come out of the tea-pots and the bread trays of the common people.—N. Y. Tribune.

The above remind us forcibly of economy and extravagance—artificial lies thrown upon the water to catch fish to fatten graceless gormandizers.

One J. B. Derby who ascended lately with a balloon, states that while up in the air he saw several circular plates of ice, in furious revolution. After revolving a short time, with increasing rapidity, they burst into small pieces, forming hail.

Liberty.—A dirty little urchin came running up to a gentleman in Broadway yesterday, and asked him if he had dropped his pocket-book, saying that he (the aforesaid urchin) had picked one up. The gentleman, thinking it was some roguish prank, or that he wanted a penny, said, "oh run away, boy—don't annoy me." The little fellow, however, persisted, and at last the idea entered the mind of the gentleman that he might have lost his pocket-book, and feeling in his pocket he discovered that he had; and knowing that it contained about one hundred dollars, he apprized the boy of the fact. The little fellow, however, seemed to imagine the conduct of the gentleman as singular, inasmuch as he did not answer him before, and asked him to describe it. After his request had been complied with, he asked him to hold on till he looked, and ran into a shop to examine. Finding that the person was the real owner, he handed it to him, and was running off when the gentleman stopped him, inquired his name and residence, opened his pocket book and gave the boy a ten dollar bill. The boy seemed to receive it rather reluctantly, and said in a sort of reproachful tone, "Thank you, sir, but I didn't do it for that." That boy, ragged as he looks, is destined to prosper. [Alb. Eve. Journal.]

USE OF THE OX.

Extracted from Skinner's Essay on the Use of the Ox, found in his "Complete Cattle Doctor," recently published; a work which we beg leave to recommend to the careful perusal of every farmer.—Pp. 143, 144, 145, 147 and 148.

So deep is the conviction of the great saving which would be accomplished by individuals, adding, judiciously, in the aggregate, to our national wealth, by a more extended use of oxen in lieu of horses in the general labors of husbandry, that the occasion is here embraced to present the views by which that conviction has been established, and the editor feels persuaded that he might venture to introduce these views, on the score of their intrinsic importance, even though the subject to which they relate were not so naturally associated, as it seems to be, with a work on the diseases of cattle.

That the farming district may be judged of by its working oxen, as safely as by its barns or its cornfields, has been laid down as an axiom by a Committee of Farmers—working men in the true sense of the word—of Massachusetts, at an exhibition where no premium was offered for horses, expressly on the ground that "it was believed that the interest of the farmer is promoted by substituting the ox for the horse, for most purposes, as he is fed with less expense, is more patient of labor, and is more valuable when his service is ended." This declaration in favor of the ox for "most purposes" is at once explicit and broad, and might seem to settle the question; but there are considerations arising out of the use of the ox and horse, which obviously demand a comparison of circumstances to see how far that system admits of general application, which is here presented on the best authority to be expedient through out New England; and this brings us at once to the most formidable objections to the use of oxen—their alleged incapacity to withstand, when laboring, the heat of more southern latitudes, and their slowness of motion.

As to New England, in addition to the evidence already quoted, we may give here the answer of the venerable Josiah Quincy, now President of the time-honored Harvard University, to a letter once addressed to him by the writer of this:—"Oxen," said he, "are used almost wholly for plough and team work in this quarter of the country. A single horse is usually kept by our farmers to go to mill and to church, and for the convenience of the family. This is so universal as to be almost without exception among these farmers. They certainly answer all purposes except, perhaps, speed, and in this, on a long journey, they are considered as quite equal to horses. Our farmers are so satisfied with their utility and economy, that no argument would induce them to change."

The late James M. Garrett, of Virginia—honored by his name by all friends of American agriculture; stated in one of his addresses—"A gentleman of my acquaintance had a mixed team of horses, mules, and oxen; in each season he has horses killed, the mules next, although both were fed upon grain and hay; and the oxen fed exclusively on hay and grass, finished the crop. But to come down to the present time, and nearer home, in Maryland, at the hottest season of the year, and the most busy one with the planter, the same teams of oxen are worked, during the whole day, hauling very heavy loads of green tobacco for weeks together, and do so without any food but the grass of common pasturage or being turned out at night—whereas horses, working steadily in the same way, on the national road, consume twenty-five pounds of hay, and grain at the rate of four bushels of oats per day for the five horses, or four-fifths of a bushel for each horse, or what is considered equivalent, four bushels of corn in the ear, making of oats at the rate of two hundred and thirty-two bushels for each horse for a year!

A more important calculation is, whether, in many situations, the general saving by substituting the ox for the horse would not balance the expense of hiring a conveyance of the produce to market. In the same scale with the hire is to be put the value of the grass and hay consumed by the oxen; and in the other scale the value of the corn, amounting to one-half of the crop, and of the grass and hay consumed by the horses. Where the market is not far distant, the value of the corn saved would certainly pay for the carriage of the market portion of the crop, and balance, moreover, any difference between the value of the grass and hay consumed by oxen, and the value of the oxen when slaughtered for beef. In all these calculations it is, doubtless, proper not to lose sight of the rule, that farmers ought to avoid paying others for doing what they can do for themselves. But the rule has its exceptions, and the error, if it be committed, will not lie in departing from that rule, but in not selecting aright the cases which call for the departure. It may be remarked, that the rule ought to be more or less general, as there may or may not be a market by which every produce of labor is convertible into money. In the old countries, this is much more than in new; and in new, much more the case near towns than at a distance from them. In this, as in most other parts of our country, a change of circumstances is taking place which renders everything raised on a farm more convertible into money than formerly; and as the change proceeds, it will be more and more a point for consideration how far the labor in doing what might be bought could earn more in another way than the amount of the purchase. Still, it will always be prudent, for reasons which every experienced farmer will understand, to lean to the side of doing rather than hiring or buying what may be wanted.

The next most serious charge against the ox is constitutional slowness of motion, which, as many suppose, no course of education can overcome, but which may be set off in comparison with the greater speed of the horse, as op illus-trat the difference in the long run between the pace of the "tortoise and the hare." The greater haste the less speed, is a proverb suited to this case as to that. It has already been seen that ox teams travel over the over-ventured pampas of Buenos Ayres at the rate of thirty miles a day, for a month together. Twenty years ago, the writer of this held correspondence with Commodore Jacob Jones, himself a practical farmer; and an habitually close and judicious observer, and then commanding our squadron in the Mediterranean, on the subject of Andalusian horses, cattle, and other animals, with a view to the importation, under authority from the Alameda Agricultural Society, of such as might be deemed essentially superior to animals of the same species in America; and we now quote from his letter, as applicable to the questions both of speed and susceptibility to heat:—"The cattle that I have seen in Spain appear to be nothing superior to ours, nor have I seen anywhere on the coast of the Mediterranean any that appear better than those in America, except a race of white cattle at Naples used for the draft. I was informed by a gentleman who, in supplying the government with timber, had used thirty yoke of them for two years, that during that time they had constantly travelled from twenty to twenty five miles a day. They are generally fifteen hands high; their bodies long, thin, and deep; legs long; small light head; sharp muzzle, resembling deer; colour entirely white, except black nose, ears, and tuft of the tail. They are most frequently worked in the tillage of the cart, and are as spirited and walk as quick as a horse, and appeared not to suffer from heat more than a horse."

To show, however, that we are not dependent on any foreign stock, it may be stated, that the small, pile-red old field ox about Salisbury in Maryland will travel twenty five miles in a day, with heavy loads of lumber going, and returning empty, over the sandy roads of that region; while it may be affirmed, after particular inquiry, that the distance made by the heavy-bodied grain-devouring Castagna horses, on the national road between Cumberland and Wheeling, averages not over sixteen miles, six horses with loads of from six to eight thousand pounds.

FOOD FOR COWS.

We would commend the following article to the careful perusal of our readers, as it embraces a topic of great practical importance. With those familiar with the writings of M. Chabert, and his exalted character as a scholar, any commendation on our part, would of course appear superfluous.

M. Chabert, the director of the veterinary school of Alford, England, had a number of cows which yielded twelve gallons of milk every day. In his publication on the subject, he observes that cows fed in the winter on dry substances give less milk than those which are kept on a green diet, and also that their milk loses much of its quality. He published the following receipt, by the use of which his cows afforded him an equal quantity and quality of milk during the winter as during the summer. Take a bushel of potatoes, break them whilst raw, place them in a barrel standing up, putting in successively a layer of bran, and a small quantity of yeast in the middle of the mass, which is to be left thus to ferment during a whole week, and when the vinous taste has pervaded the whole mixture, it is then given to the cows, who eat it greedily.

We have been promised a communication on this subject by a person to whom we casually mentioned the views of M. Chabert, and who has had some experience, of late, as regards the process he commends. Experiments of this description are much needed, at this day, and we are glad that there is one among us, if no more, who is disposed to make them, and favor us and the public with the details.—Maine Cultivator.

A GOOD PLAN.

A writer in the Southern Planter recommends the following plan of making manure, of which we highly approve:

"Have a pit thirty or forty feet square and 2 or 3 feet deep, with a good bank around it. In this pit let the materials, viz: Oak leaves, pine tags, earth, &c. be put in suitable layers on which throw all the slop water, soap suds, yard sweepings, as ley, contents of chambers, and in short every thing that can be conveniently got together. It may be at any convenient distance from the kitchen, so that the slop water, soap suds, &c. may be conducted to it by a trough. Be sure that no water gets into it any other way. If at any time, it should become offensive, start your teams immediately and cover it over with sand or earth sufficient to prevent the escape of any effluvia."

We say we approve of this plan of making manure; but we think it might be improved by sowing plaster over each layer of the materials of which it is composed; and occasionally, say at intervals of two or three weeks, sowing it over the surface, by which means all unpleasant smells would be avoided, and the enriching gases saved to fatten the land. Any pit which may be made for this purpose should be protected from the weather.

SORE THROAT IN SWINE.

"Turn animals so affected, into an open pasture where there is fresh feed, and pasture to root. It is a disease resulting from confinement. Pounded charcoal mixed with food, where pasture cannot be had, or room for exercise, is one of the best preventatives of diseases in swine."

We were once present at the "dissection of a hog which died of this disease. The glands of the throat were much distended and inflamed, and there were also in several places along the wind-pipe, spots of a livid hue, covered with a bloody mucus, the tongue likewise appeared affected, and was swollen to twice its natural size. The animal had been kept in a confined situation, and wholly deprived of exercise and access to the ground. We believe the sore throat is not common among hogs, in this climate, and never perhaps where those prime requisites are attended to—exercise and adaptedness of food.—Maine Cultivator.

CHIP MANURE

One of our correspondents talks of Chip Dung being applied to apple trees and also respecting the tendency which it has to introduce borers or worms of any kind. I can say to him and to the public, that chip manure is an excellent article to put around trees when well mixed with wood ashes. The chips keep the ground light, and the ashes clear out all the worms of whatever name or nature. I feel satisfied of the truth of the above fact from actual experiment in a young orchard of mine. The chips should occasionally be moved with the hoe and a few fresh ashes applied at the same time.—Mass. Ploughman.

A practical farmer informs the Hartford Times, that in taking up a fence which had been set 14 years, he noticed that some of the posts remained nearly sound, while others were rotted off at the bottom. While looking for the cause, he found that those posts which were set limb part down or inverted from the way they grew, were sound. Those which were set as they grew were rotted off. This fact is worthy the attention of farmers.

RECIPES.

For Pickling.—After cleansing your cask, put first a layer of white oak leaves, and then a layer of cucumbers, or whatever your pickles consist of, and so on to fill your cask; intersperse between each layer mustard seed, horse radish, &c., and to every twenty cucumbers, one bell of pepper. Form a composition of clean salt and water, not hardly sufficiently strong to bear an egg; to every gallon add one quart of good vinegar; scald and skim this pickle, and after cooling to a degree of blood warmth, add it to your cask, and cover it tight. If rightly performed, this method will preserve pickles the year round, and form a very agreeable sauce.

To make Yankee Bread.—Take two measures of Indian and one of rye meal; mix with milk or water, to the consistency of stiff mastie pudding, and add yeast; bake in iron pans or iron kettles four or five hours. Eat with fresh butter, or other food, and it while warm the better. Yankee bread is very good or very bad, according to the manner in which it is made. The Indian meal should be either bolted or sifted.

Starch.—A little salt sprinkled in starch while it is boiling, tends to prevent it from sticking; it is likewise good to stir it with a clean spermaceti candle.

THE YEW TREE.

This tree inhabits mountainous woods in Europe, North America, and Japan. In Britain and Ireland there were formerly great abundance in a wild state, and planted in churchyards. The yew was once what the oak is now, the basis of our strength. Of the old English yeoman made his long bow, which he vaunted nobody but an Englishman could bend. In shooting, the English did not, as other nations, keep his left hand steady, and draw his bow with the right, but keeping his right at rest upon his cheek, he pressed the whole weight of his body into the horns of his bow. Hence, probably, from the English phrase of bending the bow, and the French of drawing one. So great was the demand for yew in the days of archery that our own stock could not supply the demand. Yew is botanically described as a tree which grows 20 feet high, with a rough, uneven, little-barked stem; numerous, thick, and contorted branches, and dark evergreen foliage. It belongs to the Linnæan class Diacis and to the natural order Coniferae. It is not, however, a true cone-bearing plant, having red berries as fruit. The wood of the yew is red and veined, very hard and smooth, used by turners, cabinet makers, millwrights, and a variety of other artisans. Floodgates for ponds made of it are said to be of incredible duration. The twigs and leaves of the yew, eaten in a very small quantity, are certain death to horses and cows, but deer will crop these trees with impunity. Turkeys, peacocks, and other poultry and birds, eat both the leaves and fruit. A few of the berries are not deleterious to the human species, but the leaves are fatal. The tree is very patient of the shears, and is much employed in the ancient style of gardening for verdant architecture and sculpture. Allowed to take its natural shape, and when advanced to a considerable size, it forms one of the handsomest British evergreens, harmonizing admirably with the holly, the box, and the juniper. A very interesting, and for ornamental gardens a very valuable variety of the yew is that of the "Upright or Irish Yew." It has been entirely derived, as we have been told, from three or four old trees in one part of Ireland.—Magazine of Science.

Shooting.—About 8 o'clock last evening, the 9th instant, a man named Baker was shot and mortally wounded by another named Peters.—The circumstances attending this affair, as far as we have been able to gather them, are as follows:

About two and a half years ago, Baker and Peters were residing in Natchez, where they had a desperate affray, and the latter was stabbed and so badly wounded by Baker that he has been ever since a miserable cripple, unable to walk. It is said that while Peters was lying in the hospital at New Orleans on account of his wound, he made several ineffectual efforts to kill himself. About three weeks ago he came to this city, and remained a few days at Exe's coffee house on Water street. He managed to see Baker, had an apparent reconciliation with him, and went to his house on Second street, near the corner of Market, to reside with him. On Wednesday last, he returned to Exe's and asked to stay a single night, alleging that Baker had gone from home. Yesterday evening he ascertained that Baker was at home, procured a pistol, ordered a carriage, rode to Baker's and Baker called out, and, as the latter came up to the carriage, shot him through the body, wounding him beyond the possibility of recovery. Peters gave himself up to the officers without hesitation, declaring that he had lived for revenge and had no wish to live longer. His story to the officers was that Baker robbed him upon the occasion of the affray in the south and stabbed him on account of his resistance. Both the murderer and his victim are said to have been gamblers and men of disreputable character in other respects.—Louisville Journal.

An Explosion of Subterranean Water took place lately in the district of Vizen, in Portugal, by which the soil was thrown up and earth and stones flung to a great height into the air, to the distance of more than a league, between the small river Gleiros and the Douro. All the cultivated land over which the water flowed was destroyed, and in many places it created ravines 40 feet in depth and 30 fathoms wide. It carried away and shattered to fragments in its course, which was of extreme rapidity, no fewer than 50 wind and water mills; choked the Douro with rubbish, and caused the death of nine persons, including one entire family. On the same day a similar explosion took place in the mountain of Marcelim, in the same district, arising from the same source, but branching off in the direction of the river Bastanza. It carried away a farmhouse, four cows, and some sheep and goats. A similar occurrence took place here last year and the year before, and eighteen months since in Madeira.—Cor. Lond. Times.

Unusual Abundance of Amber.—A remarkable phenomenon, which has been observed during the present year, on this shore of the Baltic, has proved a source of great profit to the inhabitants. The amber-gathering has been more productive than it is remembered ever to have been. In the village of Kahlberg alone where the amber gathering is farmed, a quantity of amber, amounting in value to twenty thousand thalers, has been obtained within the last few weeks. Probably the late violent storms that have prevailed this winter, especially through the month of December, have brought this treasure up from the bottom of the sea.—Elbeig Zeitung.

Kyanized Duck.—R. B. Forbes, Esq., has placed at the Merchants' Exchange, samples of Cotton Canvass, which have been placed under ground 30 days, one of which was kyanized in the manufacture, the others not. The former is in perfect order, the others are quite rotten. One pound of corrosive sub'imate dissolved in ten gallons of water, was the proportion used. It answers the same purpose for Twine, Rope, &c.—Bost. Adv.

An Important Discovery.—The Louisville Journal states that a discovery was recently made of great importance where limestone water is used for steam boilers. Mr. Kellogg, of the Louisville Paper Mill, was informed by a miller near Madison, Indiana, that a certain kind of clay, found in that neighborhood, infused in the water of the boilers, would prevent the formation of the lime crust by absorbing the lime. Mr. K. tried some of the clay, and found it effectual. Subsequently he discovered the same sort of clay (a greasy bluish clay) near his paper mill, and found it to answer the same purpose. His engine runs constantly, except on the Sabbath. The beginning of each week he puts a quantity of this clay in ten gallons of water and pumps it into the boiler. When the water is drawn off, the following Saturday night, the boilers are free from crust and are readily cleaned.

The Drunkards Will.—I leave to society a ruined character, a wretched example, and a memory that will soon rot.

I leave to my parents during the rest of their lives, as much sorrow, as humanity in a feeble and desperate state can sustain.

I leave to my brothers and sisters as much mortification and injury as I could well bring on them.

I leave to my wife a broken heart, a life of wretchedness, a shame to weep over me, and a premature death.

I give and bequeath to each of my children poverty, ignorance, a low character, and remembrance that their father was a monster.

An exchange paper says—"Whoso telleth a woman that she is old, offendeth her much; whoso telleth her she is ugly, offendeth her more; but whoso telleth her that she wears a bustle, sinneth beyond forgiveness, and had better back out."

New York Times.
Mob Law.—We would like to throw away a little sympathy on the good people of Philadelphia, at the result of the late horrid atrocities committed in that city, if we could do so really in truth and justice. For the last ten years a handful of riotous characters have in a population of 250,000, kept that city in a state of excitement, burnt and destroyed and killed with impunity, and the public authorities were actually afraid to punish them. Had energy been then exhibited in sustaining the public peace, there would have been no repetition of these dreadful scenes. A mob—lost to reason, to justice, and to humanity, must be shot down like a mad dog—it is mercy and justice to others that it should be done. Some ten years ago, a mob of mischievous characters in Providence, Rhode Island, took upon themselves to tear down some obnoxious houses. The Governor, being in town, placed himself at the head of two or three companies of militia, marched to the scene of confusion and ordered them to disperse. The mob laughed at him, threw stones at the soldiers and continued to pull down the houses. He coolly ordered the troops to advance and fire, and some dozen rioters fell dead and wounded, and there have been no riots since that time in Providence. Never trifle with a mob—they assemble for unlawful purposes, to justice, and to humanity, must be shot down like a mad dog—it is mercy and justice to others that it should be done. Foreign News

FRANCE.

The most interesting portion of the intelligence received from France since our last publication relates to the affairs of Algeria and Morocco. The Emperor of Morocco on receiving the report of the defeat sustained by his troops disavowed the conduct of their commander. It appears that another trick was made by the Moroccan army in a most treacherous manner, while El-Ghannadi, the son of the Emperor, was engaged in negotiating with General Rida, at a spot about three quarters of a league from the French camp on the Oued Mellah. The attack was made by the fanatic and undisciplined soldiers, without the knowledge of their chief. The conference, was of course, abruptly interrupted, and the French, being taken by surprise, at first retired in good order, they however speedily reassembled, and inflicted a terrible vengeance on the enemy. More than 300 lay dead on the field of battle, not including those carried away by the defeated, on the side of the victors, 30 men were wounded and six killed; among the latter a young officer of great promise, son of General Rovigo.

This affair will not, it is supposed, cause much further difficulties, as it was the spontaneous act of an undisciplined army, without the sanction of their leader. Before the negotiation was interrupted, the French General demanded that, for the future, Morocco should be forbidden to Abdel-Kader, who was to be immediately sent out of the empire. They demanded, in addition, that the left bank of the Tafne should be henceforward recognized as belonging to France. On the first point they obtained complete satisfaction and on the other it was agreed, after long discussion to refer the matter to the decision of the diplomatic body.

According to advices from Algeria of the 20th, Abdel-Kader had re-entered that territory at the head of 1500 horsemen, and executed a razzia in the country of the Borgias.

The Emir is said to have been appointed Khalifa of the eastern provinces of Morocco, and to be accompanied by several regiments of the Imperial black cavalry. The holy war had been preached in Algeria as far as Medjah.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

The Queen.—Arrangements will be made in preparation of the announcement of the Queen, which will take place in Windsor Castle, for intelligence to be conveyed to London, by means of the galvanic telegraph in the line of the Great Western railway, between Slough and Paddington, which will enable information to be expressed and telegraphed from the royal residence at Windsor, to Buckingham Palace, and the town residences of the minister, and the public offices at Westminster, in the short space of less than twenty-five minutes.

Charles Dickens is now on a tour in Italy, and intends to be absent from England about a year.

The Ojibway Indians, whilst in London made a purchase of some 15,000 brass thimbles, for the purposes of ornament and barter when they get home again.

Loss of the Steamer Manchester.—A great sensation has been created by the news of the loss of the steamer Manchester, Capt. Dudley, off the mouth of the Elbe, on the 10th and 11th ult., with the whole of her crew and passengers. She left Hull on the morning of the 13th ult. with a miscellaneous cargo and six passengers, besides the crew. On the 10th and 11th, and during the three preceding days, dreadful gales raged in the Elbe, during which several vessels went down, and among the rest the Manchester and all on board. The Manchester was a Bremen-built vessel, furnished with Liverpool engines, was 300 tons burthen, and was only partly insured, to the amount it is understood of about £4,000.

On the 1st of January last, the steam navy of France consisted of 47 vessels, viz: one of 540 horse power, three of 450, one of 340, seven of 220, twenty-one of 160, one of 150, two of 120, one of 100, five of 80, three of 60, and two of 30.

Turkey.—Letters from Constantinople, of the 17th ult., announce that the Sultan had returned to the capital on the 15th, after a tour made under the most favorable auspices.

Constantinople, June 5.—The Sultan has been received with enthusiasm throughout his journey. On the 31 he entered the Dardanelles. The Albanians who are in a stage of revolt, appear to be sending in their submissions to the legitimate authorities every where. Ninety-four of the rebel leaders have been taken and brought in as prisoners. They arrived yesterday by the steamers from Salona.

Violent Tornado.—A violent tornado passed over Pangrove, Schuylkill county, Penn., on Saturday evening, the 13th ult., which did considerable damage. The force of the storm was so great that it uprooted barns, stables and dwellings, and prostrated nearly every thing in its path, such as trees, fences, &c. The storm concluded with a shower of hail stones, some of which were of a large size.

Another passed over Chambersburg on the 19th, destroying a large paper mill and other property, together with numerous fences, orchards, crops, &c.

One at a time.—Twenty men married to one woman at the same time. A Mr. Tymmen, recently took a handsome lassie to wife in the neighborhood of Richmond, Va.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Neighbor.

There was in a land a great shepherd whose right it was to possess the land; and he brought his flocks up from time to time to feed on the rich pastures, and to learn to take pleasure in the sound of a voice, and follow his ways, and to increase and become fit for the master's use.

There was also a great hunter in the land who sought to take possession; and he brought forth his dogs likewise, and taught them in his ways. And it came to pass that while the dogs were in the land, the great shepherd brought up his flocks the seventh time to feed upon the pastures; and for the safety of the sheep, they might not be lost, he set a night lamb in the midst of the flock, who was taught from his youth in the ways of the great shepherd, and he wore a crown prepared for him before and he had a bow, and great authority; and he went forth, congealing and to conquer according to the will and law of the shepherd. And the flock increased in numbers, and the lamb became exceeding precious for his great obedience to the great shepherd and his skill in leading and preserving the peace of the flock. In the mean time many of the dogs came and took upon themselves sheep's clothing, and associated with the sheep, and they envied the lamb of his authority and sought power over him; and other dogs also, that were in the land sought his life that they might scatter the sheep.

And it came to pass that the dogs in sheep's clothing lifted themselves up from time to time contrary to the laws of sheep, and growled for a while and howled; that could not be granted. Nevertheless some were raised to high places in the flock; but their dogish spirit led them to make much trouble in the flock, boasting themselves above their fellows, deceiving the unwary, and secretly robbing and destroying the innocent. But as often as they were found boasting in their secret sin, and tempting upon the rights of the sheep, the lamb pushed against them in the night of his authority, and brought them to a shame in the eyes of the flock; and the eyes of the dogs in the land also, that their veiling and howling was no longer noticed. Thus the lamb prospered in his faithfulness to the shepherd and his sheep; and he began to be more and more beloved by the faithful of the flock, and many of the strange dogs in the land that were great and powerful in their dominion, began to look with wonder and admiration upon him, and the dogs in sheep's clothing saw it and their envy became very great, and they began to despise, fearing they never should be able to subvert the lamb so as to take his authority.

But at last there came from the regions of the north, a dog that was rather aound—dearly beloved of the great hunter for his remarkable success in thieving, and endurance of wind in the chis— and he took upon himself the clothing of a sheep, and became one of the flock, and by his fair speech and outward appearance of a sheep, he rose to confidence and authority in the flock, even to be one of the high hand of the lamb. At first this dog-sheep endeavored to satisfy his dog's appetite for ill-gotten spoil by fraudulently taking from time to time a lock of wool from the lamb, and the lesser sheep, and to limit the exercise of his barbarous, wild, and tyrannical spirit to the pretence of secret communication with the most savage and blood-thirsty dogs in the land, against the welfare and safety of the sheep, and especially against the life of the lamb. All this his high standing in the flock enabled him the better to do, and his hypocrisy the better to conceal. At length he became ambitious, as others before him had also sought, to become chief lamb of the flock; but knowing the ill success the other false sheep had met with in trying to gain the first authority through the confidence of the sheep, and consent of the shepherd, he resolved to join immediately with the strange dogs in the land to destroy the lamb that the great shepherd had appointed, thinking that then the right to rule would at once be his. Accordingly he called his brother, a furious hound that came with him from the north, and some other dogs in sheep's clothing, together with some strange dogs that were ready, and they held secret meetings and had a plan to take the life of the noble lamb. But in consequence of the yelping of some of the dogs one with another before the lamb, their plan of death was discovered, and the authority of those dogs in sheep's clothing was taken from them, and they were left naked before the flock, fearing of success, the two hounds and their associate dogs began to tremble for their safety before the indignation of the flock, and the terror of the lamb, but as a last resort, the first hound took upon himself the title of chief lamb—instructed the other dogs to gather around him, which some of them readily done, covering their nakedness with such skins of beasts as the great hunter could best furnish for them, such as goats' and other skins, and some prided themselves with the skins of jack-asses—all striving to hide their true character as much as possible, or as much as the length and breadth of their false coverings would allow.

Their irrepressible leader now began to yelp most piteously, calling upon and exhorting his train to go forth among the sheep, and if possible by lies and flattery, to scatter them from their fold, and cause them to forsake the ways of the great shepherd, that they might be made an easy prey. This move caused some of the strange dogs in the land that saw it, to prick up their ears in hopes of an abundant feast of mutton. But before these sycophants and false teachers could begin to elicit their object, the lamb rose up in his righteous fury, and according to the dignity of his authority, stamped their corrupt lying, and wicked works under his foot, at which they all took fearful offence, and in a great rage ran through the land, for help to avenge themselves upon the sheep, and their mighty chief. Many of the strange dogs in the land now flew to the assistance of their complaining kindred, who by the by, had so often helped them to a fresh bite from the fold of the great shepherd, and the borders round about was soon thronged with assembled packs of furious dogs, to see and know what should be done, and help take away the rights and privileges of the sheep, and drive them from the pasture, and especially to destroy the lamb and his principle fellows. Many false witnesses now rose up against the lamb and his fellows, which embittered the mind of some of the high on in the land to give power to the multitude of dogs to take the lamb and his fellows from among the sheep, and bind them in the midst of their enemies. As soon as this was done, they fell upon the lamb, where he was bound in the thicket, and destroyed his life, and one of his near fellows who was a brother, fell with him. As for the rest of his fellows that were bound, they narrowly escaped from the jaws of the dogs, and returned again to the pasture. The great hunter was now highly pleased at the success of his dogs, and promised them great honors as soon as they should return to his den in the sides of the north.

When the great shepherd saw the evil that had come upon his sheep he hid other lambs appointed, that were mighty in the knowledge of his ways, and in authority to lead the flock; and they were suffered to dwell with some degree of safety for a season. As for the dogs in the land that arose from thenceforth great contentions among them about the honor of killing the mighty lamb and his brother, and they began to destroy one another with an awful destruction, even until the whole land was left destitute of dogs, and the sheep went forth in due time and spread forth upon the face of the land, and none to molest or make afraid.

HEMONI.

Extract of a letter from a highly respectable gentleman to his relative in this city, dated,

Cincinnati, July 16, 1844.

"Dear Sir: I received your letter and papers yesterday, the intelligence contained I have already become familiar with through the medium of our own papers. I have never on any occasion had my feelings interested in the cause of oppression so strong as on the present occasion, and had the fact so clearly presented of the inefficiency of our institutions to sustain the promises which they make.

It is a lamentable fact that on most occasions of mob rule they gain and sustain the ascendancy. And law, right, and principle must be compromised to appease the raving turbulence of these lawless clans.

The conduct of the Mormons since the destruction of the press has been every instance so far as I know been of the most commendable character; disposed to bear the accumulating wrongs which have been heaped upon them, meekly and in the true spirit of a christian community. I sincerely hope you will continue this course without faltering, that public opinion now strongly in your favor may increase and put the seal of disapprobation upon the lawless act, you must remember that your only appeal for justice is to public opinion, gain this and all your wrongs will be considered and ample justice awarded.

I will not dwell upon the death of the Smith, the least it might rouse a spirit in you that had better be suppressed, I will only say that such an act of cowardice and treachery can only be found in the annals of the dark ages when civilization was in its infancy. To you personally the loss must be great as he had always been a steadfast friend in all the changes which had occurred, and to the society of which you are a member the loss must be irreparable, who is there among you can take his place, and exercise the same pacific influence which he has done and lend you on in the same prosperous and respectable position in society. I fear there are none; with all his faults I fear you will find none who has less than he had.

It is painful to me to contemplate this outrage upon our honor, and I cannot conceive how it is that you quelled the fiery indignation that was so natural to the human heart; reason must have established her throne in your midst, or the spirit of heaven must have descended upon you in this trying emergency to guide your mind and stay the dreadful consequences that an opposite course must have brought upon you, what could have stayed the spirit of exasperation when the dead bodies of the Smiths stained by their own blood drawn by the assassin's knife was brought in your midst, how and yet how grand the picture to see thousands contemplating the untimely end of their idol, throwing off all appearance of revenge, and their hearts kept in silent mourning for their departed friends; it is an example of submission to the will of heaven unsurpassed in the annals of history."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER,

From a highly respectable gentleman, to his friend in this city, dated,

Fair Haven, (Ct.) July 10, 1844.

"I have by the papers, within a day or two, been informed of the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. This is an event which will be deeply lamented by all Mormons, and will appear probably to those who are not Mormons, as the final overthrow of their religious tenets. I will, however, make the prediction that this diabolical butchery, makes more Mormons than the friendship of half the inhabitants in Illinois could have done by their most devoted exertions. The blood of saints is the seed of the church. It will be considered by an extensive portion of the world, that the Smiths have suffered martyrdom for their religion, and their profound sympathies will be aroused in favor of those believing the same creed. The inflammatory appeal to the blood thirsty passions of the Anti-Mormon populace, will be universally condemned by the reflecting and moral part of every community, and thousands will now examine your tenets, who never thought of such a thing before. Carthage and Warsaw will be denounced by the honorable; and the indelible disgrace with which they now stand covered, will cause them to be avoided by every person who has any regard to his personal safety. It is now known here, that the lazy speculators of Warsaw, and the still lazier office drones at Carthage, cared nothing for Joe Smith personally, or for his tenets either; but the prosperity of Nauvoo increasing as it did, beyond any former parallel, even in the western world, excited in their bosoms envy, hatred, and all ungodliness. This is the true secret of all their barbarous movements against Mormonism—and they supposed by destroying the Smiths they should extinguish their religion, disperse the Mormons, depopulating and desolating Nauvoo. Their folly and wickedness will produce a result exactly the reverse—Mormons will increase an hundred fold; they will if possible be more devoutly attached to their religion; will concentrate more closely together, for self-preservation, and their united industry will produce such a city, at Nauvoo, as does not exist west of the mountains.

From all accounts which have been published here, it does not appear that the slightest resistance was made to the execution of the law, and the enquiry is now made, what was all this clamor, excitement, and military parade for? The editor of the Warsaw Signal can answer the question, and if he had his deserts, it is probable no more unprincipled and inflammatory addresses to an infuriated mob, would ever emanate from his pen. Not that I would wish any violence to him; but he should be tried by the laws of the state, and see how far his course renders him accountable for the murders which have been committed.

Nothing has ever given me greater gratification, than the calm, dignified submission to the laws shown at Nauvoo since the death of the Smiths. This forbearance on your part is beyond all praise. Let it continue. Give not the shadow of a pretext for another appeal to popular fury. The demons are foiled, and let them gnash their teeth in silence over their disappointment.

The increase of population at Nauvoo can no more be prevented than the Mississippi can be stopped in its course. Its triumph is inevitable, because the engine by which it is to be accomplished, is irresistible. What earthly power has ever stood before the overpowering energies of a religious creed? but when religion is protected by law, is your religion ought to be, and will soon be, in Illinois, then such advances will be made by the Mormons as have never been dreamed of by the greatest enthusiasts."

Upon this letter, let it be remembered, that the writer is not a Mormon, or a western man, but a citizen of Connecticut, loving law, liberty and life.

The report that a battle had been fought between the Mormons and anti-Mormons, in which some five hundred were slain, is all a hoax. Such violent events only serve to give strength to the Prophet's views. Indeed, we do not know which is the most effect on community—the doctrines of Smith, or the thousand false rumors, constantly put in circulation against him. One thing is certain; his name will survive, when those who grossly misrepresent him, have become blanks on the pages of the future.—Tompkins (N.Y.) Democrat.

We learn from Buffalo says the Louisville Courier, that there was a good deal of excitement at the Falls in consequence of a report that a collision was expected between a party of Orange men and a body of Catholics, said to be 2000 strong, principally from the Welland canal. A company of soldiers have been sent to Drummondville to keep the peace.

A Rioter shot by Rioters.—A singular fact has been discovered in Philadelphia. It appears that a rioter, Elijah Jester, who died in the hospital a day or two since, received his death wound from the rioters with whom he was acting. He stated on his death bed that at the time he was wounded the rioters were fighting among themselves, and that he was shot by them! [St. Louis Gaz.]

Horrible Intelligence from Hayti.—Reported Massacre of the White Population!—The Charleston Patriot of Thursday (says the Louisville Courier of the 29th ult.) contains the astonishing intelligence, received via Key West, and St. Augustine; that the blacks have risen in Hayti and massacred every white person on the island, with the exceptions of the American and British Consuls. We fervently hope the report may prove unfounded.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 7, 1844.

THE MURDER.

Notwithstanding the voice of the people through most of the newspaper press of our country, has condemned the assassination of General Joseph and Hyrum Smith as a cowardly, cold, blooded murder, yet there seems to be some apologists busily engaged for some two or three papers, writing excuses. It is a settled point in law that murder is maliciously killing a person, and the punishment among all nations is, to require the blood of the murderers—founded upon this divine precept:—"Whoso sheds man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." An apologist therefore for murder must be a base wretch. An Arab or a Moor after faith is pledged never swears; do you think he would murder and apologise; no; such an act would be worse than treason. Has the pagan or savage ever attempted an excuse for murder? no; never! and a higher insult to the dignity of American institutions, freedom and rights, has not been offered than to try to ward off the damnable deed by a surreptitious justification. It will be a wonder, indeed, if such an apologist, has not a little of the "blackening," unwashed from his body—and a few drops of innocent "blood" in his skirts; to witness what has been and what will be.

There was certain men in the days of Moses, set apart as the "avengers of blood," but we have yet to learn whether in this enlightened age, the milk of human forgiveness, has become so rich in the cream of compassion, that a new set of men have been appointed through priestly popularity and mobocratic glory, to act as the excuers of blood!

What is the News?—Well, Jim, to make a long story short, I took the St. Louis Reveille of the 27th July, the other day and read the heads of all it contained as follows: Immortal hope, the needle-work of women. The poet Campbell, died. Graham's, are an atmospheric railway. A curious specimen of unexcusable is the emperor of Russia's visit to London. Gallantry is dangerous sport. Council Bluffs, Saturday night, literary notices and book keeping, are melting and insulting the ladies. Bas reliefs in contradistinction from Dominica, meet a violent assault. Shicklet's prairie horse, the N. Y. Express, a musical lady, a most extraordinary announcement, discharge of Matthew Long Island Railroad, an indiscreet disciple colonization, Du Solle, the editor of the New Orleans Republican, Nantucket, and a person speaking foolishly, are a great storm, mad dogs in a church and murder. Gov. Thomas, repeat, and the St. Louis Reveille are desirable property, successful experiment is the toes and teeth of the murdered Martin, such is the effects of good news. Sudden death, a crash like suit, the commerce of the prairies are a bull killed. Millions a father defied, an extraordinary escape, Jonah sucked in by a whale are abominously, and facetiously the cordial of invalid readers.

Punctuality.—The Steamer Orprey has won a reputation by her punctuality, that few other boats have any claim to. When Capt. Anderson says "positively," he means what he says, and a liberal public will reward him; and when the common steamers get up steam, and ring about thirteen bells a day for three days in succession, filling up the interstices with "I'll be off directly," that a discerning traveller will get sick of the fun, and be "off" too.

Catch penny.—The New York Herald and other prints display quite a marvellousness in picturing the scenes in Carthage and Nauvoo. As there is no fact connected with these caricatures, they evidence a catch penny spirit, that adds only insult to outrage.

Much oblige to you.—The officers of the steamer, "Waverly," have our thanks for late papers from St. Louis: By-the-way, that site will hereafter ply as a weekly packet on the Mississippi; leaving this city every Saturday morning.—Energy and enterprise, patronage and prosperity, are the American motto. Go ahead!

An Earthquake.—A slight shock of an Earthquake was recently felt at Cincinnati, Louisville, Memphis, and Independence, Mo. It is a solemn scene for contemplation; yet we believe many large cities merit a few shocks to arouse them from m-o-b-o-c-r-a-c-y.

So they say.—Well, what of it? Why, when you read C-o-r-p-s-e call it corn; and D-r-o-p—D-r-o; great folks do so.

The People vs Murder.—As might naturally be expected much is said abroad about the murder of Gen. Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the Mormons. Some possessing the patriotism of freedom, paint the deed in its proper colours, and give the Mormons fresh strength from fresh opposition; and to use an old Mormon figure, we think "when the world kicks a ripe mustard stalk around the garden, because they are mad at it, they will find a garden full of mustard next year from the scattering seed." No man can disguise the fact, General Joseph Smith was the greatest man of this age, and he fell in the midst of his glory by murderers, and fame will honor him, while shame disgraces them. The Tompkins Democrat thus notices the tragedy:

"This is the end of Mormonism," is the exclamation of many editors on announcing the death of Joseph Smith. We differ with them. The doctrines inculcated by him would soon have yielded to the light of reason, had he lived; but now that he has sealed them with his blood, he will be looked upon as a martyr; and how feeble a thing is reason, to combat religious error, when it has become impossible for the prophet and high priest of that error to recant and acknowledge a falsity—when, indeed, he has laid down his life in the defence of it.

Dispute how it may, a great man has fallen; and among the extraordinary characters of the age—those who have risen from the lowest walks of life, to be rulers among men, history will record the name of JOSEPH SMITH.

A bad beginning.—That old mobber, who wasted the saints in Missouri, and came painted like an Indian, into Far West even Cornelius Gilliam, is the commander governor and autocrat of the new colony which started from upper Missouri this spring for the "promised land of Oregon." His kingdom consists of 380 persons, 8000 horned cattle, 60 horses, and 80 wagons, and though he appeals loudly to the Ruler of the Universe to protect him, knowing as we do his murderous heart and the tainted disposition of his clan, we say Lord, thy will and not his be done, and let five years tell the tale, whether thy servants, or that mobber shall be blessed.

PHILADELPHIA RIOTS.

The Philadelphia N. American of the 16th ult. says—In the court of quarter sessions, Judge Jones charged the grand jury yesterday morning on the late riots. He said that the cause of late riots was the arming of St. Philip's church; that it was the right of every citizen to bear arms, but not to assemble in churches, engine houses, or other buildings to resist an attack; that such buildings were liable to be indicted as a nuisance, and the persons assembled therein were guilty in eyes of the law of unlawfully assembling together, and were liable to be indicted.

Very legal! Churches liable to be indicted as nuisances? And how much worse is a church with a few stands of arms in it, than a printing press, with a few traitors to "life liberty and the pursuit of happiness about it?" Four rights happen to be guaranteed in one article of the United States constitution together, on this wise: Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances. So far so good, and this would be complete, with an appendix thus and Congress shall answer the said petitions of the people as directed forthwith, or forfeit for ever their rights to be members of said Congress. If there had been a penalty annexed to every article of the national constitution, and the state constitutions wherein the legislators, the executives, and officers of government generally are concerned, we should have had better laws, better citizens, and less corruption in high places. Retaliation, revenge and ambition are the great first causes of so much rioting, mobbing, and profligacy in our government; and as we have often remarked, that nation is fast hastening to ruin where no preference is made to virtue over vice.

Whoever heard that a meeting house or church could be indicted while occupied as a place of worship of Almighty God, merely because a few stands of arms or munitions of war were found in it? Truly as our Savior said "it is not what goes into the mouth that defiles the man, but what comes out." Putrefaction or stench from any house, and obscene fulsome, libelous newspapers, from any press, disturb the happiness of community—and, in Pennsylvania, when proceeded against legally, must be removed, or the citizens have a constitutional right in a peaceable manner, to assemble together for their common good, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government for protection. So they say.—Well, what of it? Why, when you read C-o-r-p-s-e call it corn; and D-r-o-p—D-r-o; great folks do so.

redress of grievances, or other purposes, by petition, address or remonstrance."

It is strange that mankind can not discern their best interests. Water, not wood quenches fire. But when your own limbs offend, the divine rule is, cut off the affected limb, for it is better to go to heaven maimed than to have the whole body lost.

As to the right of citizens to bear arms in defence of themselves and property, it can not even be questioned all constitutions guarantee it; but no law, charter or power can license a mob. This is what disgraces the name and fame of the United States. Mob after mob burst into being in the several states, destroying life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; and yet no legislature, Congress or other powers, has risen up in the name of justice, to put a quietus to mobocracy by banishment and death. It is no wonder the old world laugh at the cob-house of America's liberty. Cowards black-legs, and murderers kick it over whenever it is in their way.

The Stuarts.—It was noticed that the last of the Stuarts died lately in obscurity. There never was a whole race so singularly unfortunate during at least four hundred years. Robert III. broke his heart because his eldest son Robert was started to death, and his youngest son made captive. James I. was assassinated in a convent near Perth; James II. was killed by the bursting of a cannon; James III. was thrown from his horse and murdered in a cottage where he sought shelter; James IV. fell at the battle of Flodden Field; James V. died of grief for the loss of his army. Henry Stuart, and Lord Dudley were assassinated; Mary Stuart, beheaded; Charles II. exiled for many years; James II. lost his crown; Anne died broken hearted, and the posterity of James were wretched wanderers, and all are now gone.—Sunday Times.

Greatness has its inconveniences.—Power is terrified with death. No odds how good the man is; no matter how exalted the station may be; priest or potentate; king of a realm, or saviour of the world; for turba is the highest earthly tribunal, when reason is absent and banishment, extermination, prison glooms, or instant death, the unpardonable judgment. Virtue, innocence, goodness, meekness, and even perfection have no bearing upon var turba—the end of the victim, only is the end of the judgment. Woman's cries and children's tears are powerless when this dreadful court disposes, while, from the suburbs of Eden to the porch of Solomon's temple, and from the cross of Calvary to the Carthage jail, the blood of martyrs cries from the ground. How long, O Lord God wilt thou not avenge us of them that dwell on the earth? In this mighty history of men from the beginning, nothing has touched the progress of society, government or religion, with such a death chill as var turba—"the voice of the rabble," or the power of a mob; by it children have made orphans; wives widows; houses desolate; towns spoiled; kingdoms ruined; and a world disgraced by the crucifixion of its God. Well is it, that the grand council of heaven expelled the first outbreak above, for, if human malice and hellish ambition, could have fermented into a forlorn hope, ere this, the angels would have been driven out of heaven and Jehovah dethroned!

Why is it that men seek the blood of men? Let the beggoly answer.

The St. Louis Transcript has the following:

Something New.—A Paris letter states that the Poles are all embracing a new religious doctrine, brought from Lithuania about three years since, by M. Towanski, and recently endorsed by M. M. de Genet, one of the professors of the College of France. It professes a compound of Mormonism, Transcendentalism, and Animal magnetism.

Really the great Apostate from Heaven, grows more cunning as he advances through the grand round of eternity. It used to be said, "the Devil on two sticks," but now he uses three; Mormonism has been added as a "peking stick"—on account of its great length.

Spots in the Sun.—A writer in the Madison La. Banner, says, "there are six spots now visible in the sun, all of which have made their appearance within a few days. The diameter of the largest is estimated at 5000 miles."

So says the Courier, and let us add that several large black spots have also appeared in the United States, about the same time, visible in Hancock county and in the city of Philadelphia, in the form of a mob; distance unknown.

Severe Sentence.—Young Howe, the lad who was convicted some time since, for setting fire to the Warren school house in Charlestown, Massachusetts, has been sentenced to the State prison for life.

ELECTION.

We have heard from only four precincts—the "Old Citizens law and order ticket," is about 1200 ahead, and will be elected by a large majority. Official returns next week.

The editor (Mr. Taylor) is fast recovering from his wounds received in the jail in Carthage on the 27th June. At the time the Gen. Smiths were murdered. He is able to ride about in his carriage, and will soon be able to attend to the editorial department as usual.

Drivens.—On Sunday the 4th inst. two sons of James Cummings of this city, named Hiram and Josiah, and aged 19 and 17 years, were drowned in the Mississippi near the upper stone quarry while swimming. This is certainly a melancholy event, and calls loudly for parents to curb the aqueous passions of children.—Death delights in this element to prey upon life among the careless. Beware.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Solomon.

The following precious country calculation of an Eastern woman, is copied into the Neighbor to feel off the Nauvoo boys. Is there any that lie, steal, or rowdy about the streets; let them lean for a lawyer's office, for they will need law and Gospel to save them from their sins. Read the dialogue.

Fit for a Lawyer.—An old lady in these "diggins" walked into a lawyer's office, a few days since, where the following conversation took place:

Lady. "Squire, I called to see if you would like to take this boy and make a lawyer of him?"

Lawyer. The boy appears rather too young. How old is he?

Lady. Seven years, sir.

Lawyer. He is too young, decidedly too young. Have you no boys older?

Lady. Oh yes sir, I have several, but two have concluded to make farmers of the others. I told my man, I thought this little fellow would make a first rate lawyer, and so I veiled to see if you would take him.

Lawyer. No madam he is too young yet to commence the study of the profession; but why do you think this boy so much better calculated for a lawyer than your other sons?

Lady. Why you see, sir, he is now just seven years old to day; when he was only five he would be like all nature; when he got to be six he was as sassy and impudent as any critter could be, and now he will steal every thing he can lay his hands on.

A Victim of State Prison Cruelty.—The Protector a paper recently established at Sing Sing, states that a convict at the prison in that place, by the name of Whiting, who, we understand, was sent from Albany some three years since, was taken to the Lunatic Asylum, where he soon died of the wounds he had received while in prison. It appears that Whiting became deranged while in the prison, and in order to cure him of his lunacy, he was repeatedly flogged at the bull rings at the yard, until his back, breast, and thighs were completely lacerated. The flogging did not cure the poor crazy convict, so he was sent to the Asylum, and his severe "medicine" has produced his death!

Glossology.—A work is announced in London under the title of Glossology, or additional means of diagnosis of disease to be derived from indications and appearances of the tongue; by Dr. B. Ridge. The journals say Dr. Ridge has made one of the most vitally important discoveries since the days of Hunter, viz: That certain appearances in parts of the tongue indicate the presence of certain diseases, and that these parts correspond with certain organs of the body. In the book the divisions of the tongue are illustrated like those of the skull in the volume of the phrenologists.

The steam hatching machine in New York, is trying to hatch some alligator's eggs, and some turtle's ditto. If any friend has found a mare's nest lately, we advise him to send it unto the occasion. He may hatch a fortune out of it.—Phil. Times.

DOINGS IN CANADA.—Riots, Storms, &c.—Violence at Montreal.—The Montreal papers give us the following picture of life in Montreal: "A few days ago a woman was knocked down in the street by a cabman.—A little girl was run over by a cart on Monday. Dr. O'Doherty was knocked down and severely hurt by a cabman, and has been dangerously ill since. Capt. Dover was killed by the shaft of a calèche striking him on the breast, which was driven by a boy."

Riot in Canada Prevented.—A party of Orangemen came from Toronto to Drummondville to celebrate the battle of Boyne, on the 12th of July, and the Catholics of the place supposing it a premeditated intention to mortify their feeling, made such demonstration against the Orangemen as would have caused a riot, but for the interference of the authorities.

Burned.—The last Montreal Courier gives an account of the burning of the Court House in that city. Cause—accident.

Storm.—The most terrific storm ever known, visited the vicinity of Montreal, a few weeks since. At Long Point, a house occupied as an Inn was blown down, and buried two children of the keeper in its ruins.—At Longueuil a great many buildings were destroyed; as also in Boucherville. In Varennes there has been a great fire. At Pointe au Tremble, an extensive tract of land has slipped into the water.

A child, six years old, son of J. C. Williams, of Elvira, Ohio, was rescued from drowning by a dog, the other day. The child was throwing sticks into the mill pond for the dog to bring out, and fell in, where the water was ten or twelve feet deep. There was no person near, and the child must have been drowned had it not been for the noble animal, which took him by the arm, and swam to a log on the bank.

Gale at Rio Grande.—The last New York Journal of Commerce says: "By the brig Roarer, Captain Higgins, from Rio Grande, we learn that while the British brig James Miner and Bridge Archibald were lying at anchor off Rio Grande, on the 15th of May, during a gale, both vessels dragged their anchors ashore, and were lost and condemned. Considerable damage was done to other vessels in the harbor."

Church Struck.—The Sullivan (N. Y.) Whig, states that in a severe thunder storm on Sunday week during the afternoon service, the Presbyterian church, near the village of Liberty in that county, was struck by lightning, which knocked down some ten or twelve of the congregation. None were killed on the spot, but Mr. Henry Burr was so badly hurt that his life is despaired of, and a Mr. Young was so seriously burned that he is in great danger; most of the others were also seriously burned and otherwise injured, but it was believed not fatally. The interior of the church was much shattered.

Later from Montevideo and Buenos Ayres.—By the schooner Delaware, from Rio Grande, which port she left on the 11th of June, we learn there has been a severe battle between the Montevideans and the forces of Buenos Ayres, the details of which had not reached Rio Grande previous to the sailing of the Delaware.

Sickness in Louisiana.—The Plaquemine Gazette, of the 20th states that there is considerable sickness on the adjoining plantations, and expresses fears of a sickly season in Iberville, if hot in the whole State. As the river goes down, says the Gazette, the whole country will be filled with stagnant pools, which, with a continuation of such dry weather as has been experienced, must prove very injurious to health.

Murder in New Jersey.—An atrocious murder was committed at Allamuch, Warren county, on the 18th inst. The Newark Post says: A son was shot by his father, Matthew Ayres, the father is a man about 60 years of age.

The son had approached the father's house in the night with a mob for the purpose of riding a woman on a rail that the old man lived with, when the fatal deed was done.

Since the foul murder of the Smiths, by the Anti-Mormons, many of the whig electioneers are boasting that Sweet will beat Hoge in this Congressional District.

A gentleman who was at camp meeting last Sunday heard them endeavoring to make capital even on the Sabbath, out of this foul stain on our state. It would appear that the leaders of the whig party, by their letters printed, first agitated the question which has resulted so lawlessly—all for political effect, and are doing their best to implicate Gov. Ford as conniving at the murders.—Galena Sentinel.

THE MURDER OF THE SMITHS.—"SLAYING UNDER TRUST."

There is no longer room to doubt that Joe Smith and his brother Hyrum were deliberately murdered. The honor of the State of Illinois, already equivocal in pecuniary affairs, will have the stain of blood upon it, if the murderers be not brought to condign punishment. The Smiths had voluntarily surrendered themselves for trial; the law, their custodian, should have been their protecter and shield. They were prisoners, unarmed, incapable of resistance, when in contempt of human law and in defiance of the law of God, they were butchered by a gang of cowardly cut-throats, every one of whom is as worthy of the gallows as any pirate that ever swung. We say again that a foul blot will rest upon the character of the State of Illinois until the assassins have been brought to justice.

The conduct of the Mormons, since the catastrophe, has been deserving of the highest praise. They have kept strictly within the law, leaving their wrongs to be avenged by the constituted authorities of the State. The following resolutions passed by the City Council of Nauvoo, and sanctioned by a meeting of 8000 Mormons, speak for themselves.

Resolved, For the purpose of ensuring peace and promoting the welfare of the county of Hancock, and surrounding country, that we will rigidly sustain the laws, and the Governor of the State, so long as they, and he, sustain us in our Constitutional rights.

Resolved, secondly, That to carry the foregoing resolution into complete effect, that inasmuch as the Governor has taken from us the public arms, that we solicit of him to do the same with all the rest of the public arms of the State.

Resolved, thirdly, To further secure the peace, friendship and happiness of the people, and allay the excitement that now exists, we will reprobate private revenge on the assassins of General Joseph Smith and General Hyrum Smith, by any of the Latter Day Saints. That instead of an "appeal to arms," we appeal to the majesty of the law, and will be content with whatever judgement it shall award, and should the law fail, we leave the matter with God. [N. Y. True Sun.]

A Dreadful Steamboat Explosion.—The Baltimore Patriot of last Friday evening contains a letter, dated at Rio de Janeiro, on the 28th May, giving an account of a steamboat accident which occurred at that place on the 25th, attended with a greater loss of life than any disaster of the kind we ever heard of. The following is an extract:

"This city was thrown into great excitement on Saturday last by an occurrence that has clothed a large number of its inhabitants in mourning, and created a gloom over the whole city. On the opposite side of the harbor, and distant about four miles, is a village, which numbers about three thousand inhabitants, and where a number of the most respectable inhabitants reside, as being more retired than Rio. Two small steamboats ply every hour during the day between the two places, so that the number of passengers are large, especially on holidays, for recreation. Saturday was one of those days, and at four o'clock in the afternoon about three hundred passengers entered on board from the wharf of the city, and the boat had just pushed from the moorings when the boiler burst with a most awful explosion.

"A friend of mine, who was present, represents the scene as the most heart-rending that the imagination can conceive. The boat was a complete wreck, and, amid the shrieks of the wounded, the cries of the drowning, and the confusion of the moment, the most callous heart would have melted into tenderness. The mutilated remains were gathered as soon as possible, and removed to a neighboring hospital—some with the loss of a limb—some dreadfully scalded—and upon numbering them it was found there were eighty-six wounded in the house, besides those removed to private dwellings. There are fifty two ascertained to have been killed, and several persons are missing yet.

"Seven or eight have died since, and I am informed there are as many as twenty who are pronounced incurable, and will probably linger in agony for several days. The number of wounded who are still living, as far as ascertained, is about sixty-five.

"This is the first accident of the kind which has ever occurred here, and has caused great excitement. All places of public amusement were closed, and have not since been opened."

MINIATURE SKETCH OF EUROPE 1844.

It is remarkable that no national change of importance has occurred during the past year. Spain is the only exception; yet even that is more nominal than real. One faction has displaced another. It is the change of a Cabinet. The constitution has remained—the throne has been unshaken. Espartero, a bold and vigorous officer, has been displaced; Narvaez, a bold and vigorous officer, has been raised almost to an equal elevation. The Queen in prospect has become the Queen in possession. The old machinery moves on an old principle, but with a new manager. The old gilded coach of royalty is drawn by the same fiveries. The hand that holds the whip and the reins is changed—voilà tout.

France is colonizing, talking of commercial treaties, frightening the Bey of Tunis, and marching and counter-marching in Algiers. She was doing the same twelve months ago. Nothing is changed. Louis Philippe is still guarded by battalions of gens-d'armes, makes speeches of the most royal generalities at the beginning of the session, and is rejoiced when he can leave Paris and its babouins behind him, and retire to his gardens at Neuilly; promises the world peace, and takes care that the Parisians shall not break it; surrounds his capital with a chain of fortresses that would powder the Faubourg St. Antoine into the dust of its own lanes, and would extinguish the reign of Porte Cochere at the first volley. M. Guizot is minister of the chambers; M. Odillon Barrot is in hopeless opposition. M. Thiers is writing a history which will be as angry, volatile, and short-lived as his own administration; and M. Lamartine is sitting with his finger in his mouth, and his eyes turned backward to the Tuilleries. But all this was the same a twelvemonth ago. Nothing is changed, but the number of the year. The utimania is the only gignette.

Austria has slept. Her only sign of life is an occasional start in her sleep, a cry in which the name of Italy is distinguishable, a shudder when the Russian bear seems to walk across her dreams, and a smile when she murmurs the name of Hungarian liberty. Prince Metternich sits beside her and rocks her cradle; if she yawns, he wraps her up again, rocks the cradle, and sings her to sleep. He is the most experienced nurse in Europe; but he was the same this time twelvemonth. Austria grows corpulent in the quietest manner of any government of Europe. But nothing else is changed.

Russia is hunting deserters, dun-geoning smugglers, and squeezing the Jews. But all this she has been doing for the last half century. She has been conquering deserts of rock, provinces of sand, and mountains of snow. Her Emperor, the most active of mankind, is building ships in the Baltic, which the frost shuts up during a six months' winter, and which the warm rains do during the rest of the year. He sends an army into Circassia which never returns, builds fortresses which are always taken, and publishes a new and infallible plan of campaign which regularly fails. He has the most showy guard in Europe, supplies Petersburg with the best opera, and lies down every night in his boots, and sleeps with pistols under his pillow. But this is routine. During the last twelvemonth the Emperor has changed nothing but his pantaloons, and the Emperor is Russia.

Portugal is a wine-house; a guignette of the south; and ill-forged cafe, with yellow visaged waiters and nothing more. The house is kept by the same family, the same royal sign hangs over the door, and the wine is neither better nor worse. The English minister has attempted to lower the price, and raise the quality; but as this was unprecedented, and as Portugal has long continued to sell its wine which no other nation of Europe would drink, she threatened us with the loss of custom. John Bull listens with terror, and lest Portugal should have a single vintage on her hands, he takes it at her own terms. But this has been done by John Bull for the last hundred years. Nothing is changed in Portugal.

Prussia is ploughing her sandy soil, navigating her shallow rivers, and speculating on being made a great commercial nation with but a single port in her dominions. She maintains an army large enough for the guardianship of Europe, for the protection of territory of ten millions of souls. She is honest, brave, and loyal, but foolish in attempting to manufacture anything beyond tooth-picks. Knives and scissors are beyond her power—they ought to be beyond her ambition. By great effort she may produce a pitchfork, but no change of fortune will ever enable her to produce a scythe. Yet she has been wasting her time, thought, and timber trees on this extravagant hope for the last fifty years.

In Prussia nothing has changed except the maids of honor. Belgium, Holland, Switzerland—is it of any importance to any living being whether they have or have not changed? While the line of battle ships remain at anchor, who cares where or how the wherries, lighters, and bumbouts are engaged? When the men-of-war hoist sail, the small craft must fly or follow. In Europe nothing has changed.—London Paper.

A newspaper is the history of the day; a map of the time; a record of the impulses and feelings and passions of the hour. It is the common receptacle of all that is good—of all that is bad in life; of all that is wise, ridiculous, venerable, dignified or abominable. It displays human nature in every position,—and in every disguise, it is the representative, the impersonation of that powerful but invisible and impalpable being, the public. It is the public in miniature. It assumes the shape of Proteus; it looks about with the eyes of Argus and reaching forth the arm of Briareus, grasps every thing within its reach, and mixing it all into one heterogeneous amalgam, spreads it daily before the world. The grave, the gay, the important, the trifling, the marvelous, the ridiculous, all find their place in the sheet folio of our pages.

Whatever your disposition, whatever your pursuit, you are certain of finding something to your taste in the newspaper. One paragraph informs you of the death of your nearest friends; and the next advises you to buy a new book which the editor declares is the funniest thing ever published, and the next positively assures you that butter is selling at thirty cents a pound. You are told in the same breath that an insurrection has broken out in Catalonia, and that the thermometer stood at eighty-five yesterday, in the shade. Mr. A. has been appointed minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to the court of St. Cloud, and Mr. B. has been sentenced to ten years confinement at hard labor, in the penitentiary. Verily, the ten paragraphs take up about the same amount of space, and Mr. A. does not seem to be viewed in the eye of the printer's devil, as a more important personage than Mr. B. Each is to him about three lines of type. The news of a change of Ministry in England is confirmed; and the report that Mrs. Smith had lost her favorite cat, is contradicted. An engagement has taken place between a Mexican and Texan vessel; and the crop of broom corn, owing to the late frosts, will be unusually short.

With what anxiety is the appearance of the newspaper awaited at the breakfast table, and how pleasant to unfold the damp sheet, while the toast is smoking before you, and the urn hissing at your side. How every paragraph of leading matter swells into importance. How the advertisements, the ship news, and if the times be unusually barren of news, the congressional speeches assume a temporary interest. The last new novel is thrown aside—the letter with the just broken seal is forgotten—the half-told anecdote is broken off and even the topic of scandal under discussion falls upon listless ears; for what can you read about, what can you talk about, that you will not find discussed in the newspaper.

Al! says the head of the family, an eminent merchant, as he glanced at the column headed "commercial," thirteen days later from Europe.

Is there any news, papa? asks his pretty daughter Julia.

News, yes indeed; is the reply. cotton is up a ha'penny—more doing in ashes—and sugar as per our last advice.

What can you think, papa, I care about sugar and cotton? Is any body married? Oh yes, continues Julia, who by this time left her seat, and is peeping over her father's shoulder, into a corner of the paper; Maria Wilkins is married to Mr. Smith, her old beau—a runaway match, how delightful! I wish some one would run away with me, Hush Julia, I am ashamed of you; says aunt Dorcas, who sits at the other end of the table and entertains an old maid's horror of Gretna Green—pray is that a recipe for taking stains out of silk that I see close to your finger!

What's the news from Ohio? enquires the eldest son Thomas, who having no other mischief to lay his hands to, has taken to politics; and has taken of nothing else for six months. Flour up another quarter, answers the commercial father.

The variety of fervations and contrary opinions entertained at the same time by a newspaper is incredible. It regrets to hear that Mr. Brown has broken his leg, rejoices to understand that our enterprising fellow citizen, Mr. Smith, has succeeded in his patent boot-jack, beyond his most sanguine expectations. It is astonished and filled with indignation, at hearing that our representative in congress has voted for the Misquataba bill, and predicts its consequences. The speedy dissolution of our government, and the destruction of our social order, and while you are lamenting such a deplorable state of affairs, and fearing the world will soon come to an end, you are recommended in the succeeding paragraph to visit the theatre, by all means, and hear Andrews sing a favorite comic song. Now take a glance at the advertising columns. Here are medicines which will cure all diseases—lotteries in which you are sure to draw the highest prize—and goods of all kinds selling at less than half their cost. Nothing stale, nothing inferior; everything is of the very first quality, and at the cheapest price. One man announces that he has discovered the philosopher's stone, and another offers for sale half the patent for perpetual motion. Here an old bachelor advertizes for a young wife, offering in himself every inducement for matrimonial speculation; and here a man promises to eat fire, walk under the water, and turn potatoes into sugar plums, every evening for twenty-five cents. A writing master, in an advertisement of a column in length, promises to convert the most illegible, cramped, and deformed hand, into an elegant, expeditious, and flowing style of writing, in five lessons of one hour each; and strangers who have not so much time to spare, can be finished in an hour and a half. A school-master, by a new method composed of a mixture of clock-work and steam, has reduced the time necessary for the acquisition of the learned languages, to the short space of one week, and offers to throw in mathematics and astronomy, to those who will form a class of ten pupils. What is there that you can desire—say, what can you imagine that is not here offered to you in profuse liberality.

Poor Dear Lady!—The London correspondent of the Journal of Commerce writes: "It is said that a proposition will be submitted for augmenting the income of the Queen, on the score of her increasing family, and that her Majesty having become pecuniarily involved, will seek from her faithful parliament a relief from all her difficulties. Her present debts are stated to be £100,000 sterling; the support of herself, husband and court, cost John Bull £70,000 a year—or about $2,120,000! It certainly must be very difficult to keep within such an income."

The Great Elm.—The great Elm near the centre of Boston Common so long an object of admiration and curiosity, is said to have been planted there by a Capt. Daniel Herchman, a hero of the King Phil war about the year 1670, so that at this time it is one hundred and seventy four years old. Half a century ago it was rapidly decaying, but under judicious remedial treatment, it was again restored to health and vigor, and promises long to lord over its leafy neighbors, all of which it far eclipses in grandeur and beauty.

A Thrilling Incident.—The Amherst Cabinet contains a letter describing the melancholy event lately mentioned in this paper, of the blowing up of a powder mill at Danby, Vt., causing the death of three boys, and adds: "Mr. Smith was the first to rush to the scene of ruin; he caught up the first boy he came to, whose features were so disfigured as not to be readily recognized, yet alive and possessing his senses; as he was bearing him away from the scene of calamity, he said to him, whose boy are you? The little sufferer, looking him in the face with tender emotion, said, I am your boy, Pa! And the poor lad died in a few hours after."

The Fire in Hudson.—The number of houses destroyed by the recent fire at Hudson, New York, was forty; and the total loss will probably exceed $150,000; about one half of which is covered by insurance.

That eccentric mortal, Lord Timothy Dexter, said many curious things, but his idea of ingratitude is the richest of the kind we ever met with. "D—n that fellow," said his lordship one day, while speaking of a neighbor whom he had befriended, without being thanked, he is like a hog under the tree, eating acorns, but never thinks of looking up to see where they come from."

The Jews of Poland.—Advice contained in the Hamburg papers of the 17, and dated Polish Frontiers, May 10, state that the lamentation of the Jews, in the kingdom of Poland is boundless at this moment, because the government is seriously engaged in carrying into effect a measure which the Jews have hitherto hoped to avert—namely, to oblige them to military service. Orders have just been received to levy the recruits in all the governments in the course of this month, and no longer to exempt the Jews.

A FAC-SIMILE of the Plates, recently taken from a mound in the vicinity of Kinderhook, Pike County, Illinois and an account of their discovery, may be had by applying at the Printing Office. PRICE twelve and a half cents per copy, or one dollar a dozen.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES. The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.

This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents) brings it within the reach of every person in the community. A large supply of these celebrated articles just received and for sale by

JOSEPH SMITH.

TUNE.—Star in the East.

Praise to the man who commun'd with Jehovah,

Jesus anointed "that Prophet and Seer,"

Blessed to open the last dispensation—

Kings shall extol him, and nations revere.

CHORUS.—Hail to the Prophet, anointed to heaven.

Traitors and tyrants now fight him in vain,

Mingling with Gods, he can plan for his brothers,

Death cannot conquer the hero again.

Praise to his memory, he died as a martyr;

Honor'd and blest be his ever great name;

Long shall his blood, which was shed by assassins,

Stain Illinois, while the earth lasts his fame.

CHORUS.—Hail to the Prophet, &c.

Great is his glory, and endless his priesthood,

Ever and ever the keys he will hold;

Faithful and true he will enter his kingdom,

Crown'd in the midst of the prophets of old.

CHORUS.—Hail to the Prophet, &c.

SACRIFICE brings forth the blessings of heaven

Earth must atone for the blood of that man

Wake up the world for the conflict of justice,

Millions shall know "brother Joseph" again.

CHORUS.—Hail to the Prophet, &c.

From the Times and Seasons.

TO ELDER JOHN TAYLOR.

BY MISS ELIZA R. SNOW.

Thou Chief of Zion! henceforth thy name

Will be sung with the martyrs and share in their fame;

Thou' ages eternal of thee will be said,

With the greatest of prophets the suffer'd and blest.

When the shafts of injustice were pointed at him—

When the cruellest of rings was girded to the limb—

When his innocent blood was innocently shed,

Who shed his afflictions and with him you died.

When around you lay the agonies of the righteous dead—

When the passage of death ope'd a wide way to view—

When the prophet's feet were thro' martyrdom led,

In your love you lay with martyrs you dead.

All the scars from your wounds, like the trophies of yore

Shall be emblems of honor till you arise no more;

And by all generations, of their shall be said

"With the best of the prophets in prison he died"

THE WIFE'S APPEAL.

My husband! why, why turn your head?

As if a curse were in that round!

I know I'm changed since we were wed,

And though a fairer may yet have found,

Yet hear me! by those tokens past,

Which memory brings before me now,

How sorrow's heavy cloud had cast

Its darkness shadow o'er my brow.

The voice you scarcely brook to hear,

Had then for you the sweetest tone;

And by these weeping eyes you swear,

These eyes whose brightness long hath flown.

And by these lips that spoke to thee,

And by this heart so crushed and sore,—

Fy these and heaven you swore to be,

Faithful till earth knew heaven no more.

What crime is mine that I am left

Alone to weep, alone to pine

O'er hopes long from my heart bereft.

And joys no more that may be mine?

Oh! tell that sin, if sin there be!

Which makes me frightful to thine eyes,

And I pray on benighted knees,

And wash it out with tears and sighs.

Oh! teach me what is thy behest,

And bid perform whatever it be,

Save from my bleeding heart it wreath

The love that still must cling to thee.

Yet, oh! forbid that very love

Within its weakness so profound,

Have too adoring love to prove

Reck the cause, itself the wound.

Look on our boy, how sweet he sleeps,

Indolent of a mother's care,

Who now in supplication weeps,

His sire to save her from despair.

See on his cherub brow the curls,

In golden clusters softly press,—

And from his parted lips the pearls

Are starting forth in loveliness.

A happy glow is on his face,

And he can kiss so sweet thy name;

Thy lineaments in his I trace,

His smile as thine once was, the same—

Perchance the mother, too, is there;

And from that likeness thou dost turn,

As one long faded from thy care—

For whom thy love no more may burn.

Our boy I've treasured him so well,

Because he so resembled thee,

Oh! hear me yet, say not farewell,

And I will mute and patient be,

It was in vain to meet with those Who crushed his soul with damning guilt;

He leaves me with heart breaking woes,

To mourn and pray the dreary while.

Descent of the Mississippi—Floods on the Upper Mississippi.

New-Orleans, June, 1844.

I have just made a trip down the Mississippi in one of our elegant and spacious steamers, on board of which each passenger had a commodious state-room assigned him, with one door opening on the guards, and another entering an airy saloon cabin, which is elevated above the heat, dirt, and offensive odors of the deck and hold.

To this comfortable apartment, when tired of a lounge upon the promenade, or when the chat of the social hall linguishes or grows wearisome, the passenger may retire, and in all the privacy and seclusion of his own chamber, sit and contemplate the rapidly passing scene before him, and when that grows monotonous or familiar, with his book or writing materials, he finds agreeable employment for a dull hour. Thus, in the space of five days at a cost of $10 only, we are wafted, in a floating palace, furnished with all the comforts and luxuries of a hotel, a distance of 1600 miles, from the fresh verdure and opening flowers of Spring—from the newly planted fields, where corn was just struggling through the ground in Iowa and Wisconsin, to regions where the matured fruits of summer are being gathered and already in the market.

The weather on shore was sultry and oppressive, but borne along by a swift flight upon a booming current,

at a speed that outstript the flight of the mosquito, thereby leaving these musical companions behind us, we created in the sluggish atmosphere a brisk, bracing current, almost as refreshing as the mountain breeze. As we passed along the full overflowing banks of the "Father of Waters," on the ridge which this mighty artery of a continent has been, through ages, building up to itself, from the bottom of a vast inland sea, and over which its current now runs as through an aqueduct, elevated many feet above the adjoining lands, we could look on over the cleared plantations, as if we were passing along the summit of a gentle acclivity, commanding a view of the sloping vales on either side; and our steamer when viewed from the rear of one of these plantations, appeared to the beholder to be sweeping through a vast canal, carried along the ridge of a high land.

All the tributaries flowing from the West, and having their sources at the base of the Rocky Mountains, having this season brought down swollen floods that have overflowed their own banks and spread devastation through their course, have filled the banks of the Mississippi to the brim; and from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of Red River, the waters at every low point, are bursting over the banks, and rushing with the rapid current of a mill tail, back, at right angles, to the River, to the swamps and lakes in the rear, which are, in places, five, ten, twenty and thirty miles distant from the river. These are rapidly filling up, and the back water is gradually approaching on the back side of the plantations that do not overflow in front. And in many places as we passed, we saw but a narrow strip of dry land on the immediate banks of the river, which peered a few inches above the wild flood in front of it, and the turbid waters—which were buried to the depth of two or three feet in the flood. And the cabins of the poor wood choppers—who, under the provisions of Mr. Benton's pre-emption land bill, have squatted upon nearly every unimproved quarter section along the river, more with the view to cut the wood than to secure an eligible spot for permanent settlement, and who consequently have laid their claims upon all the lowland as well as other—were standing in many instances amid a flood of angry, turbulent waters and the poor inmates were seen still adhering to their desolate dwellings, or paddling about them on rafts or in 'dug outs,' buffeting the wild invading current, and striving to preserve some portion of the product of their winter's chopping, which was rapidly taking its departure for the Delta of the Mississippi; they looked like a company of beavers whose habitations had been rudely invaded by a torrent.

In coming to for wood, we often found ourselves in the middle of a field, and surrounded by the stumps and decaying trees of a recent clearing, to some one of which we moored our boat; and once, by the unlucky management of the pilot, or the engineer,

we brought away the roof and chief portion of a log cabin, all standing up on our bow; it was dark, and a fearful thunder gust was approaching;

what other shelter the poor fellows had in that lone wilderness spot, surrounded by a turbid, angry flood, amid impenetrable darkness and the crash of thunder, and the rage of a pitiless storm—we stopped not to inquire, but went dashing on our way.

In two or three instances we passed extensive estates of a thousand acres or more, on which a hundred, or a hundred and fifty hands were employed where the current had undermined the bank, acres of land had fallen in, carrying with it the levee, and opening a breach through which the waves rushed, and the verdant and cultivated fields, in all their pride of richness and beauty, were given up to desolation and ruin. The ranges of neat white negro cabins were being swept, one after another, away, and the noble mansion of the proprietor was falling; and the labor of years, and the fruits of a life of industry, in a

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 14, 1844.

MAYOR OF NAUVOO.

Daniel Spencer, Esq. at the last sitting of the city council, was appointed to act as mayor of this city till the next election. The selection is a good one.

THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

A laudable respect for the wise course pointed out to us, as a church and people, by our late venerable and distinguished fellow servant, and president of said church, Joseph Smith, who was our candidate for the presidential chair of the United States, but who was inhumanly murdered by a portion of the powers that exist in this land, will lead us to, if nothing more, leave him to vote for a Chief Magistrate of this government! As a people we have exercised the elective franchise, heretofore, as far as we could, for our own good, and the best interest of the nation, but what have we gained? Nothing! The simple answer is, touching any redress or redemption in consequence of our banishment without just cause or provocation, from the "Independent Republic of Missouri," at an immense sacrifice of land and property, and the land purchased of the general government.

It would seem from all past experience in our case, that partisans and politicians, while they lose our votes, they hate our influence and prosperity, and therefore, after they have obtained their aims and ends, leave us among the missing, perfectly contented to chuckle over the sufferings of having used us as a passport to honor, profit, fame and wealth for their own gracious benefit, and then shove us aside to guess our way to respectability, competency, privilege and even a moderate share of morality—clandestinely acting the "Levite," that we may drag out and draw along a stript existence in exile, among what is highly lauded to the nations of the earth, as a great, mighty free people—THE ASYLUM OF THE OPPRESSED!!

Such conduct manifested to us as a people, is cruel, unjust, and oppressive; and, as not one of the candidates now before the nation for the high office of Chief Magistrate, has given us a pledge, that if he be elected to that exalted station, he will use all honorable means, constitutionally, lawfully, physically and forcibly to grant us redress and redemption for all wrongs; and as our candidate for this high office, has been butchered in cold blood, for aught we know to the contrary, to prevent him from being elected, and the murderers running at large with impunity; and as we are not abolitionists and will not go against one half the interests of the nation—what shall we do as honest and consistent men? Shall we honor the "views of the powers and policy of the government," as published by the now martyred Gen. Joseph Smith? WE WILL. Therefore let every man of our faith be left free to choose and act for himself, but as a people we will honor the opinions and wisdom of our martyred General; and, as a matter of propriety, we cannot vote for, or support a candidate for the presidency, till we find a man who will pledge himself to carry out Gen. Smith's views of the powers and policy of the government as he published them. Patriotism and integrity demand this course from every true Latter day Saint. Unus pro omnibus.

WHISKY-MEN BEWARE!

The Mayor requests the Marshal and police to see that the ordinances are not invaded by whisky-men, either selling or giving away this bane of morality. The extent of the law, twenty-five dollars will be exacted of every person that breaks it.

Vulgarity and Animosity.

One of the most prominent characteristics of a popular newspaper, periodical, candidate for office, or gentleman, in the 19th century, is vulgarity and animosity. The virtue and patriotism of our illustrious fathers, have been dragged down by demagogues, and hid up and rusted by priests, till billingsgate, and vice, are more honorable in the highest circles than morality. Oh shame on such a corrupt generation.

NO NEWS.

There seems to be a blank in the news of the day: i. e. No riots or mobs by the last mail. Outbreaks have been so general that to the question, what is the news?—it has been expected to answer, "another mob at vide passion;" or symptoms of a riot at ruffiansburgh. A smart chap inquired at the office the other day, "why we did not give some details of war;" and a second said "any outbreak in New York?" To our reply, why?—Because laughing is catching—their turn next.

Foreign School Houses Health &c.

Horace Man of Boston, has lately visited Europe, and examined the School houses among the various continental Kingdoms of the old world, which gives some foreign light on the plan as well as the health of the children. From his late report we copy a few remarks in relation to the subject of his enquiries:

"With the exception of the magnificent private establishments in England and France, I have never seen scarcely a schoolhouse in Europe worthy to be compared even with the second rate class of our own. And even those princely edifices were far inferior to ours in their fittings up and internal arrangements. In Scotland, and in some parts of England the schools for the poorer classes were crowded to a degree, of which we have never seen an example, and of which we can hardly form a conception. I have seen more than four hundred children in two rooms, only 20 by 30 each; and in Lancasterian schools, a thousand children in a single room. In Prussia, and in the other States of Germany, which I visited, the schoolhouses were of a very humble character. I should here make one exception in favor of Loipsic, in the kingdom of Saxony, which, in addition to having one of the best, if not the very best system of education to be found in any city of Germany, has also excellent schoolhouses; and one of the last erected as a charity school for poor children, is the best.

One striking peculiarity of almost all of the Prussian and Saxon Schoolhouses, is that they contain apartments for the residence of the teacher and his family.

In many places in Holland I found that arrangements had been made, on scientific principles, for warming and ventilating the school rooms, but in Germany never. In the schools of the latter country, whether high or low, there was an astonishing degree of ignorance or inattention to the laws of health and life, so far as they depend upon breathing pure air. The atmosphere of the rooms was often intolerable; in the hottest summer days, only one window of a room full of children would be open; and when the door was opened for their egress or ingress, the window was closed. The stoves by which the rooms are warmed in winter, resemble very much, in the principles of their construction, those which we call "air tight," and they are often so placed as to be fed at a door outside of the room, so as to prevent even that slight change of air which is caused when that in the room is used to sustain the combustion of the fuel. To my very frequent question, in what manner the rooms were ventilated, the universal reply was, by opening a window or door; a very insufficient theory, and one which I fear, poor as it is, is seldom reduced to practice. When I surveyed the condition of things in Massachusetts, preparatory to making that part of my last report, which relates to human physiology, I almost came to the conclusion that there could be no part of the civilized world, where less attention was paid to the laws of health and life than among ourselves. My present opinion is, that ignorant and inattentive as we are, there is no part of the world, that is not as much or even more so. What benefits then must flow to mankind from a universal knowledge and practice of the principles of the beautiful and noble science of physiology?

Tall Corn.—A "Down Easter," it is stated, recently told a citizen of the Lone Star Republic, "that nothing could beat the corn in Connecticut. The Texan said he knew nothing of the crops in that section, but in his country the corn stalks bore seven or eight large ears, and a gourd on the top with several quarts of shelled corn in it. The Yankee took his hat and marvelled.—Transcript.

"But" said a western negro, Massa Texum and Yankum, dat be nothin, de quoin bout the hazle patch and bottom of de west, hab bout ten per's pon de stork, shellin quart an eer wid a coon on top, wid two big eers more, an two dogs an two niggers arter him, wid two eers a pies pon dem—and de stock do fast rate for fence pole. Vahl vahl vahl!

A SPECK IN THE SOUTH.

A letter from J. G. Holmes of the state of South Carolina, in the Charleston Mercury, is rather on the order of Rebellion: "At any rate it flashes into symptoms of disorder, and brings nullification into the field of 'equal rights,' on this wise; passive obedience or resistance. All this on account of our illiberal Tariff, abolition jangle, and yankee-speculation. Divide the Union, usurp authority; multiply unwise laws; and finally force the people to ruin and bloodshed, because a bloated, cowardly miserly Congress legislate for themselves and not for the people.

Mr. Holmes' letter concludes thus:—"I am obliged to acknowledge, that after the position assumed by S. Carolina in 1832; after the declaration she put forth at the time, she through the convention, adopted the compromise, 'That if the expiration of ten years brought not the promised relief, she would again resist,' that the resolution passed in our Legislature in 1842, asserting resistance after the hope of relief had fled—all call for a manly avowal of our determination. The only valve of liberty consists in the security imparted to property, and the protection thrown around society. Our property and society depend so essentially and intimately upon our peculiar institutions, that whatever affects those institutions injuriously, endangers our liberty. Liberty is a blessing too inestimable for a State of People to yield it, when there appears any probability of preserving or recovering it, however great the labor or imminent the peril. If then, we have rights which we solemnly believe are violated—if rights are without a remedy, be an absurdity—if our wisest politicians and most profound statesmen despair of any ordinary remedy, the remedy in this case must be the extraordinary one of Resistance. For it must be admitted that affairs have come to that extremity, that the constitution can be defended by it alone.

I trust that I have spoken plainly—I know that I have spoken honestly.

The opinions of others, wiser and more sagacious than myself, to whom the State looks for counsel, and whose eyes are ever watchful over her interests, differ from my own. A remedy it is thought, may be found in other expedients. It is certainly due to those who have piloted us through so many difficulties, that we act not rashly; that we wait awhile the chapter of accidents. But upon the failure of those expected remedies, we must finally decide—Passive obedience or Resistance—I cannot hesitate.

State Exercise on Domestic Manufactures.—A State excise would be one of the worst forms of separate State action that could be devised. If tried and abandoned, it would destroy the moral influence of the State. It would constitute a direct approach against the sagacity of the people. What then, it may be asked, is the remedy? Is it not to be found in counter legislation. It cannot exist in a war of fiscal regulations. Taxation in one form is not the proper corrective for taxation in another form. After volumes of discussion and debate, the remedy must ultimately be sought in a change of industrial pursuits; we have called on the owners of slaves and lands in South Carolina to prepare themselves for this change. They cannot oppose that greater law of progress which is effecting a revolution in the application of capital and modes of industry between the old and new settled regions of the country. It would be the vastest of efforts to meet this change by legislation. It would be opposing the policy of man to the fiat of nature, let this be preparation therefore, by individual enterprise, judiciously directed, and not by the combined efforts in the shape of legislation. The first is recommended by a rational probability of success—the last must terminate in failure.

What statesman whose judgment is not made infirm by preconceived theory can fail to perceive that this is a question of relative natural capabilities—that is whether the system of protection stands or is subverted. South Carolina must enter upon a new career of productive employment—that nature is against her, as a cotton-producing State, and that unless she can maintain competition with her sisters, not so favored by nature, in the arts, manufacturing and mechanical, her case is hopeless. We, however, have hope; hope in our natural advantages—hope in our people under the combined stimulus of gain and necessity. South Carolina possesses those aids and appliances from nature that counterbalance, in a considerable degree, a greater progress made in the use of arts by older countries. She has for manufacturing purposes water power and sites for mills in abundance; she enjoys a climate whose water courses are not locked up by frosts in any period of the year. The raw material for cotton fabrics is native to her. Here are relative advantages over the older States engaged in manufacturing processes, which, if not so decided as those of the new cotton States as compared with the old, counterbalance the greater advance made and making in old as compared with new manufacturing States. An intermixture of slave with white labor may bring the south, in this respect, nearer to an equality with the north, in its advantage of a greater density of population, than many imagine.

What then is required to profit by these advantages, to meet the change which inevitable circumstances and the law of nature, are forcing on us? Determination, energy, practicality, a due knowledge of the details of unmanagement. We want the example of a few enterprising individuals who know how to combine judicious economy with prudent adventure. Companies are not the instruments of successful manufacturing, unless cautiously framed on the principles of the eastern corporations, where individual management and responsibility constitute the essential features.

A preparatory knowledge of those processes of skill and modes of management prevailing in the eastern establishments, with individual supervision and cautious extension; are the elements of manufacturing success in the south. And the statesmen of South Carolina may be assured, and the conviction must come home to them, ultimately, that it is not by a fiscal policy—not by a retaliatory taxation, or even State combination, that the south can be invigorated in her productive powers or her decline arrested; but solely by the moral influence of individual example, in giving that direction to her natural resources which will meet the exigencies of inevitable change.

Great excitement prevails throughout the world to know "who shall be the successor of Joseph Smith?"

In reply, we say, be patient, be patient a little, till the proper time comes, and we will tell you all. "Great wheels move slow." At present, we can say that a special conference of the church was held in Nauvoo on Thursday last, and it was carried without a dissenting voice, that the "Twelve" should preside over the whole church, and when any alteration in the presidency shall be required, reasonable notice will be given; and the elders abroad, will bear exhibit their wisdom to all men, by remaining silent on those things they are ignorant of.—Bishops Whitney and Miller have been appointed trustees, to manage the financial concerns of the church, and will soon enter on the duties of their calling.

vana, the New York Sun has received papers up to the 17th of last month. The most interesting item of intelligence by this arrival is the publication of facts developed by the investigations into the origin and objects of the late conspiracy among the blacks to get possession of the island. The report of the military commission, occupies six closely printed columns, of the Diario de la Habana of the 15th ult. Mr. Turnbull, late British consul in Cuba, and now residing in the British Island of Jamaica, is openly accused of instigating the slaves to insurrection, with a design to overthrow the white government and open the way for England to "divide and conquer" that fertile and valuable possession. It appears to have been a desirable plot to rehearse the bloody and atrocious scenes of the St. Domingo massacre, in which British emissaries figured so conspicuously. Among the persons punished for participation in the conspiracy, we notice five English names, namely: Andrew J. Dodge, condemned to death; Daniel Quells; Joseph Dustis and Lewis Degal, transported; John Gibster to be put under surveillance.

FROM PHILADELPHIA.

The Southwark Riots—More Arrests.—Five more arrests of persons for participating in the Southwark riots were made yesterday morning. Stephen House, an old man, was brought before the Criminal Court, charged by Eaton Harwood, who has turned Commonwealth's evidence, with giving him an horn full of powder with which to load a cannon he was using. House was bound over in $1000. James Sweeney, Daniel Kane and James Coffee were arraigned before the Recorder on a charge of creating a riot on Sunday, and beating the Montgomery Hibernian Greens, by throwing stones at them. They were held to bail for trial in $1000 each.—T. Wood McKinley, son of Alderman McKinley, appeared before the Recorder, charged on the bath of James Black with using expressions calculated to give countenance to those concerned in the riot. He was required to enter security in $1500 to keep the peace for six months.

Shocking Accident.—John P. Coffin, an elderly man, living in Pearl street, between Vine and Wood, met with a shocking accident on Wednesday evening. He had put a horse, which he had just purchased at the Horse Market, to his cab to try him. The animal ran away, and on the Columbia Railroad, at the corner of Schuylkill Eighth street, the cab was upset and dashed to pieces, and Mr. Coffin thrown out. His head struck the rails and was dreadfully contused. He was conveyed to the hospital in an apparently dying condition. Mr. C. was somewhat better yesterday.—He has a wife and two children.

Cool.—A rough looking fellow, calling himself William Strawberry, was arrested and brought before Alderman Redman on Wednesday evening, who had gone into an eating house in a street near by, and after calling for and discussing the merits of a veal cutlet, a beef steak and a dozen fried oysters, with the utmost coolness imaginable refused to pay the bill on the ground of his entire inability to do so. The fellow was committed for obtaining goods under false pretences. On his way to prison he assaulted the officer who had him in custody in a cab, and at the prison door he attempted to run away but was caught.—Phil. Times, 19th inst.

OUTRAGE IN CANADA.

We have often noticed with feelings of regret, the acrimonious manner in which the Canadian papers have seized and commented upon any outbreak of the peace which has occurred this side the border. We do not think our papers have generally, or in all cases, recriminated as they could have done, had they been so disposed, but now and then an instance of more than ordinary brutality takes place which for the sake of contrasting the love of good order of the people, it is right to make public. We subjoin a case from the Montreal Herald of the 16th inst. By the remark of the Herald we are sorry to observe that Philadelphia is like to become a "by-word and a reproach."

We have heard of outrages enough to fill our columns, committed upon peaceable citizens by villains whose sole plea for their fiendish wickedness was that they supposed their victims to be Orange men. Who these villains are, is a matter of suspicion as to the individual, but we deeply regret to say that belief is too general and too certain as to the class to which they belong. Among a numerous list of cases we shall select one other in addition to those we mentioned yesterday. On Sunday evening, two days after the 19th of July, a respectable Irish laborer, who is not a Roman Catholic, was going home through William street, Grifftown, about ten o'clock, when he was accosted by three men who asked him his name. On his replying they called him a d-d orangeman; and fell upon him with sticks. They struck him about the Nauvoo and Carthage will become the Mecca and Medina of the Mormon Prophet, and thousands of devotees may be drawn to make holy pilgrimages to the scenes of the prophet's labors and of his death.

But what shall be said of the Saturday Courier of this city, a paper which has its motto, in starting capital, "Neutrality in Politics and Religion." Can any of the numerous readers of the Courier have failed to notice the undying enmity of the editor of that paper towards the Mormons or Latter Day Saints? The Courier's strange kind of neutrality has been exhibited towards this sect, "which is every where spoken against," for the last seven years. The next number of that paper, will most likely, with much grace in humble imitation of the Inquirer, head a paragraph respecting Joseph Smith's murder, with the words, "Horrible!! we can scarce credit the account," but before this is done, I would recommend the editor to re-peruse the pleasant article in the Courier of the 19th of June, headed "Peppering a Mormon," in which with such evident malignant satisfaction and delight he describes an attempt by a mob to murder by strangulation a Mormon Preacher in Hagerstown, which attempt failed by the timely escape of the Preacher, and not by any effort on the part of the authorities; or of the citizens present to prevent it.

The Courier should for the sake of truth and consistency, strike its flag of neutrality in Religion, while it wages a war of extermination against the Mormons; the only sect in christianendom, who in this nineteenth century can exhibit the irresistible evidence of martyrdom, in support of its cause.

The newspapers throughout our land, with very few exceptions, and there, to their honor be it said, not professing neutrality in Religion, have given their tacit consent for the adoption of Lynch Law; if they have not openly advocated it, so far as the Mormons are concerned; now, when they find the seeds they have sown are beginning to spring up in a plentiful harvest of blood, affect to be astonished, and cry out, "horrible!! we can scarce credit the account." The writer of these remarks regrets his inability to give a biographical sketch of Joseph Smith, the Mayor of Nauvoo. But the world will not long wait for the biography of a man whose actions in life have ranked him among the truly great; and whose death of martyrdom for the religion he taught will consecrate his character and prolong the effect of his labors to succeeding generations.

Not long after the massacre of the Mormons in Missouri, the writer of this sketch, had the pleasure of seeing and of becoming acquainted with Joseph Smith, while he was on a visit to this city. Although he then endured bodily affliction, and great mental suffering, owing to the great privations he had undergone, and the slaughter of many of his friends, yet he appeared calm and dignified in his deportment, and perfectly resigned to the calamitous events which had befallen him. In person Mr. Smith was taller than the ordinary size of men, well formed and with commanding aspect. His countenance was free, open and prepossessing; no one could discover anything in his face but love and kindness and charity towards all his fellow creatures. He was easy of access to all that sought his acquaintance, and in a remarkable degree unassuming. A short acquaintance with Mr. Smith was sufficient to convince the most skeptical of his inability to do any dishonorable or immoral act, much less to commit those high and horrible crimes with which he has been frequently charged, and as frequently proved to be innocent.

After his return from the dungeons of Missouri, Mr. Smith repaired to Washington, and in a respectful manner laid his grievances and those of his sect before the President and Congress. Instead of obtaining redress from the representatives of the people for the lands and property of his friends, which had been confiscated by the people of Missouri, he and his brethren received only insult and additional injury.

He subsequently bent his way, under apparently happier auspices, to Illinois, in search of a place, where he and those of his profession might live in peace, and be permitted to worship his God in their own way, and where none might molest or make them afraid. He selected a beautiful site for a city, on the banks of the Mississippi, and having purchased the land, he invited his followers to join him. Hundreds nay thousands, became proselytes to the faith he professed, hard sufferings had already given his preachers an astonishing success, and multitudes flocked to Nauvoo as to a place of refuge, and commenced building the city.

And what has been the result? In a spot where eight or nine years ago the feet of—man seldom trod, where the panther and the bear had roamed without meeting a human face, there are now congregated upwards of ten thousand souls. An increase like this, probably unparalleled in the United States, and certainly was never exhibited in any other country.

But a greater honor to this city and its founder remains to be mentioned—Within this city there is more order, more personal security, more public virtue, more industry and fewer instances of crime prevailing, than in any town of its size in the world.

And who has been the centre of attraction of such a population? What master spirit has brought these thousands together from far different countries—with habits of life and modes of thinking exceeding dissimilar, embracing, heretofore, systems of faith entirely discordant? The whole world will answer, it was Joseph Smith, a man everywhere spoken against, a man who was stigmatized with the epithets of liar, thief, robber, traitor, and even murderer, by those very men, who in all their conduct towards him and his people, from first to last have convinced the world that they were trying to attach to him names which more properly belonged to themselves. A man who by his death of martyrdom will multiply his followers by hundreds, and perpetuate his name to the latest generations.

In the process of time the city was incorporated by a special act of the Legislature of Illinois; and at an election subsequently held, in pursuance of the act of incorporation, Joseph

Smith was, without opposition, elected Mayor; which office he held up to the time of his death, giving entire satisfaction to nine-tenths of the population of Nauvoo.

Such was the man whom the public press throughout the country has incessantly traduced and vilified. It has maddened the brain and embittered the bosoms of millions of the American people against an innocent man, an unoffending religious sect, that sect too of our own nation and kindred.

But fanaticism has done its worst with Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and although no Mormon myself, (never having been a dozen times in their churches.) I would much rather take Joseph Smith's chance for happiness in that undiscovered country whither he has been so untimely hastened, than that of any of his traducers.

Joseph and Hyrum Smith, while living were the heads of a numerous and increasing sect.—By their deaths they become canonized; and the influence of their opinions, whether for good or for evil, has received a powerful if not an irresistible impetus. Mormonism has just commenced its career. It will date its greatest triumphs from the massacre at Carthage, Missouri.

And the time is not far distant, when the murderers of Joseph Smith, and those who have incited to murder, will be held as execrable, and their names only remembered with infamy, while a monument reaching to the clouds will point the pilgrim and way-farer to the sepulchre of the great Founder of Nauvoo, and tell to succeeding ages, the deeds of one of whom it may be truly said, he was a father to the fatherless, and a friend to the widow in her affliction.

ANCIENT RUINS IN TEXAS.

We have been informed by a gentleman who has traversed a large portion of the Indian country of northern Texas, the country lying between Santa Fe and the Pacific, that there are vestiges of ancient cities and ruined castles or temples on the Rio Puerco and on the Colorado of the West. He says, that on one of the branches of the Rio Puerco, a few days travel from Santa Fe, there is an immense pile of ruins that appears to belong to an ancient temple. Portions of the walls are still standing, consisting of huge blocks of limestone regularly hewn and laid in cement. The building occupies an extent of more than an acre. It is two or three stories high, has no roof, but contains many rooms, generally of a square form, without windows and the lower rooms are so dark and gloomy that they resemble caverns rather than apartments of an edifice built for a human habitation. Our informant was unable to describe the style of architecture, but he believes it could not have been erected by Spaniards or Europeans, as the stones are much worn by the rains, and indicates that the building has stood several hundred years. From his description, we are induced to believe that it resembles the ruins of Palenque or Otuluan. He says that there are many similar ruins on the Colorado of the West, which empties into the California sea. In one of the valleys of the California traversed by this river, and about four hundred miles from its mouth, there is a large temple still standing its walls and spires presenting scarcely any trace of dilapidation, and were it not for want of a roof it might still be rendered habitable. Near it, scattered along the declivity of a mountain, are the ruins of what has been once a large aqueduct, part of which however is in the solid rock still visible. Neither the Indians residing in the vicinity, nor the oldest Spanish settlers of the nearest settlements, can give any account of the origin of these buildings. They merely know that they have stood there from the early periods to which their traditions extend. The antiquarian who is desirous to trace the Aztec or Toltec races in their emigrations from the northern regions of America, may find in these ancient edifices many subjects of curious speculation.

A New Trick.

The gold, coins of England have suffered considerable debasement for some time past by a new and ingenious device, which is so successful as to oblige the government to order a new coinage. The cheat is effected in the following manner: From the rim towards the centre of a sovereign or half sovereign, several holes are drilled with a very fine instrument, and vacancies filled up with an inferior metal, so as to deceive the most experienced judges. By this process a sovereign is rendered in many instances not worth more than 17s. and a half sovereign not more than 8s. 6d. or 9s. The master of the mint and the assayer are busily engaged in witnessing many experiments, with a view to prevent the abstraction of the gold taking place without immediate detection. Workmen have commenced casting the new coinage which will be shortly issued. The expense will be very great, but the government has been obliged to incur it, in consequence of the system having much injured the credit and confidence in the value of British gold, not only at home but on the Continent.—North American.

Salt Springs in Florida.—A letter was received in this City a few days ago, from a friend in St. Augustine, stating the discovery by a party of settlers in the neighborhood of Fort Mellon, of several salt springs, running from the South into the adjoining lake. The water is said to be very saline, and the springs having the appearance of being constant. In this discovery the unsettled and public lands in that part of the Territory, will be much enhanced in value, and we may soon anticipate steps being taken to manufacture in that remote part of our country.

head and shoulders till they felled him to the ground. Some of the neighbors, alarmed by his cries, hastened to the spot and the miscreants made off. He was taken up, quite insensible, and carried into a house, where he was brought to life again. His head was yesterday awful again. His eyes were black, his cheeks swelled and livid, and his lips cut apparently by the force of blows upon his teeth. Altogether, he was a figure to excite pity in the bosom of any, but the accusers who chose to call him an orangeman.

We understand that the coroner held an inquest on the body of John Cowley who was murdered at Newburgh by a Canaan, named Patrick Dalton, and issued his warrant for Dalton's apprehension; but as the Canaan is now-a-days rulers, as well as electors, of every district in which they work, the warrant has hitherto proved waste paper, and is likely to remain so. Dalton is said to have gone off to the U. States. He was Cowley's brother-in-law. Cowley was a very quiet inoffensive man. Murder and every other violent crime seem to be committed by these miscreants without being looked upon as wrongs. No wonder that their lawless inhumanities should have brought them into general hatred on the lines of public works in the United States. Is Canada to be made another Tipperary? or Montreal a Philadelphia? [Abb. Atlas.]

From the St. Louis Recvile.
THE CHAMBERSBURGH TORNADO.
We have noticed, in brief, this terrible calamity. We give a few details with regard to the destruction of the paper mill.

There were nineteen persons in the mill at the time it fell, all were taken out alive, but some of them so dreadfully injured as to have no hopes of their recovery.

The mill was one hundred and fifty feet long, fifty feet wide, and five stories high.

Dr. E. Culbertson is very severely injured. When he was first discovered he was hanging by the feet, which had been caught among the timber. It was a considerable time before he could be taken from his perilous situation, on account of the difficulty of getting to him, and the heavy weight of timber resting on his feet.

He screamed frightfully, and begged of those around him to cut off his legs, and save him from the horrible agony he was suffering; his ankle bone is fractured, and he is bruised very much, but not considered dangerous.

Another son of Mr. Reid, quite a child, had his skull fractured. He was got out also by the females. It was heart sickening to hear the poor child beg of the doctors to save his life. His case is considered bad.

Philip Craver and Michael Craver (Germans) father and son, are both very seriously injured—the father dangerously—his shoulder has been fractured, and some of his ribs, also, besides several bodily injuries.

The son was discovered hanging by the hand, which had been caught by the timber; he suffered dreadfully—the flesh of his hand very much torn.

He tried to get his knife out of his pocket to cut off the hand by which he hung.

Sickness in the New York State Prison.
—A letter from New York, says:

A letter has been received from the keepers of Auburn State prison, which says, that out of 900 convicts there last week, 700 were sick with the cholera morbus, and that on Wednesday last, only one hundred days work was performed by the whole of the inmates.

Canine Sagacity.—A curious instance of the intelligence of a dog is related. The animal belonged to a celebrated chemist, who tried upon it the effect of a certain poison, and on the next day administered a dose of counter-poison, which had the effect of preserving the poor creature's life. The next day, another dose was offered him; but, mercifully said he, he would not touch it. Different sorts of poisonous drugs were presented to him, but he resolutely refused. Bread was offered, but he would not touch it; meat, but he turned from it with water but he would not drink. To re-assure him, his master offered him bread and meat of which he himself ate in the presence of the dog; and of that, the sagacious animal hesitated not to partake. He was taken to a fountain, but he would drink nowhere but from that spot where the water gushed free and fresh. This continued for several days, until the master, touched by the extraordinary intelligence of the poor creature, resolved to make no more attempts upon him with his poisons. The dog is now very gay and very happy, but he will eat of nothing that he does not first see his master touch, nor will he drink except from the purest spot of the fountain.

Independent Post Offices.—Poor Mr. Wickliffe, who is traveling for pleasure through our State with his charming daughters, is fated to meet with many mortifying evidences of the decay of the Post Office Department. When he landed at Rochester, he came full tilt against one of Pomeroy's Independent Post Offices, fitted up with shelves, counters, boxes, and all the paraphernalia of a regular Post Office—clerks taking in the Spanish shillings at twelve and a half cents, and crowds of people asking for letters; no one going to the legitimate Post Office.—N. Y. Paper.

Discoveries in Arabia—Discoveries of ancient inscriptions found in 1834, at Hadramant, cut on the ruins of an ancient city, are exciting the attention of learned men. They have been deciphered by the Rev. Mr. Foster, of England, a well-known Oriental scholar, and are supposed to have been written in the times of Jacob and Joseph. It is stated that in a New York paper that the inscription is in three parts. The longest is of ten lines, engraved on a smooth piece of rock forming one side of the terrace at Hiss Ghorab. Then there are three short lines, found on a small detached rock, on the summit of the hill. There are also two lines, found near the long inscription, lower down the terrace. They all relate to one transaction, an incident in Adite history. The tribe of Ad, according to Mr. Sale, were descended from Ad, the son of Awa or Uz, the son of Aram, the son of Shem, the son of Noah. The event recorded is the route and entire destruction of the sons of Ac, an Arab tribe, by the Awea or tribe of Ad, whom they invaded. In Mr. Foster's book, five similes are given of the inscription; the Adite and the Hamyaritic alphabet; and a glossary containing every word in them, its derivation and its explanation; with notes of copious illustration upon every point which they involve.—St. Louis Recvile.

We learn from the Albany Daily Advertiser, that the Sheriff of Rensselaer county, in attempting to serve a certain process on the tenants of Wm. P. Van Rensselaer, Esq., has been resisted, and the power of the law set at defiance. The posse were met by a mob of men, disguised as Indians, who tarred and feathered two or three of the officers, and otherwise ill treated them.—St. Louis Recvile.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

L. FOSTER, is now prepared to take Likenesses, by the Daguerreotype process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or coloured, at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Ivins's Store. By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other method which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of an optical instrument. Only two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotype) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one, upon first beholding the effects of the art; and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature shown up in her every lineament and feature and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend.

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, at the Nauvoo Mansion.

Vice only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case.

Instructions in the Art, given upon reasonable terms, and Apparatus for sale.

POULTRY.

Those who intend to rear Fowls or any kind of poultry should have a distant yard, perfectly sheltered and with a warm aspect, well fenced, and sufficiently inclosed to be always dry, and supplied with sand or ashes for the cocks and hens to roll in, an operation necessary to disengage their feathers from vermin; running water should be especially provided for the want of which all poultry are fond, produces constipation of the bowels and inflammatory diseases; and for geese and ducks bathing is an indispensable luxury. A contiguous field is also necessary for free exercise, as well as for the supply of grubs and grass to the geese. The fowl house should be dry, well roofed, and fronting the south, and if practicable, at the back of a stove or stable, warmth being conducive to health and laying, though extreme heat has contrary effect. It should be furnished with two lattice windows, that can be opened and shut at pleasure, at opposite ends, for ventilation, which is frequently necessary; and the perches should be so arranged, that one row of roosting fowls should not be directly above another.

A house twenty feet long, and twelve feet wide may be made to accommodate 150 hens at roost. The plan is simply this:—the first roosting perch (rounded a little at the upper angles only, for gill rakers) fowls cannot keep a firm hold on perfectly cylindrical supporters) should be placed lengthways and rest on tressels in each end wall, six feet from the front wall, and at a convenient height, which must depend upon the elevation of the house from the floor, which may be formed of plank that can be easily swept. Another perch should be fixed ladderways above this, but ten inches nearer to the back wall, and so on, until there are four of these perches like the steps of a ladder when properly inclined, but with a sufficient distance between the wall and the upper one to allow the poultry to stand conveniently upon them when she has occasion to examine the nests, which it is her duty to do every day at least once in the afternoon. The highest of these she can reach by standing on a stool or step ladder. By this contrivance the hens when desirous of reaching their nests, have no occasion to fly but merely to pass from one step or perch to another. If the size and form of the house permit, a similar construction may be made on the opposite side, care being taken to have an open space in the middle of the room, and a sufficiently wide passage for the attendant to pass along the walls. It is not at all required, to have as many nests as hens, because they have no occasion to occupy them at the same time; and besides they are so far from having a repugnance to lay in a common receptacle, that the sight of an egg stimulates them to lay. It is however true, that the most secluded and darkest nests, are those which the hens prefer.

The nests if built in the wall, are in tiers from the bottom to the top, the lowest being about three feet from the ground, and a foot square. If the laying chambers consist of wooden boxes, they are usually furnished with a ledge which is very convenient for the hens when rising. But the best receptacles for the eggs are those of basket work, as they are cool in summer, and can easily be washed, they ought to be fastened not directly to the wall, as is generally the case, but to boards fixed in it by hooks, well clenched, and with a little roof to cover the rows of baskets. They will be thus isolated to the great satisfaction of the hen, which delights in the absence of all disturbing influences when laying. All the ranges of the nests should be placed checkerwise in order that the inmates when coming out may not start those immediately under. Those designing to hatch should be near the ground (where instinct teaches the hen to choose her seat) and so arranged that the hen can easily enter without disturbing the eggs. Wheat or rye straw is the most approved of for the bedding, being coarser than hay, and less subject to produce lice in the hens, which often annoy them.

Transcendentalism of the Times.—In this world of change and revolution, we know of nothing that is stationary, except it be writing materials.—We know of nothing to withstand the force of this natural but unseemly propelling power by which all things are urged onward. 'Tis true, one of our wisest and astute legislators speaks of a "fixed fact;" but we should like to know how long it will stay fixed. The truth is, it was a metaphysical fallacy on the part of the gentleman. Some persons cannot perceive this impulsive progress of things as well as time, because, like the squirrel in the cage, that fancies himself immovable while he clings with a tenacity to a round in the revolving cylinder, they do not discover their own progress in consequence of every thing around them moving on with a corresponding velocity.

Even our language is subject to this mutation, and it words the signs of our ideas so must our thoughts be. If those who in the days of Milton and Addison, and Pope, knew where lay the "well of pure English undefiled," were to time amongst us at the present time, they would find themselves sorely puzzled to find it, or if they did happen to be successful, we doubt if they would recognize it; for the chemists in classics of our day, in their abortive attempts to filter and purify the water, have but impregnated it with foreign bodies, and rendered it muddy and distasteful. Of this we have seen some instances lately in the papers, and mean to furnish others. Thus:

No one ever goes to bed now; people retire to rest, or repose in the arms of Morpheus.

No one ever gets tired; men, and sometimes women too, become excessively fatigued.

Orators never make a speech, they address the multitude in a strain of fervid eloquence, and with great force and effect.

Folks never marry; but we sometimes hear of them, as in the case of Capt. Tyler, and Miss Gardiner, being indissolubly united in the holy bonds of matrimony.

Poets don't have genius now, as they used formerly, but in lieu of it they possess the Prometheus spark that lights the soul to song.

Men never die; but they depart this life. They are not buried; they are interred.

If a man wants to have his measure taken for a coat, he must not go to a tailor's shop, but to some emporium of fashion.

Men never go a "sailing" now now; but they go on aquatic excursions.

Honorable members of Congress never lie; they simply state what are not facts.

There are no daily papers published; they are all diurnal journals.

No one ever wishes a married man joy; he is congratulated on his felicity.

But enough. We wish it was with our language, as it is with our locomotives, that in its swift and rapid race of refinement, it had some known stopping place—some terminus to its progress.

From present appearances, we really begin to apprehend that, like the man with a steam leg there is no stopping it, and that it will go on and on until the crack of doom. [N. O. Pic.]

Sharp Shooting.—We saw yesterday a specimen of rifle shooting which cannot easily be beat. The target was of white paper six inches in diameter pasted on a board. The distance was 115 yards. Of ten consecutive shots, nine struck fairly in the paper, and the tenth cut the circumference. Three of the shots hit the exact centre of the target, and the average distance of the whole ten from the centre was less than one inch. Mr. Van Vlietburgh, who fired the shots, also made the rifle used on the occasion, and it was to test the accuracy of the weapon that this trial of skill was had. The rifle was fitted with a patent sight, of Mr. V's own invention, and in its finish, mountings, &c. is a beautiful piece of workmanship. [Albany J.]

Beauties of Roman Catholicity in Canada.—On the 12th of July, a large number of Irishmen met at Montreal, to prevent the formation of an Orange procession. None was formed, and the mob, having no opportunity of venting their fierce passions on Orangemen, looked out during the day for others. The Montreal Herald says, that "some of them accordingly, seeing a lady coming into town in her carriage, with a bouquet in her hand, in which among other flowers happened to be two or three yellow lilies, valiantly stopped her horse and ordered her in a threatening tone to destroy the bouquet. The lady being the wife of an American gentleman and an American herself, could not comprehend what had raised the fury of the savage, but being terrified at his violence, she threw the bouquet to him and called for help. Several gentlemen ran to her assistance, and the villain disappeared. Another lady, we are told, whose shawl was bordered with figures of different bright colors, and among the rest yellow, was insulted twice by ruffians who stopped her on the streets. In the evening several private houses were assaulted and the windows broken with stones."—Sun.

A Discriminating Preceptor.—A schoolmaster in Cornwall, England, advertising his establishment, says:—Every boarder must be supplied with a Bible and a Prayer-book, a knife and fork, three towels, and a silver dessert spoon; all of which except the books, become the proprietor's perquisite on the pupil's quitting school. The conscientious pedagogue seems to think that the Bible and Prayer-book may be well for the pupil—he prefers, however, the steel and the silver.

The Havana For Industrial records the sinking of the bed of the river Alameda to an extraordinary depth on the 30th June last. On the 26th there had been a heavy fall of rain, causing a great flood, fairly sweeping all before it. The very next day, in place of keeping up the river fell to a level three feet below what it had been at any time during the previous severe drought. So suddenly did the river fall, that boats which at the time of the rise were made fast to the trees, were found the next morning entangled in the upper branches. The importance of this river to the city of Havana is very great. It supplies the basin and aqueduct, upon which the city now entirely depends for its water, and fears are entertained that it may sink so low as to render the aqueduct useless.

Remarkable Instance of Suicide.—We learn from the letter of a friend that Capt. James Paltit, residing near McNairs in Polk county, (Tenn.) committed suicide on the 16th of February, by blowing out his brains with a rifle. He placed the muzzle of the gun directly between his eyes, and discharged it by a string, attached in some way to the trigger. He had no white family, nor was there any person on the premises except his negroes; 27 in number. A jury of inquest was summoned, and the manner in which the deceased came to his death, settled; after which a portion of the jury took charge of his effects. They got his keys, and upon opening the first trunk found his will, written six days previous, by which two of the jury, then present, were appointed his executors, (one of whom is the friend who communicates this intelligence.) They also found in the same trunk, ten thousand dollars in gold and silver. The purport of the will was, that his negroes should be freed, and all of his personal effects, together with the cash on hand, divided amongst them. The money was deposited in one of the banks at Athens for safe keeping, and the executors took charge of his other property. [Highland S. C.] Sentinel.

Fire.—There has been a terrible fire at Brooklyn, New York. Before the flames could be subdued, twenty buildings situated on Bridge, York, and both sides of Tulman streets, were entirely destroyed, and several others more or less injured.

Scarcely a bucket of water could be obtained, and the Brooklyn force was not sufficient to take water from the river.

About fifty families were rendered homeless by the disaster. The property destroyed cannot fall short of $100,000.

Death by Lightning.—The wife and daughter of the Rev. Mr. Curtis, of Union Conn. were instantly killed by lightning on Friday last.

TO THE FARMERS AROUND NAUVOO AND VICINITY.

Those brethren who want to exchange their grain, pork, beef, potatoes &c., for property, wearing apparel &c., would do well to give the Temple committee a call. They would be glad to exchange any kind of property in their hands for grain, inasmuch as provisions are most wanted to carry on the works.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPFIRE LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.

This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents,) brings it within the reach of every person in the community.

FOR THE NEIGHBOR.

ON THE BIRTH OF AN INFANT.

Welcome little helpless stranger,
Welcome to the light of day;
Smile upon thy happy mother,
Smile and chase her far away.

Let thy eyes and look around thee,
Various objects meet thy sight,
Nature spreads her verdant carpet,
Earth was spread for thy delight.

Welcome to a mother's bosom,
Welcome to a father's arms,
Hear to all thy father's virtues,
Hear to all thy mother's charms.

Joy thou bringest yet mixed with trembling,
Anxious joys and tender fears,
Pleasant hopes and mingled sorrows,
Smiles of transport wet with tears.

Who can say what lay's before thee,
Calm or tempest—peace or strife?
What various turns and tides,
What various marks thy chagred life?

Who can tell what eager passions,
In this little breast may heat;
When ambition, love, or glory,
Shall invade this peaceful seat?

Who can tell how wide the branches,
Of this tender plant may spread,
While beneath their ample shadows,
Swains may rest, and flocks be fed?

Angels guard thee loved blossom,
Hover round and shield from ill,
Crown thy parent's largest wishes,
And their fondest hopes fulfill.

Agricultural.

RAISING NEAT STOCK.

Many farmers near Boston are now raising some of the calves of their best cows. This they do in consequence of the low price of veal.

Some farmers take their calves from the cows at three days of age, others at less. Some let them suck three months and then turn them to the grass—while another class let them run with the cows through the summer and suck when they please.

If you intend to let the calf suck for several months, you should not let it run at large. Calves thrive better, through the first summer, in the barn than out in the field; and it is much better for the cow to let the calf suck twice a day than to let it tease her at will.

When you keep calves in the barn they are not troubled with flies, and will eat fine hay much better than grass. In addition to this you can teach them to eat other articles better in the barn; you can teach them to eat almost any thing by giving a few oats or potatoes at first; and by using them to eat hay in summer they winter better than if they had been used to nothing but grass.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Cultivation of the Vine.—We understand that some French gentlemen of sufficient capital, have made arrangements to enter upon the cultivation of the vine in our parish. After carefully examining every part of this State and Mississippi, they have concluded to establish themselves on the waters of Beaver creek. That the soil is well adapted to the end in view, is made apparent by the spontaneous growth of the grape throughout that section of country, and we wish the projectors of the scheme all the success which the enterprise merits. The process of making wine is very simple, and we believe the day is not distant when we shall no longer be under the necessity of importing so great a luxury, or (we had almost said, in reference to climate) necessary for life.—(Opelousas Gaz.)

A Useful Plant.—Honorable Mr. Ellsworth says, the sun flower is perhaps destined to become one of the most valuable agricultural products. One hundred pounds of the seed afford forty pounds of oil. The refuse of the seed, after expressions, furnishes an excellent food for cattle; from the leaves of the plant cigars are manufactured of singular pectoral qualities; the stalk affords a superior alkali, and the comb of the seeds is a choice dainty for swine.

Diaphanous Scene at an Execution.—Geo. W. Thompson, the murderer of Catharine Hamlin, was executed at lower Sandusky, on the 12th ult. He died a hard death, as after he had been suspended twenty minutes his pulse could be distinctly counted. The Sheriff erected an enclosure around the gallows to evade the law abolishing public executions, and also to gratify the crowd, who helped the Sheriff out in his worthy intention by demolishing the enclosure, leaving the gallows open to public view. The Sheriff looked on the riot with perfect indifference. Persons too, were admitted to the top of the court-house, to get a good view for fifty cents each.

TORNADO.

At three o'clock on the evening of June 5th, a destructive tornado passed about two miles north of the village of Winchester, Van Buren Co., Iowa, sweeping every thing before it. Its course was near the east direction. What it has done west of this place we have not heard. Two farms are all that have been injured in this neighborhood; the first it is said by persons who have visited the ruins, that every animal was killed; consisting of six horses, from twelve to fifteen head of cattle, some hogs, geese, chickens and even the dogs and cats. The dwelling, a log building, was torn away to the foundation. The family, all except one, were slightly injured; the most serious is the gentleman of the house, who received a bruise on his hand, probably some of the bones broken. A boy three years old, instead of escaping to the cellar with the rest, was carried off by the fury of the element, with the bed on which he lay, and was found at nine o'clock next day entirely unhurt, about a quarter of a mile from the place of his ascension.

The destruction of the other barn and buildings, and animals &c., is estimated at $1,500. The family escaped entirely unharmed. I am now 30 miles east of Winchester, on my way, and in this neighborhood pine shingles are found which must have come from the above mentioned ruins.

JOHN DENHAM.

According to the recent census, the population of St. Petersburg is 478,000 inhabitants, and that of Moscow 338,000. This, however, includes immense garrisons of soldiers, there being only 235,000 females in the two places, in a total population of upwards of 800,000 souls.

Bees.—A hive which was opened by Swammerdam was found to contain one queen, 33 males or drones, 5,135 working bees, 45 eggs, and 150 worms. Total population, 5,804; for whose accommodation there were 3,392 wax cells for the use of the working bees, 62 cells containing bees bread, and 236 cells which honey had been deposited in; in all, 3,620 cells. From this observation it may be presumed, the hives contain from 5000 to 6000 inhabitants, among which there is only one female, viz: the queen bee, and from 3000 to 4000 cells.

Copper Balloons.—It is stated that a gentleman of Paris, M. Marey Monge, is making an experiment in Paris, on air balloons, which is exciting the curiosity of the scientific world to an extraordinary degree. A balloon composed of sheet copper, the 200th part of an inch in thickness, is so far completed that it is now exhibited to the public, and is expected to be ready for ascent in the course of this summer. This work is undertaken for the purpose of testing the practicability of aerial navigation, and of rendering balloons subservient to the study of electrical and magnetic phenomena.—Mo. Rep.

Green Corn Pudding.—An Article in Season.—A Louisville paper says, that one of the very finest things ever brought to the table, in the pudding line, is green corn pudding, prepared according to the following recipe: "Let every wife, who would like to surprise her husband by a rare delicacy—try it. Take of green corn twelve ears, and grate it. To this, add a quart of sweet milk, a quarter of a pound of fresh butter, four eggs well beaten, pepper and salt, as much as sufficient; stir all well together, and bake four hours in a buttered dish. Some add to the other ingredients a quarter of a pound of sugar, and eat the pudding with sauce; but epicures of the most exquisite taste declare for it, we believe hot, and with the first service.

Oregon.—Mr. John Dunn, an Englishman, who has been in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company, has written a book to prove the claims of England to the possession of the Oregon Territory. His book is bitter against the Americans. The British press speak well of the volume, and say that Dunn makes clean work of Oregon; that is, that Great Britain owns it and ought to have it. You will swear to that.—(N. Y. Sun.)

A REMARKABLE ADVENTURE.

The following historical incident, though possessing all the interest of romance, is extracted from the 'History of Illinois,' now in course of publication in the New World office. The work to which we have already called the attention of our readers, is from the pen of Henry Brown, Esq., of Chicago:

The pioneer who dwells in the vicinity of Indian hunting-grounds, forming a barrier between savage and civilized men, learns to hate the Indian because he hears him spoken of always as an enemy. Having listened from his cradle to tales of savage violence, and perused with interest the narrative of aboriginal cunning and ferocity, and numbering, also, among the victims of some midnight massacre, his nearest and dearest relations, it is not to be wondered at that he should fear and detest the savage. While the war-whoop is so sounding in his ears, the rifle is kept in readiness, and the cabin door secured with the return of evening.

Among those thus born and reared, one Thomas Higgins, of Kentucky, stands pre-eminent. During the war of 1812 he enlisted at the early age of nineteen in a company of rangers, and came to Illinois. One of the most extraordinary events of that war occurred near Vandalia in which Higgins participated.

Men talk of Marathon, and Thermopyla, and Waterloo; as if deeds of courage and danger were exhibited only there, without reflecting that a single ranger of Kentucky had eclipsed them all.

A little fort, or rather block-house, having been erected about twenty miles from Vandalia, late the capital of Illinois, and about eighty miles south of the present village of Greenville, to protect the frontier settlements from the Indians, Lieut. Journey and twelve men were assigned as its garrison. Of the latter Higgins was one.

The surrounding country was, at that time, a continuous forest; and the little hamlet of Greenville a frontier town.

On the 12th of August, 1814, strong indications of savages being approaching, and at night a party of Indians were seen prowling about the fort.

On the morning of the 31st, before day light, Lieut. Journey, with the whole force under his command sallied forth in pursuit of them; they did not proceed far before a large party of savages—seventy or eighty in number—rose from their ambush, and at the first fire the Lieut. and three of his men were killed and another wounded. Six returned in safety to the fort, and one (Thomas Higgins) lingered behind in order to have another pull at the enemy.

The morning was sultry the day had not yet dawned; a heavy dew had fallen during the night, and the air being still and humid, the smoke from their guns hung like a cloud over the awful scene.

By aid of this cloud the companions of Higgins escaped to the fort. Higgins' horse having been shot in the neck, fell upon his knees, he rose however, again, Higgins supposing him to be mortally wounded, dismounted, and was about to leave him. Perceiving soon thereafter his error, and that the wound was not dangerous, he determined to make good his retreat, but resolved before doing so, to avenge the death of his companions.

He sought, therefore, a tree, from behind which he could shoot with safety. A small elm, scarcely sufficient to protect his body, was near. It was the only one in sight, and before he could reach it, the smoke party arose and discovered to him a number of Indians approaching. One of them was in the act of loading his gun. Higgins having taken deliberate aim, fired at the foremost savage, and he fell. Concealed still by the smoke, Higgins reloaded, mounted his horse and turned to fly, when a voice, apparently from the grass, hailed him with, 'Tom, you won't leave me, will you?'

Higgins turned immediately around, and seeing a fellow-soldier by the name of Burgess lying on the ground, wounded and gasping for breath, replied:

'No, I'll not leave you—come along.'

'I can't come; my leg is all smashed to pieces,' replied Burgess.

Higgins dismounted, and taking up his friend, whose ankles had been broken, was about to lift him on his horse when the latter took fright, darted off in an instant, and left Higgins and his wounded friend behind.

'This is too bad,' said Higgins; 'but don't fear; you hop off on your three legs and I will stay between you and the Indians, and keep them off. Get into the tallest grass, and crawl as near the ground as possible.' Burgess did so and escaped.

The smoke which had hitherto concealed Higgins, now cleared away, and he resolved if possible, to retreat. To follow the track of Burgess was most expedient. It would, however, endanger his friend. He determined, therefore, to venture boldly forward, and if discovered, to secure his own safety by the rapidity of his flight. On leaving a small thicket, in which he had sought refuge, he discovered a tall portly savage near by, and two others in a direction between him and the fort. He paused a moment, and thought if he could separate and fight them singly, his case was not so desperate.

He started therefore for a little run of water hard by, but found one of his limbs failing him—it having been struck by a ball in the first encounter, of which, till now, he was scarcely conscious.

The largest Indian pressed close upon him—and Higgins turned round two or three times in order to fire. The Indian halted and danced about to prevent his taking aim. Higgins saw it was unsafe to fire at random; and perceiving two others approaching, knew he must be overpowered in a moment unless he could dispose of the forward Indian. He resolved, therefore, to halt and receive his fire. The Indian raised his rifle, and Higgins, watching his eye, turned suddenly as his finger pressed the trigger, and received the ball in his thigh, which otherwise would have pierced his body.

Higgins fell, but rose immediately and ran. The foremost Indian certain of his prey, now leaped again, and with the other two pressed on. They overtook him; Higgins fell again, and as he rose the whole throng fired, and he received all their balls. He now fell and rose again, and the Indians throwing away their guns, advanced upon him with spears and knives. As he presented his gun at one or the other, each fell back.

At last, the largest Indian, supposing Higgins' gun to be empty from his fire having been thus reserved, advanced boldly to the charge. Higgins fired, and the savage fell.

He had now four bullets in his body—an empty gun in his hand—two Indians unharmed, as yet, before him—and a whole tribe a few yards distant. Any other man but Higgins would have acknowledged himself defeated; Wellington with all his obstinacy, would have considered the case as doubtful—and Charles of Sweden have regarded it as one of peril. Not so with Higgins. He had no notion of surrendering yet. He had slain the most dangerous of the three, and having little to fear from the others, he began to load his rifle. They raised a savage whoop, and rushed to the encounter; but kept at a respectable distance when Higgins' rifle was loaded, but when they knew it was empty they were better soldiers.

A bloody conflict now ensued. The Indians stabbed him in several places.—Their spears however, were but thin poles, hastily prepared for the occasion, and bent whenever they struck a rib or muscle. The wounds they made were not therefore deep; though numerous, his scars sufficiently testified.

At last one of them threw his tomahawk. It struck him upon the cheek passed through his ear, which it severed and bore his skull to the back of his head and stretched him upon the prairie. The Indians again rushed on; but Higgins, recovering his self-possession, kept them off with his feet and hands; grasping a length one of their spears, the Indian, in attempting to pull it from him, raised Higgins up, who, taking his rifle, smote the nearest savage and dashed out his brains. In doing so, however, his rifle broke, the barrel only remaining in his hand.

The other Indian who had hitherto fought with caution, came now manfully into the battle, his character as a warrior was in jeopardy. To have fled from a man thus wounded and disarmed, or to have suffered him to escape, would have tarnished his name for ever.

Uttering, therefore, a terrific yell, he rushed on, and attempted to stab the exhausted ranger, but the latter warded off the blow with one hand and brandished his rifle with the other.

The Indian was as yet unharmed, and under existing circumstances by far the most powerful man—Higgins' courage, however, was unexhaustable. The savage at last began to retreat from the glare of his untamed eye to the spot where he left his rifle. Higgins knew if the Indian recovered that his own case was desperate; throwing, therefore, his rifle-barrel aside, and drawing his hunting-knife he rushed upon his foe. A desperate strife ensued; deep gashes were inflicted on both sides. Higgins, fatigued and exhausted by the loss of blood was no longer a match for the savage. The latter succeeded in throwing his adversary from him, and went immediately in pursuit of his rifle. Higgins at the same time rose and sought for the gun of the other Indian. Both, therefore, bleeding and out of breath, were in search of arms to renew the combat.

The smoke had now passed away, and a large number of Indians were in view. Nothing, it would seem, could save the gallant ranger. There was, however, an eye to pity, and an arm to save—and that arm was a woman's!

The little garrison had witnessed the whole combat. It consisted of six men and one woman; that woman herself was a host—Mrs. Parsley. When she saw

Higgins contending, single-handed, with a whole tribe of the savages she urged the rangers to attempt his rescue. The rangers objected, as the Indians were ten to one. Mrs. Parsley snatched a rifle from her husband's hand, and declaring that so fine a fellow as Tom Higgins, should not be lost for want of help, mounted a horse and sallied forth to the rescue. The men unwilling to be outdone by a woman followed at full gallop—reached the spot where Higgins fainted and fell, before the Indians came up; and when the savage with whom he had been engaged was looking for his rifle, his friends lifted the wounded ranger up and throwing him across a horse before one of the party reached the fort in safety.

Higgins was insensible for several days, and his life was preserved by continuous care. His friends extracted two of the balls from his thigh, and two remained—one of which gave him a great deal of pain. Hearing afterward that a physician had settled within a day's ride of him, he determined to go and see him. The physician (whose name is spared) asked him fifty dollars for the operation. This Higgins flatly refused to pay, saying it was more than a half year's pension. On reaching home, he found the exercise of riding had made the ball discernible; he requested his wife to hand him his razor. With her assistance he deliberately laid open his thigh until the edge of the razor touched the bullet, then inserting his two thumbs into the gash, he flung it out; as he used to say 'without costing him a cent.' The other ball yet remained, it gave him, however, but little pain, and he carried it with him to the grave.

Higgins died in Fayette county, Illinois, a few years since. He was the most perfect specimen of a frontier man in his day, and was once door keeper of the house of representatives in Illinois.

The above account is taken principally from a newspaper. Its author is unknown. The facts, however, therein stated, are familiar to many, and were first communicated to me by one of the justices of the Supreme Court of this state. They have since been confirmed by others, and there is no doubt of their correctness.

Robbing his own House.—The St. Louis Republican of the 30th ult., says: 'The Messrs Thompson, of Devil's Island, six miles above Cape Girardeau, had paid for the cutting of six thousand cords of wood, and were living on the island, when the flood came and swept off all the wood; they then shut up their house and went to the Cape. Shortly after one of the brothers of Thompson, seeing a house floating down, boarded it and attempted to tow it to land, but not succeeding, broke into it and took, among other things, two sets of harness, and two or three feather beds, which he brought on shore at the Cape. While exulting over his supposed prize, his brother came along and inquired vehemently who had been up to the island and robbed their house—and so it turned out, that when the brother No. 1 thought he had made a good haul, it was his own house that he had been pilaging.'

'I've always remarked,' says that profound observer, Mr. Chawls Yellowplush, 'that when you see a wife taking on airs onto herself, a scolding and internally talking about her dignity, and her branch, that the husband is invariably a spoon.' A friend of ours says he was reminded of this sage remark the other night, in coming down the Hudson. A large fat pompous woman, who was ever and anon overlooking her husband, (a thin, lank personage, with a baby in his arms, who exhibited every mark of prolonged annoyance,) in reply to a meek complaint on his part of fatigue, and the expression of a wish that the nurse might get over her sea-sickness, said: 'I never saw a man conduct so before—never on the face of the globe! If I'd ha' known that you was goin' to act in this way, I wouldn't ha' fetched you.' The gentleman straightway sung the lay of the henpecked to the crying baby, and was thenceforth as muzz as an oyster.

Zinc Mines in New Hampshire.—At a recent Railroad Convention at Hanover, N. H., Mr. Baker, (or Becker,) now at Warren addressed the meeting. He is a German by birth, and had not been in this country but about nine months. He remarked that his time had been principally spent in exploring the mineral ores of many different states—that he had found none so rich and inviting as the zinc mines of Warren, and the iron mines of Pierpoint—that in those towns he intended forthwith to invest a large capital for the purpose of manufacturing zinc and sheet iron—that he intended to erect such works as would produce five tons of zinc daily—that there was now none of this worked in the United States, what was used being imported—that he intended to manufacture very extensively a kind of sheet iron which was now imported from Russia, which now costs 14 cts. per lb.

Labored puns and conundrums are very hard reading. It is not less a labor to laugh at them than it is to write them. Look at this wretched thing—'Why is a man looking for the philosopher's stone like Neptune?'—Give it up at once, and 'let us pass on and not you' farther. 'Cause he's a sea-ging what don't exist!' It is of such stuff that modern puns are made. There is such a thing as a practical conundrum, which is not amiss.—'Look a-hea, Sam,' said a western negro one day to a field hand over the fence in an adjoining lot; 'look a-hea, d' you see dat tall tree down dar?'—'Yas, Jim, I does.' 'Wal, I go up dat tree dar fore y'es'dy to de berry top.' 'Wat was you arter, Jim?'—'I was arter a coon—an' wen I'd chased 'im clar out to todder end ob dat longes' limb, I hearn sumfin' drop.' 'Wat you guess 'twas Sam?' 'D' yer gib 'm up?' 'Twas dis d—d fool nigger! E-yah! e-yah! Like to broke neck—been limpin' 'bout eber since!'

LETTER FROM MR. CUSHING.

Macao, March 18, 1844.

You have the advantage of me in being the editor of a newspaper, for in this way your whereabouts and your welfare are both communicated to your friends every day in the course of business.

I arrived here safe and well in the Brandywine, on the 24th ult., and Mr. Webster the same. We tarried here until the monsoon will permit us to proceed North toward the 'Heavenly Country.'

Our country and countrymen are in high favor in China; and if nothing adverse occurs to interrupt my endeavors, I am confident of success in negotiating with this government.

The newspapers will have informed you that Dr. Bridgeman and Dr. Parker are joint interpreters of the legation. It ought to be understood in addition that Dr. Bridgeman is chaplain of the legation in title and in fact. I have deemed it essential to have religious services performed at the residence of the legation every Lord's Day, and shall adhere to the practice so long as my mission lasts.

I have had a very interesting journey to this place through part of Egypt, Arabia and India; and hope, if I live to return home, to bring with me some fruits of my expedition, in knowledge and experience, if nothing else.

I am now diligently employed in the studies and correspondence of the legation, so that no time is lost by the sojourn of Macao.

I am very truly and respectfully yours,

C. CUSHING.

RIGHTS OF MARRIED WOMEN.—A case occurred, on Thursday, in the Circuit Court, New York, where a husband was shown to have abandoned his wife in that city, 13 years ago, since which he has done nothing for her, and now resides in New Jersey. In 1842 he leased a house, at $800 per annum, for the purpose of keeping boarders. It was contended that, being a married woman, she had no right to make a contract, and the lease was void. The Court held that a married woman, in such a case, where she has a family to maintain, and her husband has abandoned her for 13 years, has a right to make a contract, and the lease must be held to be valid. [Phil. Ledger.]

A NEW DOCTRINE.

A negro man in the Choctaw nation, Arkansas, has commenced preaching a new doctrine. He says that the 'bad place' comprises a certain number of square miles, and that it is ordained that as soon as that dark hole is filled with sinners, evil will cease to exist, and those regions be of no further use. He makes a mathematical calculation, and proves to a demonstration that a sufficient number of sinners will die in fifteen years to fill up the 'bottomless pit.' All who die after 1859 will be saved. An Arkansas editor recommends to patronize the butcher, baker, and anything that will prolong life until after the 'bottomless pit' is filled up.

INTENSE FEELING.

We copy the following anecdote from the Boston Evening Bulletin. It is to the very life!

The Attorney General now eighty years of age, and said to be more competent to the discharge of the arduous duties of his high honorable station, than almost any practitioner of experience, as well as a remarkable retention of mental power; was managing a case in behalf of the commonwealth in Middlesex county, where a man was indicted for gouging out the eyes of a girl, because she had made oath that he was the father of her illegitimate child. Her brother an intelligent lad of nine years of age, was on the stand, as a government witness; and his relation of the fact which he saw, produced an electrical effect on the audience.

The girl was also present, in total blindness, and every circumstance attending the investigation of this horrible barbarity, was highly exciting. The boy stated the preliminary circumstances, and then said: "I was cutting bean poles behind the barn, and my sister was milking. I heard her scream, and then I ran with a pole in my hand, and as I came up, I saw that he had pulled her over; then he looked over his shoulder to see who was coming, and I struck him with the pole & broke his jaw." "Why did you not repeat the blow?" exclaimed the Attorney General, carried away by the tremendous interest—"why did you not repeat the blow, and knock his brains out?" "Mr. Attorney," said the judge, "you will know that profanity in court is a high offence, punishable with imprisonment but in consequence of the unusual excitement of the case, it will in this instance be overlooked."

ARREST OF FEMALES.

We learn from our reporters that the unfortunate creatures whose appearance upon the page of Broadway has excited so much remark in some of the public papers, were on Wednesday evening the object of a singular and almost unprecedented movement on the part of some of the police authorities. It appears that a posse of officers and watchmen, either directed by, or having the sanction of his honor the mayor, made a descent upon the unwarned creatures in the street, and captured between 60 & 70 of them who surrendered without hesitation, and quietly accompanied their captors to the watch-house; but others, less timid, and conscious of not having rendered themselves liable to be driven from the public street by any impropriety of conduct or language, stoutly resisted this extraordinary attempt to deprive them of their liberty; and the consequence was the force sufficient to compel submission was resorted to, in some instances to the destruction of valuable clothing. The poor creatures were transferred from the watch-house to the grand jury room, where they were kept, without any provision whatever for their decent accommodation, or so much as seats to rest upon. The arrests commenced at ten o'clock, and continued with great activity until nearly one, when Justice Matsell was sent for and finding there was no complaint against the females, he sent them all home again. It is remarked by our reporters as a curious circumstance that no public record of the affair is at the police office. At the time these arrests were being made the street was as full as usual of gangs of rude and noisy rowdies known pickpockets and blacklegs, and other disreputable characters of the same sex, who made themselves boisterously merry over the onslaught upon the helpless women, with the utmost impunity. [N. Y. Rep.]

Civility.—Our Intercourse with Society.—We know of no quality more desirable and commendable in civilized society, than civility. It is ever productive of kindly feelings, while it cannot possibly do any harm. Nothing more clearly indicates goodness of heart, excellence of breeding, refinement of tone and sentiment. By civility, we mean a general manifestation of courtesy and liberality in our intercourse with society, and without a reference to station, wealth or power. There is a broad difference between the gentlemanly exercise of this quality, and that hypocritical obsequiousness which fawns and flatters, with a mercenary object, and before certain persons. Excess of mannerism or mistaken politeness, is often offensive and insulting. It either indicates great weakness in the individual who manifests it, or supposed vanity in those towards whom the manifestation is made. All are more or less liable to flattery, when properly administered, when delicately and indirectly conveyed, when not common-place, gross and universally applied. Civility and courtesy are agreeable enough, especially when any real merit exists. If however in the absence of such merit, the flatterer still insists and compliments accordingly, his fulsome emptiness becomes offensive and disgusting. [Philadel. Inquirer.]

Curious Sermon.—An English paper contains the following curious discourse, said to have been lately delivered by an eccentric preacher, at Oxford:

"I am not one of your fashionable, fine-spoken, mealy-mouthed preachers; I tell you the plain truth! What are your pastimes? Cards and dice fiddling and dancing guzzling and guttling! Can you be saved by dice? No! Will all of the four knaves give you a passport to heaven? No! Can you fiddle yourself into a berth among the sheep? No! You will dance yourselves to damnation among the goats! You may guzzle wine here, but you'll want a drop of water to cool your tongue hereafter! Will the prophets say, 'come here gamesters, and teach you the long odds? This odds if they do! Will martyrs rant and swear, and shuffle, and cut with you? No! The martyrs are no shufflers; you will be cut down in a way you little expect. Lucifer will come with his reapers and his sickles and forks, and you will be cut down and bound, and pitched, and housed in hell! I will not oil my lips with lies to please you! I tell you the plain truth: Ammon and Mammon and Moloch are making Bethorah hot for you! Profane wretches! I have heard you wrangle and brawl, and tell one another before me, 'I'll see you d—d first! But I tell you the day will come, when you will pray to Beelzebub to escape his clutches; and what will be his answer? 'I'll see you d—d first!'"

The Press and "Iron Horse."—We extract the following from the elaborate and very interesting Report of Rev. G. D. Abbott on the power of the Press:

"No reflecting mind can contemplate the present position of the United States, without a full conviction that it is without a parallel in the history of nations: that we live in an era pregnant with great events; that the press has for us as yet undeveloped energies, that may in our land, as it has already done in others, work reformation or revolution. The whole land is a vast school. The rail car, the steam boat, the manufactory, the work-shop, and the farm yard, the mines of the Schuylkill and of Galena, are all schools. The Printer is the daily teacher. Cunard's mail to-day brings the 'lat-est' from London and Liverpool, Paris and Canton; all night the presses of Boston and of New York groan with their labor, and to-morrow the car and the steamer are bearing every description of news, and of moral or immoral influences towards every point of the compass. The 'Iron horse,' whose sinews are steel, and whose provender is fire, 'is off' for Washington and Buffalo, St. Louis and New Orleans. His unceasing thunder louder than that of the war horse, echoes among our hills all day, and his fiery train illumines our valleys at night. In less time than it once took to go from London to John O'Groats, the news from the other hemisphere is borne over one half of this. The mail bags with its teeming sheets is dropped in every city and village of a territory 1500 miles square! The columns of the Chronicle, and the Times, read at Monday's breakfast in London, have but one intervening Sabbath before they enliven the offices and parlors of Boston and New York; and ere the Acadia sees Holyhead again, they are 1500 miles further on, in the saloons and varandahs of Louisiana. Every thing seems to conspire to arouse and excite the public mind, and reading it will have.

How immeasurably important then is it, that the reading furnished be of the right kind; such as may contribute to purify, enlarge and elevate the soul rather than to dissipate, pervert and degrade its immortal powers. The public mind is indeed alive, and eager in its curiosity, for any impression, which the pen of the ready writer may enstamp upon it. Probably newspapers are sought after and read much more than all other writings. Through these the true patriot or philanthropist may give the impress of his own pure spirit, to many thousands at once. And when it is considered, that a paragraph committed to one of those winged messengers may, in the course of about a fortnight, tell throughout the United States and throughout Europe, and in a few weeks more throughout the civilized world, it can surely be regarded as no mean privilege, thus to give utterance to a word of truth and love to mankind. That word or that paragraph may contain but one idea; but that idea will continue to explain, it may be hoped, with happy influence, beyond the bounds of earth and time."

Rensselaer County Riots.—The last Albany Daily Advertiser contains the following unwelcome statement of the renewal of the riots upon the celebrated Rensselaer estate:

We regret to learn that the Sheriff of Rensselaer county, in attempting to serve certain process on the tenants of William P. Van Rensselaer, Esq., has been resisted and the power of the law set at defiance.

We understand that yesterday the sheriff attended by his deputy, and a posse of some seventy-five citizens, proceeded from Troy for the purpose of serving declarations of ejectment upon tenants of the Manor, in the towns of Stephentown and Sandlake. When the posse arrived at Stephentown, they were met by about 100 men disguised as Indians, armed with muskets, pistols, hatchets and other weapons.

The men surrounded the posse, unhitched their horses and turned them loose; They then demanded and obtained from deputy sheriff Allen his papers, which were immediately burnt, and the deputy sheriff and a Mr. Eastman, of East Nassau, were tarred and feathered, some of the men standing over them and threatening them with personal violence in case they made the least resistance. The remainder of the posse only escaped similar treatment by a promise to leave the town forthwith, which they did.

Dens in New York.—In Elizabeth, Bayard Pearl, and other streets, says a New York paper, are regular ball rooms, where people congregate on the Sabbath day, to dance, sing, and perform other immorality too gross for a civilized community. These places are reached by dark entrances, known only to those in the habit of frequenting them. On Sunday evening, each room is provided with a full orchestra, and a company of German and English vocalists, who alternately amuse the company, while the consumption of wine, punches, and other liquid poisons is going on. In one of these establishments, we believe, they have a small stage, fitted up with scenery, upon which a group of Swiss mountaineers, in full costume, appear and sing their national melodies and occasionally play a vaudeville. This manner of spending the Sabbath, is of course of foreign origin; but is now being adopted by our own people, hundreds of whom go to these places regularly every Sunday night, to spend the residue of their scanty wages. The proprietors of these mysterious resorts are realizing fortunes.

THE ISLAND OF CUBA, AND ITS CITIES &c.

Havana, the capital a city of 130,000 inhabitants is situated on the south side of Cuba in lat. 23d 23'. It is a walled city, has six castles and several batteries, a marine arsenal, iron aqueduct, railroad, &c. Among the multitude of remarkable things are the Sepulchre of Christopher Columbus in the Cathedral and the Cotton wood tree under which the first Mass was celebrated, &c. It contains 12,000 houses, 52 churches, an excellent and very secure harbor, streets narrow and badly constructed; its environs are studded with beautiful gardens.

Matanzas, is a handsome city of 20,000 inhabitants, situated also on the S. side between two rivers, the Yumuri and San Juan, 60 miles from Havana. Its harbor is very capacious, and in commercial importance it ranks next the latter city.

Puerto Principe, has 55,000 inhabitants, and is situated in the interior, having Neuquias for its sea-port, distant 60 miles. It is between two streams which unite and form the river San Pedro which has a length of 40 miles. The streets are narrow and bad, and in wet weather impassable. The Castilian language is retained here, and the primitive customs in all their simplicity.

St. Jago and Trinidad are cities on the south side, with populations of 32,000 and 15,000 respectively.

There are many sulphurous springs in Cuba. The most celebrated and the most frequented are those of San Diego, in the Vueltaabajo, 100 miles WSW. from Havana. They are at the foot of the Cuyco mountains, surrounded by the celebrated Tobacco Fields of that region. Here assemble annually, from February to May thousands of people in search of health. The baths, like all others of a sulphurous character, are particularly efficacious in diseases of a rheumatic or cutaneous nature.

The new boat Uncle Toby, built at Pittsburgh, arrived here yesterday. She is of about 110 tons burthen, single engine; she is commanded by Capt. Cole, who designs running her between this city and Galena. Two substantial keels have also been built, which she will tow as lighters during a low stage of the river. [St. Louis New Era.]

Cheap.—The New York Express says, that a loan has been recently effected in Baltimore of $500,000, for six months, at the rate of two per cent.!

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 21, 1844.

Citizens of Nauvoo! If you wish to be great in your own estimation, and respected by the world, labor diligently for labor is the wealth of the world. When Adam was commanded to replenish the earth, it undoubtedly looked to him like an immense labor to subdue the globe and beautify it with towns and cities;—and gratify his posterity with new fashions and fine clothes, but mirabile dictu six thousand years, have made heaps upon heaps of improvements, destructions, machinery, great cities, kingdoms, people and glory! Huzza, then, for labor and improvement! Begin on a small scale; make knives and forks; spoons and dishes; every thing in the mechanical line; ascertain how much Tin can be had from the Iowa mine; how Iron ore can be got near Rock Island; try the Flint and find out whether china porcelain can be manufactured; nothing like trying—and honor, wealth and fame are the reward.

In order to cure the false accusation that our city is full of blacklegs, bogus makers, and counterfeiters, let the sound of the hammer and the hum of the wheel

"Light up a smile in the aspect of woe," and teach the world, that we are industrious, ingenious, inventive, persevering and patriotic; what has been done can be again done, and more too. Put the black patch that belongs to vagabonds upon their own backs, and let virtue-purify of purpose and enterprise characterize every move of a Mormon.

He that makes a pin, does more than he that commands armies; and he that invents a new thing for the benefit of man, should be honored more than the king. Wisdom is better than wealth. To be great, be good; to be rich, be contented; and to be respected, respect yourself.

Forestalling.—Davis of Alton, the apologist for cold blooded murder, has forced out a catch penny on the late calamity, murder, and mobbery at Carthage. The thing has been got up to palliate that black hearted act, and forestall public opinion. Hypocrites have a superlative appearance of holiness. It has been said that "lies and excuses take one night the start of truth, in order to show their muddy feet as a token of great pains." In this case we have only to paraphrase the idea, and say, "to show their bloody hands!"

The greatest novelty on earth, is to find any body willing to let every one attend to his own business. What say ye?

The next greatest novelty would be to find a woman or man willing to follow a good custom without trying some new one. Is it not so?

One among Millions.—The Rev. Aaron B. Kinsman of Vermont, is afraid of Henry Clay, because he is "a duelist, a gambler, &c." Verily this Minister must be the only one among millions who fears a c-cape gallows, a black leg, a slave holder, a peace breaker, a debauchee or profane man, as a chief magistrate of the would be civiliest greatest, noblest, freest, but in fact the looest, bloodiest, slavest, and vainest nation on earth. The "Alien bill, Sedition and Stamp Act," quitted the federalists; after a few bibles were burnt, "the reign of terror" calmed off through the statesmanship of Thomas Jefferson, but if the temper of wrath, abolitionism, whiggism, annexationism, locofism, Oregonism, nullificationism, mobbism, &c. show signs of a calm, it must be at the command only of Him that said to the winds and waves—peace be still!

From the St. Louis Revueille.

NAUVOO.
O Fable! O sage century! O time!
O, boasted march of intellect and mind!
O, holy spot in the far western clime,
Leaving the mighty globe in gloom behind:
O, blissful ignorance imaginative!
O, golden science! Knave! O, law!
O, sacred truth, of solemn chat creative!
O, foolery! O, knavery! O, phaw!
When the earth rolls no more around the sun,
When the sun ceases to throw light on earth,
Then only, shall the work of truth be done,
And fair perfection guide to blissful mirth:
What is there left for the great world to do,
But seek the sacred city of Nauvoo?

REPLY.
O strike thy wild harp for the Mormon's again,
And sing out the way for the blessings of men!
The sun never shines, and the winds never blow,
On more precious men than there is in Nauvoo.
O hear like a God, from the worlds little den,
To eternity now, and eternity then:
And learn ye but this, through the whole of the Field,
That truth is eternal, as God has revealed:
And every thing else, although ever so nice,
Is error, that comes from the father of vice;

And "when earth rolls no more around the sun,
"When the sun ceases to throw light on earth,"
The work of truth then will have only begun:
For truth is the honor of God, and his birth,
And its work, as if done, and its end, never was—
For God is eternally light, love, and law.

Edwards.—Boggs' Secretary of State, has been elected Governor of the State of Missouri; Benton has gone home to Virginia; and the people have given a majority of votes in favor of calling a convention to amend the constitution of their "independent Republic."

The Post Office.—Some of the "down easters," are very gravely enquiring, what part of the machinery of the General Post Office has got out of kilter! To dispatch the subject without palavering too long for the sake of politeness, we will guess yankee fashion, "that the main spring is too weak, to draw the rest of the machinery, and therefore it runs too slow."

Mormons and men of sense! Remember that "Calomel" is the right hand man of death!

Execution.—About 4 o'clock P. M. on Friday the 16th, John McDaniel, and Brown, were executed near a mile below the Arsenal, St. Louis. It is said they protested to the last, that they were innocent of murdering Chavis, the Santa Fe trader.

Thanks.—The Osprey has our thanks for late St. Louis papers.

Good trips—fresh news—is what we choose, For wealth, for pleasure and delight.

The wife of John Robinson, which said John went to St. Louis for work last April, and in the month of May was engaged as a fireman on the Steamer Wapello, is very anxious to hear from him the said Robinson. Any person knowing any thing of him, would confer a great favor by writing to her at Nauvoo.

ANN ROBINSON.
Aug. 15th, 1844.

Making the most of a Wood Cut.—The wood cut in one of the New York papers, which the editor pretends is a correct likeness of Joe Smith, has been previously used for McLeod, Parson Miller, Babe the pirate, and the "Razor-Strop-Man." Who will it represent next!

Perhaps Seatsfield, though we mean to get it, if we can, for Polly Bodine. [Reveille.]

We mean to get "that same cut," if we can, to represent Davis of the Alton Telegraph, in the act of mourning over Lovejoy and the abolitionists, and laughing in Warsaw, at the mob and murder!

The Revenue.—A statement of the Revenue Department of the Country, which appears in the Eastern papers, exhibits an aggregate Revenue of over $9,000,000 for the second quarter of the year 1844, being at the rate of $36,000,000 per annum. The whole income of the year, it is thought, will hardly fall below $36,000,000, which will afford a surplus of some $15,000,000 to apply to the payment of the public debt. Such are the fruits of a Revenue Tariff.

We clip the following from one of our exchanges. The picture looks very pretty on paper, but as the apostle said, "the love of money was the root of all evil," we have very little faith in raising fifteen millions, to apply to the public debt. As far back as 1836, the expenditure of the government, was almost thirty millions, and after the deficit of defalcations is deducted, and the increase in expenditures added, which has not varied far from $6,000,000 a year since the government began, if the thirty-six millions is not all used up to pay the wages of the whole swarm of government tinkers and tilting-men, from the coon hunters of the west, to the wine coopers of the east, then the moon is made of green cheese, and the Mississippi runs up stream. Ah! Lord this is a sinful nation.

The public well at Springfield, Illinois, was poisoned on Monday night last, by the introduction into the pump of a poisonous compound. The fact was discovered before any person was seriously affected by it, although some 150 persons were working near the well, and using water from it. The Mayor has offered a reward of $100 for the perpetrators of the outrage. —Mo. Rep.

Appropos. The public fountain of justice, at Carthage, Hancock co. Ill., was so poisoned on the 27th of June last, that two of the best citizens of the state, were killed instantly but no reward has been offered for the perpetrators!

Safety in Thunder Storms.—People are often led to inquire what are the best means of safety in a thunder storm! If out of doors, we should avoid trees and elevated objects of every kind; and if the flash is instantly followed by the report which indicates that the cloud is near, a recumbent position is considered the safest. We should avoid rivers, ponds, and all streams of water, because water is a conductor, and persons on the water in a boat, would be the most prominent objects, and therefore most likely to be struck by the lightning. If we are within doors, the middle of a large carpeted room will be tolerably safe. We should avoid the chimney, for the iron about the grate, the soot that often lies it, and the heated and rarefied air it contains, are tolerable conductors, and should on that account be avoided. It is never safe to sit by an open window, because a draught of moist air is a conductor—hence we should close the windows on such occasions. In bed we are comparatively safe, for the feathers and blankets are bad conductors, and we are to a certain extent insured in such a situation.

What a speculation on the power of God! why not trust in him rather than rain imaginings? It is folly to talk about evading lightning by taking the advantage of God. He that holds the lightning, holds our lives, and will be sport with either! No! no! The great judge will do right.

A Sacerdotal Job.—J. H. Fairchild a Baptist priest of South Boston, has been found guilty of debauching, seducing, bribing, and forswearing Miss Rhoda Davidson, by an Ecclesiastical council at Exeter, Mass. This is, perhaps, the most aggravated case in America; no excuse or apology can be made—nipping off his flesh for seven years with a pair of shoemakers pinchers, in the old cradle of liberty would not satisfy virtue. Perhaps, tho', a catch penny of "47" pages of "affairs" and surmises, from Davis of Alton might whitewash his character.

The Recorder of Philadelphia has issued thirty-seven warrants for persons engaged in the late riots. Of these, eight are in prison, one dead of wounds received from his fellow rioters before his arrest, sixteen are under bail for trial, seven have fled, and four are not yet taken, but supposed to be in the neighborhood of the city. [Boston Bee.]

They follow fashions sooner in the east, than they do in the west.

Money in New York.—The New York Herald, of the 24th ult., says: "Money is so abundant in Wall street, that every one asks how it is to find employment. The banks have out immense loans, and are constantly extending their favors at the lowest rates. Four per cent. is about the extent of the rates demanded."

What a pity it is the people have not as much wisdom as wealth—then, with the overplus, they could pay their debts and feed the poor.

Highly Interesting.—Substitute for Steam.—"La Leforme" announces that an operative at Ruel, near Paris, has discovered a substitute for steam. The experiment is to be made on the Versailles Railroad. Figure to yourself, says the Reforme, an enormous (double or drum,) wheel, five yards in diameter, between the spokes of which you can place a horse, with his rider. This large wheel, being attached to four ordinary wheels placed on the rails of a rail-road, it will merely be necessary to turn the large one to make the carriage advance. But what motive force does the inventor employ? It is the horse, placed in the interior of the wheel, and yoked by means of two bars of iron placed perpendicularly under the axle. The horse, by drawing, causes the wheel to turn, in the same manner as a mouse or squirrel in a cage. In order to allow the horse to enter this singular wheel, it has been found necessary to dig an excavation near the station-house, into which the horse is let down. The inventor states, that he can modify his wheel so as to admit three horses, and that, in such case, the heaviest train may be propelled along a rail-road with a velocity even more rapid than that caused by steam."

We second the motion for this machine, first rate idea, no danger of bursting the boiler!

Miraculous Escape. On a steamer up from Cincinnati to Pittsburgh, a spark of fire accidentally caught in a lady's bustle, and in a moment was in a blaze, horror and fright prevailing among the ladies for the safety of their lives; but through great exertions on their part, the fire was extinguished, but not until the whole after guards were strewn with the black and smoking cotton. It was, indeed, a narrow escape, and ladies should be more careful travelling, and not expose their bustles to such an advantage, as there is almost a certainty of accident. —[Pittsburgh Age.]

Back first says the wood's man,

MOB LAW.
On Monday, 4th instant, a lawless gang of men assembled in the town of Fredericktown, Madison county, Mo., and notwithstanding the indefatigable exertions of the sheriff and citizens of Fredericktown, to suppress their action, succeeded in breaking open the jail with axes, crow bars, &c., and hauling a man by the name of Abraham Smith.

Robert M. Frier, coroner, issued process immediately for a jury; and on Monday night held an inquest on the body of Smith, when the jury returned a verdict that Smith came to his death by the hands of Jones, Sinclair, Mayse, Pollis, Cox, Blackburn, Shetty, and five others, the names of whom we have not learned. On Thursday, a State warrant was issued for the arrest of the offenders, and on Wednesday, the sheriff had succeeded in arresting Cox, Shetty, Blackburn, Pollis, and another man, who were undergoing an examination before the Justices. Sinclair and Mayse, two of the ringleaders, had not been found when this news left Fredericktown. On Saturday, we understand, Mayse was at St. Mary's Landing, waiting for the first opportunity afforded to escape from justice, and no doubt has succeeded. The parties arrested were committed to take their trial for murder.

The news of this atrocious outrage has been brought to the city by one who was present at the time. What course will be pursued? Will these wretches be permitted, as usual, to go at large? Is not this the time and case for an example? The spirit of the age denounces the death punishment; but, if the law says violence for violence—life for life before its instrument, the gallows, disappears, shall it not, as a parting grace, adorn itself in the exhibition of the hanging lyncher, and the statute scorer? Day after day, shall these outrages go unpunished, at farthest, merely talked at, until the gibbet and the stake are regarded as legitimate assuagers of each mob-thirst. If there is to be one law in the land, let that law now assert its majesty! Its direct enemy is in its hands, the fiend that would put down all, enthroning riot and blind vengeance in its place. We cry in the name of sacred justice—"an example!" [Reveille.]

Mexico and Texas.—The Galveston News publishes the following official letter, to which we beg leave to call attention:

Legation of the United States, Mexico, June 17th 1844.
To Wm. S. Murphy, Esq., Charge d'Affaires of the United States:
Sir—I wrote you a few days since that it was Gen. Santa Anna's intention to invade Texas immediately with a large force. As yet nothing has been done by Congress in the way of raising money, but troops have been secretly dispatched to reinforce the army of the North, and Gen. Canales has been named to the command. Immediate preparations for resistance and defence should be made. I think that Santa Anna calculates on foreign aid. A few days since an order appeared in the Diario del Gobierno addressed to Gen. Wolf, with directions that any individual, who should be found beyond a league distance from the left bank of the Rio Bravo should be punished as a traitor after a summary military trial.

I applied to the British Minister, to unite with me in a remonstrance with this order. He replied that he presumed the Texans were to be treated by Mexico as rebels, and declined interfering, otherwise than to request verbally that the order shall not be put in force against British subjects.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully, &c.,
BENJ. E. GREEN.

Labor the only Source of Wealth.—It is to labor that man owes every thing possessed of changeable value. Labor is the talisman that has raised him from the condition of the savage; that has changed the desert and the forest into cultivated fields; that has covered the earth with cities and the ocean with ships; that has given us plenty, comfort, and elegance, instead of want, misery, and barbarism. —Encyclopedia Britannica.

Money Digging.—A man named Chapin, has been digging for money, in Clarkson, twenty-five miles from Rochester, in the State of New York. It appears that Chapin came in possession of some papers belonging to a certain French fur-trader, who was wrecked on the coast of Lake Ontario in 1797, which state that he proceeded up a little stream they now call Sandy Creek, and buried his treasures, $7,000 in gold, and $1,000 in silver, in an earthen pot, on a little eminence under a beech tree. Having faith in the record, Chapin found the identical spot, and went to work with a number of hands. They at last struck some hard substance, but as there were a number of spectators present, the search was put off till the next morning. In the meantime Chapin had been busy, and when the company returned, they found a hole in the ground which seemed to have contained a vessel, and the fragments of an earthen pot were strewn around; there was also a flat stone, which was broken by a bar or pick-axe. Upon inquiry, it was found that Chapin had decamped during the night, leaving in his room, upon the table, six dollars, to pay the balance of his board bill. For a moment his associates believed he had found the treasures, but, upon examination, they discovered that the pot was made at Troy but a few years since. It is now supposed that Chapin really thinks there is money there, and that this ruse was practised to deceive, till he can return and take rightful possession. Curious.

The Express Stopped!—Pomeroy's agent was not allowed to go westward yesterday. The Tonawanda railroad agents refused to permit the ordinary baggage to be placed on the road, and afterwards compelled the agent, with his valise, to remain behind also. This delay will produce great inconvenience, as the Express agent had a large amount of Bank exchanges, drafts, notes, &c. with him. [Roch. Dem.]

port the mail of the Express was probably based upon the terms of a contract with the government, that subjects them to a penalty for transporting mailable matter out of the U. S. Mail, but we can imagine no reason for refusing to allow the messenger to go on. The Express came through as usual to-day.

The Rochester Advertiser says "the Directors of the Auburn and Rochester railroad have determined not to carry any mailable packages on their road for the Express." If this determination is carried out, it will seriously interfere with the Express business. [Buff. Com.]

Great accusation.—David Turnbull, British Consul in the Island of Cuba, is accused by the organs of the Cuban Government with being the mover in the recent insurrectionary incidents among the negroes there, and is charged with having formed a design, in connection with the blacks, to get possession of the Island.

Riot in Buffalo.—The Buffalo Gazette states that about 7 o'clock on Sunday evening, 28th ult., there was quite a specimen of Philadelphiaism at the "infected district," in that city. At one time some two or three hundred, mostly Irish, were engaged in a general knock-down. The police interfered and were themselves pretty severely handled. Watchman WELLMAN, in particular, was much cut and bruised. At 8 o'clock every thing was nearly quiet, four of the principal rioters having been arrested and confined in the watch-house.

There was any quantity of fighting in our city yesterday, and pork-juice flowed freely. The principal scene of disturbance was in the First Ward, where the Leocofocos had taken possession of the polls in the morning, but who were routed by the Whigs in pretty short order. We hope all parties got enough yesterday and will be content to vote quietly and peaceably to-day and to-morrow. We believe no persons were seriously or dangerously injured. Nothing further than broken heads and noses, and "expunged" eyes. —Louisville Cour.

Highway Robbery.—On Saturday evening, about dusk, as the Rev. Cyrus Jeffries, was returning home from attending divine service on the west side of the river, he was accosted by two persons whom he supposed to be negroes. They entered into conversation with him, and on reaching a chasm about a mile from town, these "gentlemen of the road" presented their pistols at his breast and commanded him to "fork over," which he did with considerable trepidation and expedition. Fortunately they got but between two and three dollars from him, which hardly paid them for washing the lampblack from their faces. The scoundrels were lying in wait for a gentleman who crossed the river that day with a very large amount of money. —Lafayette (La.) Truth Seeker.

Sentence of the Mutineers of the Saladin.—We learn from the Halifax Herald that the four mutineers of the Saladin, Jones, Anderson, Hazleton and Johnson, were sentenced to be executed. After the sentence was pronounced, Johnson said there was one charge made against him of which he was innocent—that in place of being instrumental in the boy's death, (Fielding's son,) he had done all he could to save him, and told them that he was young, could do them no injury, and that they ought to spare his life. He was not, therefore, guilty of that crime, and felt anxious that his reputation should not remain tarnished with it.

The New Orleans Bulletin states that a law for raising $4,000,000 for the campaign against Texas has already passed; that General Canales has been appointed commander-in-chief of the army, which is to consist of thirty thousand men; that a large amount of the munitions of war, &c. ordered from the United States and England have been received at Vera Cruz; and it was believed, that as soon as it could be forwarded and distributed at the proper points, the whole army would be put under marching orders. —N. Y. Express.

MESMERISM.—Through the aid of the "mesmeric" influence, says the Attica (N. Y.) Democrat, Harvey Hawkins, of Alexandria, disclosed the place where $1000 were buried, in the woods in the neighborhood, which was dug up, and is now deposited in the Alexandria Bank, awaiting the call of the rightful owner. We should suspect that Harvey knew something about the money before he went into a mesmeric sleep.

West Indies.—Intercepted letters, directed to persons in Port-au-Prince, from conspirators in Aux Cayes, inform the negro President that an insurrection is now about being regularly organized, to destroy, with fire and sword, all the plantations on the island, and all who have the blood of the white man circulating in their veins!

Abolition Doings.—A writer of a letter from Pensacola, published in the Charleston Courier, alluding to the recent arrest of Jonathan Walker, says: "A rumor prevails here, and is extensively believed, that there exists an association in the North which pays a certain premium per head for slaves stolen and carried to the North."

Stoppage of the Express.—The Rochester Advertiser of July 31, says: "We understand, that as the messenger of Pomeroy's Express attempted to take passage yesterday afternoon, on board the western cars, he was informed he could not enter any, except his personal baggage, and, consequently, he left the cars and returned to the office. This prohibition on the part of the company, we understand, is the result of a notice received from the General Post Office, informing the company of the intention to levy a fine of $50 for each time they convey the private letter express."

How it works.—The chief of the Post-Office Department recently forbade all rail road agents, and others, to carry Mr. Wells, the unofficial mail agent, over their respective lines. When about to carry this direction of the Postmaster General into execution, a short time since at Rochester, Mr. Wells very quietly drew from his pocket an injunction restraining the company from leaving Rochester without him, under a penalty of $10,000, and succeeded in compelling the company to convey him over their road, despite the government prohibition. [Reveille.]

More Libels.—John S. Du Solle, Editor of Spirit of the Times, has been held to bail for an alleged libel against J. M. Brown and other members of the grand jury of the last term of the Court of Quarter Sessions, Philadelphia.

They are raising a giant at Coxsackie, in New York State. He is now sixteen years old, measures seven feet one inch, weighs 198, and grows like green corn. Fine boy!

Chancellor Kent.—This distinguished Jurist was 81 years old yesterday. His physical health and intellectual vigor are anomalous and very extraordinary; his cheerfulness of temper, his vivacity, and colloquial powers are unimpaired; and he is at once the ornament and charm of his domestic and social circle. Chancellor Kent may now be considered one of the most (if not the most) distinguished men of the nation. —[Express.]

Italy.—The Gazette d'Augsburgh of the 10th ult., contains a long communication, giving an account of the plans formed by the Italian conspirators; one part of which, that relative to Naples, has so recently failed in Calabria. The main point explained is, that a grand conspiracy exists, which has its agents at Vienna, Paris, and London, principally the latter, for uniting all the different States of Italy into one great government, whether royal or republican was left for future consideration. The Pope and the church were to be dismantled, the King of Naples sent adrift, the several dukes disposed with, the King of Lombardy driven from Austria; and, in short, the great government of Italy was to be established. The first attempts at revolution were to be made at Bologna and at Calabria; but both failed, because the persons who had undertaken to advance money in England, declined to fulfil their engagements.

Enormous Telescope.—The Earl of Rosse, of Parsonstown, Ireland, has been engaged a number of years past in the construction of a gigantic telescope, the largest ever made. It is 52 feet long; its diameter is 7 feet 8 inches at the base, and 6 feet 8 inches at the top. The box in which the tube, if it may be so called, is inserted, is more than 8 feet square. This instrument will be supported on massive walls of masonry, and be suspended by enormous iron rods and cables. By an ingenious arrangement of counterpoises, the whole machine will be managed with facility.

For the last two years, Lord Rosse has displayed untiring industry and perseverance. He is himself, a good workman. All the drawings, plans, estimates and indeed many parts of the instrument were made with his own hands. His workmen have been instructed by himself. His workshops are extensive, and sixty men are constantly employed in them. Thus far he has expended $150,000 in this experiment, and he hopes to have his telescope completed and in action by the first of September next.

The observations already made with a much smaller instrument, of the size of Herschel's, are very interesting. Lord Rosse has ascertained that there are immense cavities in the moon, which are probably exhausted volcanoes. He has made models of them in plaster, to exhibit their appearance to the eye. He has also investigated the subject of the nebulae. Great astronomical discoveries are looked for, and an intense interest is beginning to be aroused in relation to this important subject. —Transcript.

Another Steamboat Disaster.—The following particulars concerning the destruction of the steamboat Marietta, on her passage up the Arkansas river, which took place on the morning of the 25th ult. near 8 o'clock, we copy from the Little Rock Times: The Marietta was preparing to pass a swift place in the cut-off at Mr. Marshall's plantation, 13 miles below Pine Bluffs, which she had tried once and failed; and just as she was leaving the shore, having heated the boilers (which contained but a little water) to the highest degree, she collapsed a flue, scattering destruction apparently throughout the deck and cabin. She then drifted down a few hundred yards, struck a snag, and sunk in seven or eight feet water, some of the passengers in the mean time leaping overboard and swimming ashore. There were about 60 or 70 persons on board, 10 or 15 of whom were badly scalded or burned with steam. Judge Paschall, of Van Buren, Ark., was among the number of the unfortunate, though it is thought that he will recover. Those who remained on board ascended the hurricane deck, and were conveyed to the shore in yaws and flatboats; the most of the trunks and baggage in the cabin were saved and some of the freight on the boiler deck; but the most of the latter, and all that was in the hull, was either lost or badly injured. Our informant states that it presented a spectacle of no ordinary character. Mothers screaming for their children and leaping overboard with them in their arms—husbands calling for their wives, and children for their parents.

MISCELLANY.

ONE DAY AND A HALF IN THE LIFE OF A TOBACCO CHEWER.

Saturday, July 23, 1843.

Took my hat for a walk; wife, as wives are apt to do, began to load me with messages, upon seeing me ready to go out.—Asked me to call at cousin M's and borrow for her the Sorrows of Werter. Here to have a wife read such namby pamby stuff—but must honor her with whims, and concluded that I had rather she would take pleasure over Werter's sorrows than employ her tongue in making sorrow for your humble servant.

Got to cousin M's door. Now cousin M. is an old maid, and a dreadful tidy woman. Like tidy women well enough, but can't bear your dreadful tidy ones, because I am always in dread while on their premises lest I should offend their superlative neatness by a bit of gravel on the sole of my boot or such matter.

Walked in, delivered my message, and seated myself in one of her cane bottom chairs, while she rummaged the book case. Forgot to take out my cavendish before I entered, and while she hunted, felt the tide rising. No spit box in the room. Windows closed, floor carpeted, stove varnished. Looked to the fire-place—full of flowers and hearth newly daubed with Spanish Brown. Here was a fix. Felt the flood of essence of cavendish accumulating, began to reason with myself whether as a last alternative it were better to drown the flowers, redaub the hearth, or flood the carpet.—Mouth in the mean time pretty well filled. To add to my misery she began to ask questions.

"Did you ever read this book, —?" "Yes, ma'am," said I, in a voice like a frog from the bottom of a well, while I wished book, aunt, and all were with Pharoah's host in the Red Sea. "How do you like it?" continued the indefatigable querist. I threw my head on the back of the chair and mouth upward to prevent an overflow.

"Pretty well," said I. She at last found the Sorrows of Werter and came toward me. "O dear! cousin Oliver, don't put your head on the back of the chair, now don't, you'll grieve it, and take off the gilding." I could not answer her, having now lost the power of speech entirely, and my cheeks were distended like those of a toad under a mushroom. "Why, Oliver," said my persevering tormenter, unconscious of the reason of my appearance, "you are sick. I know you are. your face is dreadfully swelled, and before I could prevent her, her harshness was clapped to my distended nostrils. As my mouth was closed imperturbably, the orifices in my nasal organ were at that time my only breathing place.

Judge, then, what a commotion a full snuff of harshness created among my olfactorys.

I bolted for the door, and a hearty achehechee! relieved my proboscis, and tobacco, chyle, &c., all at once disgorged from my mouth, restored me the faculty of speech. Her eyes followed me in astonishment, and I returned and relieved my embarrassment by putting a load on my conscience. I told her I had been trying to relieve the toothache by the temporary use of tobacco—while truth to tell, I never had an aching fang in my head. I went home mortified.

SUNDAY FORENOON.

Friend A. invited myself and wife to take a seat with him to hear the celebrated Mr. — preach. Concluded by neighbor A. to let his pow. Mouth as usual, full of tobacco, and—horror of horrors!—found the green elegantly carpeted with white and green—two or three mahogany crickets, and a hat stand—but no spit-box. The services commenced—every peal on the organ was answered by an internal appeal from my mouth for a liberation from its contents—but the thing was impossible, I thought of using my hat for a spit-box—then of turning one of the crickets over—but I could do nothing unperceived. I took out my handkerchief, but found in the plenitude of her officiousness, that my wife had placed one of her white cambrics in my pocket instead of my bandanna. Here was a dilemma. By the time the preacher had named his text, my cheeks had reached their full tension, and I must spit or die.

I arose, seized my hat, and made for the door. My wife—confound these women, how they dog one about! imagining me unwell, she might have known better, got up and followed me out. "Are you unwell, Oliver?" said she, as the door closed after us. I answered her by putting out the eyes of an unlucky dog with a flood of expressed essence of cavendish. "I wish," said she, "Mr. A. had a spit-box in his pow." So do I! We footed it home in pensive silence. I was sorry my wife had lost the sermon, but how could I help it? These women are so affectionate, confound them; no I don't mean so. But she might have known what ailed me, and kept her seat.

you use tobacco," said I. "A little occasionally," said he, as he deposited from three to four inches in his cheek. I momentarily pitted those who use more. "A neat fence that of yours," as flood after flood bespattered a newly painted white fence near the window. "Yes," said I, "but I like a darker color." "So do I," answered Ploughshare, "and yaller suits my notion, it do't show dirt." And he moistened my carpet with his favorite color. Good thought I; wife will ask him in again, I guess. We were now summoned to dinner. Farmer Ploughshare seated himself. I saw his long fingers in the particular position in which a tobacco chewer knows how to put his digits when about to unlade. He drew them across his mouth; I trembled for the consequences, should he throw such a load upon the hearth or the floor. But he had no intention thus to waste his quid, and—shocking to relate—deposited it beside his plate on my wife's damask cloth.

This was too much. I plead sickness and rose. There was no lie in the assertion now, I was sick! I retired from the table, but my departure did not decompose Farmer Ploughshare, who was unconscious of having done wrong. I returned in season to see him replace his quid in his mouth to undergo a second mastication, and the church tell impudently ringing, called him away before he could use his plate for a spit box—for such, I was persuaded, would have been his next motion. I went up stairs, and throwing myself on the bed, fell asleep. Dreams of inundation, floods and fire harassed me. I thought I was burning and smoking like a cigar. I then thought the Merimack had burst its banks and overflowed me with its waters. I could not escape, the water had reached my chin—I tasted it, it was like tobacco juice. I coughed and screamed, and awakening, found I had been to sleep with a quid in my mouth. My wife entered at the moment I threw away the filthy weed—fluz, if I were you I would not use that stuff any more.

"I won't," said I. Neither fig nor twist pigtail nor cavendish have passed my lips since, nor ever shall they again.

SAMMY DARBY'S COURTSHIP.

Good afternoon, Squire Jones.

Good afternoon, Squire Darby, walk in.

Well Squire, how is your lovely darter Sal to-day, and the rest of the family?

Why, they are all up and about, particularly Sal, she is very hearty, has a good appetite, and eats a right smart chance, and the way she smokes her old pipe is the right way, and sings—why man she sings like a Martingale—oh, sir, she's a real burster!

Well, Squire, I'm glad to hear so much in praise of Sal, for I love her mighty keen and tend to court her.

That's plain honest and clever—I'll go call Sal.

Sal's enough he did, and Sal soon made her appearance.

How are you, Sal, says I.

Oh, sorter middlin; but how do you feel Mr. Darby?

Why, Sal, I aint well—I'm lovesick.

Oh hush, you don't say so, do tell me who she is.

With that I sorter sidled up to Sal, and she kinder sidled off.

Says I, Sal, don't be so darnation skittish, for you're the very gol I'm arter.

Git out—you don't say so.

Yea I does, and I'm in as hard earnest as ever my dog was after a coon.

That pleased Sal powerfully, and she tossed her head and looked as proud as your town gals do when they have two or three beaux the same night.

Says I; Sal, will you have me?

I reckon as how I will; you don't catch dis child fusing an offer when there's half a chance.

So we went off to the Parsons, and Sal and I got married, and now we live as kinder happily together us, can be, only sometimes she bawls out to me, Mr. Darby don't be squinting your tobacco juice on the fire dogs, and sticken yer feet on the fender; may I be burnt if I can keep anything decent where you are.

And the way she raps my toes with the tongs when she sees my feet on the fender, is no ways common I tell you; however, I live as happy as I can expect—with a woman,—that's a fact.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

L. R. FOSTER, is now prepared to take Likenesses, by the Daguerreotype process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or coloured, at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Irvins Store.

By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other means, which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of an optical instrument. Only two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotype) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one, upon first beholding the effects of the art; and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature shown up in her every lineament and feature and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend.

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, and at the Nauvoo Mansion;

Price only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case.

Instructions in the Art, given upon reasonable terms, and Apparatus for sale.

CERTAIN Cure for Bowell Complaints.

(No cure no pay!) prepared and sold on Main street by July 30—3m EPHRAIM S. GREEN.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPBOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.

This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents), brings it within the reach of every person in the community.

A large supply of these celebrated articles just received and for sale by J. B. BACKENSTOS, Sole Agent for the City of Nauvoo.

MOUNTAIN CHILDREN.

BY MARY HOWITT.

Dwellers by lake and hill!

Merry companions of the bird and bee!

Go gladly forth and drink of joy your fill,

With unconstrained step and spirit free!

No crowd impedes your way,

No city wall impedes your further bounds;

Where the wild flocks can wander, ye may stray

The long day through, 'mid summer sighs and sounds.

The sunshine and the flowers,

And the old trees that cast a solemn shade;

The peasant ev'ning, the fresh'ning hour,

And the green hill whereon your fathers played.

The gray and ancient peaks,

Round which the silent clouds hang day and night;

And the low voice of water as it makes,

Like a glad creature, murmurs of delight.

There are your joys! Go forth—

Give your hearts up unto their mighty power;

For in his spirit God hath clothed the earth,

And speaketh solemnly from tree and flower.

The voice of hidden rills

Its quiet way into your spirit finds;

And awfully the everlasting hills

Address you in the many-toned winds.

Ye sit upon the earth,

Twining its flowers, and shouting full of glee;

And a pure mighty influence, 'mid your mirth,

Moulds your unconscious spirits gently.

Hence it is that the lands

Of storm and moor have the noblest name;

Whom the world reverences, The patriot lands

Were of the hills like you, ye little ones!

Children of the land's song

Are taught within the mountain solitudes;

For hoarse legends to your life belong,

And your hearts haunts where inspiration broods.

Then go forth—earth and sky

To you are tributary; joys are spread

Profuse, like the summer flowers that lie

In the green path, beneath your gamesome tread!

WHAT IS LIFE?

What is life!—the wounded mind,
The spirit broken and confound—
The faded form—the soul's deep strife,
All folly echo—what is life?

What is life!—a broken chain,
A weary road, a couch of pain,
A few faded blossoms 'neath the prize,
A thousand hopes unrealized.

What is life!—a bank of flowers,
Low drooping and unshut by showers,
A winter's sun whose quivering beam
Sheds but a momentary gleam.

What is life!—a shower of tears,
A short, short round of mispent years,
A dream that's broken ere it's close,
A little scene 'mid hosts of woes.

What is life!—the tinsel'd toys
Are but the mock of real joys;
A play where guilty groups are seen,
And death presides to close the scene.

THE MOB.

Nothing is to be more deprecated by every well-wisher to human society, than a mob-racy. It at once discovers the impotence of law, and the depravity of man. It presents an opportunity for the most base and reckless of the human race to start up into a brief authority to be sustained and terminated only by violence and blood. It is at once a descent from all the gem-like beauty and Corinthian grace of civilized society, to the savage wigwam and burning pow-wow. Every step to such scenes should be deprecated. The burning in effigy, the public exhibition of the likeness of individuals, accompanied with shouts of scorn, derision, and contempt, are but one remove from that lawless violence which sacrifices with equal zeal, fury, and vengeance, the innocent with the guilty.

It is not an age of mobs, persecution, derision, and brow-beating. This day has passed. It is a day of argument, enquiry, investigation, and experiment. Folly and absurdity will explode itself. What necessity is there for ridiculing and caricaturing the inventor of perpetual motion?—What in the exhibition of the monomaniac in religion or politics? If, for instance, the spirit of Catholicism be as bad as our "Native Americans" represent it, will it not be seen? But they will say, "we wish to set our public seal of reprobation upon such a doctrine, to gratify our own feelings and for the good of the rising generation." We will hereafter test the correctness of the position, both in truth and sentiment. As to the expediency of such an act, we may venture to say, that what is not necessary cannot be expedient. Besides, in judging of the expediency of measures many things are to be taken into consideration, especially if they have a public character and bearing—and still more, if they are of a religious or superstitious character.

Through the whole course of universal history we can never find that violence has ultimately benefited either the cause or the individuals engaged in it. What was gained at one moment, has been lost at another: what has accrued to pride, avarice, or vanity, has been taken back with compound interest in subsequent vexation, debasement, and ruin. It yet remains a problem to be solved, whether the violence of the most orderly mobs which ever existed, at the commencement of our Revolution, have not given an impulse to the national feeling and a tinge to the national character on the whole injurious to our country. If expedient, it could be only as an example, and that example under all cases where the many in opinion, faith, or creed, differ from the few, may be imitated! and to any extent!! The "Native Americans" will use it, as in Philadelphia, to degrade the Catholics. This they cannot do. The wisest head of a family, as he advances, finds it hard to restrain in reason and benevolence those united to him in affection and by blood—how can persecuted and superstitious religionists be restrained?

But there is still higher considerations: There are such laws as profess to secure the civil, political, and religious liberty of every individual.—The Constitution is one of these high laws, penned in the integrity and wisdom of the highest representative authority. The Constitution of each State is another, identified with the most sacred sanctions of justice. The regulations in regard to every induction into office under the solemnities of an oath "to promote the peace and good order of society," are a third class—and the last, and not the least, are reason, common sense, personal integrity, and a stern conviction of right and wrong, which, in an enlightened community, every man but a villain carries in his head and heart, which are directly against a violation of the peace in the violation of the rights of individuals.

There is another and still higher consideration. Such exhibitions of wild and lawless feeling and sentiment as those which have lately taken place in Philadelphia, filling the "mob city" day after day with all the horrors of a sack, are entirely incompatible with the teaching of Jesus. We well know that they are in the very essence and spirit of his religion as carried out by pulpits, ecclesiastical dogmas, bigots, and inquisitors; but we are as fully assured that it is not the principle and spirit, he be real or imaginary, of Jesus of Nazareth. "Whoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye the same to them"—"Be ye harmless as doves"—"Be ye perfect, even as your father in heaven is perfect, who causeth his sun to shine upon the evil and the good, and who sendeth his rain upon the just and the unjust."—Were those shameful transactions of the religious desperadoes of Philadelphia, whose war-cry, as they rushed to deeds of blood and slaughter, was "Spare, Oh! spare the Bible!"—were those transactions in compliance with these teachings?

But a last consideration is, that such things defeat themselves. You will do it, you say, for the sole purpose of setting your seal of reprobation upon Catholics, and for the good of the present generation. Such things were done against the Quakers, Baptists, Universalists, Abolitionists, Mormons, &c. &c. Did it reprobate them? Did it secure the rising generation and future generations against the influence of their teaching and example? They have all had their day of reproach and persecution, and their advocates were considered quite as obnoxious to morality, propriety, good order, and religion, as the Roman Catholics. The fact is, and it is the strangest thing in the world that Christians do not see it—in universal society there are some of every faith and sentiment, and persecution, by rendering the individuals and faith conspicuous, forms centres of conglomeration. Thus, your own adage is true—"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," the called, the assemblers, dissenters, heroes, philanthropists. Very well. Why engage in acts calculated in their very nature to defeat your object? We need not fear for a persecuted cause; it is the neglected cause that is consumed in its own heat and expires in its own embers. Again: some of those Philadelphia Protestants, no doubt went from their riotous and bloody exhibition to family prayer, to the sanctuary, to the sacrament, and they have all, in their faith and sentiment, to be ushered into the presence of infinite purity and justice—but will the recollection of an act of blood-thirsty persecution of individuals who might err in judgment and sentiment, throw light or substantial darkness on such transactions?

To conclude, it becomes every well-wisher to the peace, order, and happiness of society, to frown upon mobular expression of opinion, sentiment, and vengeance. He knows not, if he act a contrary part, but that he is kindling a fire which may consume either himself, posterity, or country. The spirit of anarchy can in no way be more easily taught, imparted, and imbibed. The impression on the way of redress—rather than on the principle; and as these compose the mass of society, it is soon lifted above all law, right, justice, or obligation.—A necessary consequence is, that it destroys itself: constitution, law, justice, become figments of the imagination, "and the reign of terror" commences its career. It may by some, perhaps be thought proper that we vindicate the character of the individuals so wantonly assailed. Not at all. A higher interest has been near our heart, a more noble and sacred object before us: this interest has been that of the dearest rights of freemen, and that object the vindication of the majesty of the law, and of justice, thus vilely trampled upon and despised. The changes of a single half-century will astonish the world, and the past transaction will be as infamous in the eyes of the generations then existing, as the scenes of the Salem witchcraft are in ours.—Nor will it be forgotten. Universal mind can neither forget nor forgive. It enthrones itself on eternal justice, potting indignation and wrath upon the bad, compassion and glory upon the good.

NATIVE AMERICANISM.

The following letter, which we find in a late No. of the Philadelphia Times, is in answer to an invitation sent to the author to become a member of the Native American Association.

To the President and Secretary of the "American Republican Association," High street Ward.

GENTLEMEN: The enclosed circular was handed to me last evening by a gentleman whom I suppose to be one of you, and as I cannot conscientiously accept the invitation to join your Association, it becomes my duty to tell you the reasons why.

I am a native born citizen, was born and bred in the country of Pennsylvania. My ancestors, both paternal and maternal, although of German descent, were for two or three generations back born and reared on the soil of Pennsylvania; so that if nativity inspires patriotism, I ought to be a patriot, and I know myself, I will, whenever circumstances require it, take a bold and decided stand in the defence and protection of the flag of my country, and of the institutions which it is designed to protect, and of which it is the emblem.

And if I have a proper conception of my own rights, I would be second to none in resisting encroachments of foreigners upon the rights and privileges of the citizens of this country; and I would with equal alacrity resist all influences, whether foreign or domestic, that would in any degree jeopardize or disturb those invaluable rights, liberty of conscience, freedom of opinion, under which our country has so long existed in peace and quietness.

But you ask me to come and aid you in resisting the encroachments of foreigners upon the rights and privileges of the native born citizens. Your circular and your party assume that those who were the accident born upon the soil of the United States, have rights and privileges which those born elsewhere have not. In this assumption I most decidedly differ with you. The framers of the Constitution very wisely provided that every office under the United States, even unto the highest, should be attainable by a citizen of proper qualifications, no matter where born, and every man who seeks a home on our shores even if born in the desert of Siberia, or on the icy shores of Lapland, is, when naturalized according to the constitution and laws of the Union, an American citizen, not a foreigner; and is justly and rightfully entitled to all the rights and privileges equal with those whose accidental birth-place was the soil of the U. States.

And why should you ask me to protect the flag of my country against the encroachments of those who did not happen to be born in the same place as I was?

Is it not the same Star-Spangled Banner, differing only in the number of its stars, that waved over the giant band who so nobly fought, and some of them who so nobly died under the walls of Quebec—that enshrined the dead body of that noble hearted Irishman Richard Montgomery, who there fell fighting in its defence? Is it not the same Star-Spangled Banner, under which Lafayette, Pulaski, De Kalb, Kosciuszko, Steuben, and many others of foreign birth, fought the battles of our independence, and in defence of which many of them shed their blood? Is it not the same Star-Spangled Banner which waved in triumph on the ramparts of Yorktown, over the victorious allied armies of France and America? Why then do you ask me to aid you in excluding the countrymen of those men from the protection and support of the same Star-Spangled Banner? And do you not know that in that noble band which assembled in our old State House on the memorable fourth of July 1776, and there signed and sealed that sacred instrument which gave birth to our nation, there were many foreigners? In that body there was no seeking to exclude or proscribise any one, because of his birth-place and religion, but all—al joined in pledging their lives, fortunes and sacred honors in support of the liberties of America.

And think you that those noble patriots pledged their fortunes, risked their lives and all that was dear to them on earth, merely that one race of men—mere! that those born on one spot of the earth should enjoy the blessings of liberty and free government?—think you that those brave soldiers of foreign birth fought side by side with Washington and Gates, with Green, Sumpter, Marion, and Morgan, merely that those born on this soil should enjoy the fruits of their toil and suffering? No—No. Our fathers fought for and established a government that was a promised Asylum to the oppressed of all nations, where the defeated patriot of all lands and climes, whether he bore the cross of Christ or the crescent of Mahomet, should find a home and a resting place.

Or do you want more recent evidence of the disposition of those of foreign birth to sustain and defend the Star-Spangled Banner?—go to the plain of Chippewa—to the battle grounds of Bridge-water and Fort Erie—there you will find the blood of the foreigners was freely poured out in defence of the American flag and American institutions, and there you will find the bleached and mouldering bones of foreigners mingled and commingled with those of the native born.

I cannot therefore, without becoming recreant to the principles and purposes of our forefathers, join with you in proscribing men because of their birth-place, or in depriving them of any of those invaluable rights that it was the design of those ages they should enjoy.

But here is another equally powerful reason why I cannot join your Association. Recent events have shown that the party at which it forms a part, would be a dangerous one to entrust with power. In our above all other countries, should the law and the law only remain supreme. No outrage, however great, whether committed on a single individual or a body of them can under any circumstances justify or excuse a resort to mob violence on the part of those injured, to redress their grievances or avenge their wrongs; and the party that resorts to such means is directly unfit to have power in a republic, and in my humble judgment no peace-loving, orderly citizen, can consistently become attached to it.

I cannot belong to a party that would wreathe a noose in the custody and control of a mob of the law, mingle and brutalize his head with paving stones, and when in apparent agonies of death, hang him by the neck in the public market house. Christianity shudders, humanity weeps at the recent outrages of your party, and God grant that we may have no more of the evidences of its ascendancy.

And there is another reason why I cannot join your Association. The whole energies of the party of which it forms a part, are almost exclusively devoted to the desertion and denunciation of one sect of Christians.—With the Roman Catholics as a religious sect I have no part or lot, having been born and reared in the Protestant faith; but I know that the Constitution of my country declares that all men have a natural and inalienable right to worship their creator according to the dictates of their own consciences, and I hope that so long as God gives me breath, I may hold in sacred remembrance this wise provision.

When I saw from the roof of my dwelling on the night of the 8th of May, the bright flames that enshrouded the lofty dome of St. Augustine, I thought of the constitution of my country. I thought of those departed sages who declared that in this land there should be liberty of conscience for all men. I thought of that ancient bill whose tones first proclaimed the glad tidings of American Independence!! I turned and saw the reddened spire and roof of the sacred Hall of Independence and the whole high vault of Heaven flushing in deep crimson at the scene. I turned aside and wept—not for the offence of its contents, for they were but dress, but I wept over our bleeding Constitution—at the so soon forgotten admissions and precepts of our fathers—at the introduction of religious intolerance and religious bigotry into our favored land—at the bright and glaring evidences of the existence in our midst of a spirit of persecution for opinion's sake. I am glad, three glad that I did not hear the fiend-like shout that is said to have been given at the fall of the cross that entopped the dome of St. Augustine, for it would have given me pain. Those who could exult at the fall of the emblem of that system of religion given to us by him "who was meek and lowly of heart" must forget that God will have mercy rather than sacrifices, and knowledge of himself rather than burnt-offerings—must forget that we are commanded to love one another, and to do unto others as we would they should do unto us.

That shout gave evidence of the existence among us of the same spirit that brought Michael Servetus and John Rogers to the stake—that banished Roger Sherman and Mrs. Hutchinson from their home—that murdered and burned the unoffending Quakers. That burning and that shout implanted a stain upon the character of our city and our people that will endure unto the remotest posterity. It can no longer be said of us in the language of poetry—

"Aye! call it holy ground,

The spot where they first trod,

They have left unstained what there they found,

Freedom to worship God."

One more reason why I cannot join your Association is, that I have from my youth upwards belonged, and am still attached to a political party—a party that has its origin in the institutions of our country—a party on whose principles depend mainly the preservation and perpetuation of those institutions—a party that has occasionally, as I others have, been disgraced by the action of those it elevated to place and power, but has always thus far possessed energy and vitality, sufficient to enable it to throw off the putrid humors that have disturbed it—a party that has always sought to extend the right of suffrage instead of to diminish it—that would allow a man to participate in the affairs of government because he was a man, endowed with reason and understanding, and not because he was born to a certain religion—a party that has never been disgraced by resorting to mob law and mob violence to avenge its wrongs or redress its injuries—a party in which edifies devoted to the worship of God and the purposes of education have always found favor and protection. Belonging to this political party, so much superior to yours in all respects, I would be a very foolish did I leave it for the purpose of joining your Association.

Yours with respect,
ANDREW MILLER.

High St. Ward, May 21, 1841.

CHEAP POSTAGE.

The franking privilege has become such a burden on the great mass of the community, that it ought not longer to be borne. Its immediate abolition should be demanded. If a small class of the people must be taxed to support this P. O. department, which was intended for the prosperity of the country at large, they should not at the same time be taxed for the provision that must of course be made to carry the immense number of franked documents that are now sent to the remotest sections of our country. Perhaps few are aware of the great weight of franked matter that is sent by the mail.

The number of free letters mailed in the Post Office in Washington, for three weeks, during the session of Congress in April, 1840, was 466,345

Number of documents 4,314,948

Weighing 350,579 pounds.

Here were 180 tons of franked matter sent out from Washington in 3 weeks. And all this, as it has been before observed, is paid for by those whose business compels them to use the post office.

The franking privilege is also abused to a shameful extent. I will give one instance lately related in the Boston Morning Chronicle: A man in Paris wished to write to his friend in Boston. He wrote the letter and enclosed it in another to a member of Congress at Washington, and he enclosed it in his frank and forwarded it to the Boston man. This is but one of ten thousand instances of the abuse of the privilege.

To favor a class of men who are abundantly able to pay their own postage, what is the consequence? Why, simply this—The rate of postage is so high that people in moderate circumstances can neither do anything toward sustaining the establishment, nor derive any benefit from it.

A friend of mine lately related to me a distressing instance in proof of this. A letter was sent to a woman living at the West, but as she was exceedingly poor, she could not for a long time take it from the office for want of means. Her anxiety to hear from her Eastern friends was very great, but the necessity of stopping the cries of her children for bread, and the letter had to lie unread. At length, when she raised funds to take it from the office, it contained money to relieve her distress. But of this she had been long deprived, in order to sustain the franking system, that the members of Congress, Secretaries of Bureaus, and other wealthy functionaries, might have the privilege of communicating free of expense.

Another friend informed me that he had occasion lately to stop at a farm house in the country and stay during the night. He heard the head of the family say in the evening that there was a letter for him lying in the Post Office, and that he had not the means of paying for it. Notwithstanding the great anxiety the family had to get their letter from the office, it was with difficulty that he could induce them to take enough for his night's lodging to pay for it.

Another friend from St. Lawrence Co. informed me that a woman, whose husband had gone to the West to look out for a settlement for his family, received a letter but could not pay for it. In her distress she called on a friend, who gave her money to take the letter from the office, which gave her an account of her husband's death. Had she not met with a kind friend, months might have elapsed before she would have known of his decease.

Instances of this sort might be multiplied to any extent. The country has long since felt the oppression. The causes are known. The remedy is easy, and ought to be immediately applied.—Let there be a uniform two cent postage, and then the benefit will be extended to all, and all will do something toward defraying the expenses of the department. Correspondence will be increased probably more than five fold within three years at far less expense from the simplicity of the system than at present. The prosperity of the country will be promoted, and all parts of the Republic will be united together in the bonds of amity and good feeling. It will be far the cheapest and most effectual method of binding the North, the South, the East and the West together in one great brotherhood.—[Rockester Democrat.]

L. M. M.

Horrible.—A letter from Virginia Mines, Franklin county, Mo. dated 19th inst. says:—A case of poisoning occurred in this place last week, reports of which have probably reached you. The simple facts are these. On Thursday, the 11th inst. Mrs. Breedlove, wife of John P. Breedlove, her child, a girl of eight years, and Breedlove's brother, were taken violently sick at supper. Medical attendance was instantly procured, when every symptom indicated poison of the most violent nature. Mrs. B. lingered in the utmost suffering until the following Sunday, when she died. Her body was opened by physicians, who were thoroughly satisfied that her death was caused by poison.

Suspicion rested on her husband, as there was a misunderstanding between them on Thursday morning, and he left in the afternoon of the same day for St. Louis, but he returned yesterday, and appears seriously affected at the melancholy event. No proof exists against him, and all is mystery. Mrs. B. was noted for her kind disposition, and was supposed to have had no enemies. She has left four children, one only a few months old. The poison was in the coffee. The other two persons have recovered. [St. Louis Rep.] ly. When cold, they run into little holes under the ovens. The hard, silent box seemed to me a poor substitute for a mother's heart-warmth, and the friendly clucking voice, which gathers them under her brooding wings. But the little things seemed well contented with their lot, never having known any thing better. Those a few weeks old, though plump and thriving, have rather a loathsome look, and as their mothers didn't know that they were out, and consequently had not washed their faces, or combed their feathers. The older ones sometimes take to brooding the newly hatched, who run after them with great eagerness and strive with each other to obtain their caresses. There is something quite affecting in this relation between the bereaved orphans and their elder sisters.

This American machine is doubtless a great improvement upon the famous Egyptian mammals, or latching ovens, and upon the Chinese method of using the man, by laying them sit, day after day, on nests of eggs covered with feathers. It is a pity that, though the demagogues and office-seekers of this country couldn't be as usefully employed, if a little of them were to turn their attention that way, there would be a rapid diminution in the price of poultry.

The exhibition of the Locusts is an opportunity afforded to watch the progressive development of animal life, from the first little white speck in which floats the embryo chicken, to the final projection of the chick through the shell, which it has broken by vigorous pecking at its prison walls. The only thing in which I took real pleasure, however, was in watching the first pulsation of the heart, which becomes observable on the third day; though no bigger than a pin's head, yet it works with the vigor and precision of a steam engine.

Q-Tulargification.—The children of this world are wiser in their generations than the children of light. They were created upright, but they have sought out many inventions, and the "latching machine" is one. The present generation is full of machinery and murder. It is a pity but some of the tip tops would send to the moon and procure some of Gulliver's squash seeds, and commence raising children in Squashes through the aid of hot houses, already educated for business; there would be a speculation in it, and some of the squashes might invent a big auger and bore a great hole through the bottom of the ocean, and draw off the water into Simm's "pole hole;" and then this money loving generation could gather the treasures that lay spread over the surface of the "great deep." Balloons, bogus minks, patent rights and chicken fixers: What next!

PUBLIC OPINION.

We take the following extracts from the Highland (North Carolina) Messenger of August 22d. We have separated the private opinions, which were groundless, and only publish the truth, which bears its own weight. "We go for the law, and feel doubly justified when we state, that the spiritualism, hypocrisies, false prophecies, 'spiritual encampments,' &c. &c., are only air castles, phantoms, and brain bumps, that have never been seen, or known any more than old Santa Claus, the children's public God to fill stockings with nuts, sugar plums, and toys on Christmas night. So now for the extracts:

ASSASSINATION OF JOE SMITH.

"The assassination of Joe Smith and his brother, is one of those outrages that ought to be rebuked in the severest manner. No man of sober sense can contemplate the manner of his death without abhorrence and regret. It was an act of deliberate, cold-blooded, and cowardly assassination—a flagrant violation of the laws of the country, an invasion of public and private safety which deserves the severest rebuke at the hands of the constituted authorities. If such atrocious deeds as the assassination of Joe Smith while a defenceless prisoner, be winked at by those whose duty it is to see that 'the strong arm of the law,' is made to extend its protection over every citizen of our country, and that equal justice is meted out to all, where is a man to look for safety, where is he to seek protection from, or redress for, the outrages of such lawless mobs! Are the barriers of human law to be thus overlapped in derision, and the brawny vigor of a wild and tumultuous mob to riot over the ruins of subverted authority? Let the strong arm of the law, remain inactive upon such occasions, and the only ligament that can chain up the volcanic energy of vitiated passion is at once, and for ever severed.

We speak of this occurrence in the strongest terms, for we are of those who hold the supremacy of the law. If such outrages are countenanced, we may look for the perpetration of a succession of outrages, and the letting loose a spirit of fierce destructiveness, which will vent itself upon any and every occasion that may present itself. We confess that, as a lover of law and order, we feel abashed at the preliminary symptoms that have manifested themselves of late in this country, of the triumph of mob law over the law of the land. If lawless ruffians are to take the administration of justice into their hands, we may soon expect to see our glorious Union and the liberties of our fathers purchased for us with torrents of blood sink beneath the destructive waves of mobism.

The Christian Citizen, published at Worcester, Mass. by Elihu Burritt, has some remarks upon this outrage which deserve to be carefully considered by every lover of law and order, and so strictly are they in keeping with our sentiments upon the subject, that we agree with Burritt in every word he says. We quote the following:

"Strange as it may seem to some, it is quite as plain to others, that the people of this country do not enough feel the grasp of despotism and the cruel wounds of anarchy, to understand the worth of good government and the necessity of maintaining public prosperity by upholding the supremacy of the law. A number unwisely and grievously large seem bent on finding out its value by experimenting against its most sacred principles and most productive virtues. More wisdom should be taught on the subject, publicly and from house to house, and still more should be practiced by such as can plead no deficiency of instruction.

While we say these things, we would carefully abstain from any remark that might seem to justify or excuse lawless violence, and especially the savage murder of a defenceless prisoner, for the protection of whose life from ruthless passion or deliberate barbarity the faith of the State was openly pledged. It was base and cowardly, and its strong tendency is to diminish greater interest than it could presumptuously hope or pretend to uphold.—Nor yet would we deal out deserved censure on the actors in that foul assassination, and wholly spare such as were the guilty occasion of the atrocity. If we could, we would excite, every where a just indignation against lawless violence. The present time emphatically calls for the best influences of the country to rebuke such evils."

Mystery of Iniquity.—There is a small paper printed in Pittsburg, called the Mystery. So it seems, as the Apostle wrote: 'The mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let till he be taken out of the way.'

HOW TO MAKE MONEY.

The following advice on the subject is very simple, easily understood, and will, we think, in nine cases out of ten, if followed, produce the desired effect: "Work from six in the morning until six in the evening, with a proper resting spell at breakfast and dinner. Live prudently, dress economically, and spend sparingly. When you are sick, give yourself time to get well. Marry young; but if you can't, marry when you get old; but if you never marry at all, don't grieve about it, for the world furnishes abundant examples of happy, amiable, and agreeable people who lead a single life. By works, is meant all the exertions of body or mind by which mankind usually get their living. This is the way our fathers got money. This is the way the world has gone, and this is the way the world will go. There are thousands who wish to take a short cut, but at the end they find their pockets empty. There are exceptions, but they must never be calculated upon, if you mean to make money.

So says an eastern paper, and so say we. Should the writer ever find out the simplicity of Mormonism, he will find the truth of the matter is: 'Every man mind his own business, and work for his living.'

Refused to Surrender.—Gov. Enoch, of New York, has addressed a letter to Gov. Call, declining to yield up James G. Graham, a fugitive from justice, to stand his trial in Florida, on the indictment against him for fraud and conspiracy, causing the failure of the Bank of Florida, while he was President.—Buff. Gaz.

No Mormonism in that.

Mar. Yolanen, the Nestorian.—We have been politely favored with the perusal of a letter, recently received from Rev. Dr. Perkins, in Persia, in which he thus speaks of the interesting Prelate of the Nestorian church, who visited this country in 1812-3. The Rev. Dr. says: "Since his visits to America, his ideas of Christianity appear to be very different from what they were before. To-day, he gave a brief account of what he saw in America—a church full of people.

He described the arts of life as being far in advance of the arts in Persia—said, (as a reason for this) they have the Bible there and read it; it is all from the Bible.

This account of the state of arts in it, was such as to fill his hearers with wonder. His remarks respecting the state of religion was still more interesting. He spoke of the great congregation assembled on the sabbath, their devout attention, their stillness, the neatness and elegance of the churches. He said that in large churches, which would hold several thousand people, dirt enough could not be found to fill a pipe. The stillness of the sabbath surprised him. He said, (in his general way of speaking) that not a man was to be seen on that day, except when on the way to the house of God.—Express.

"Straining at a gnat and swallow a camel"—who does not know that the country and cities make the sabbath a holiday. One-fifth of the people do not go to meeting at all, and the most of the balance go to show their clothes, or to see and be seen. Too much gammon," Rev. Dr!

"Look out for yourselves."—There is a story of an officiating minister, at the Manchester Collegiate Church, having to marry thirty couples on Whit Monday. Toward the end of the service, a female voice cried out imploringly from the crowd, "Sir, you have married me to the wrong man." The functionary called out "sort yourselves, sort yourselves," and went on.

What a whacker! who ever heard the like? "sort yourselves!" "Black spirits and white, red spirits and gray: Mingle, mingle, you that mingle may!" Shak.

I was yesterday in conversation with an intelligent gentleman, who came direct from Warsaw—the seat of such bellicent threats of expulsion and extermination against the women and children of Nauvoo. He said, public opinion had reacted so far as to restore all to quietude, both there and in the latter place. The citizens generally in Warsaw, and elsewhere, had retired to their labor on their farms, &c., and given every assurance to the State authorities that they would commit no violence against the Mormons. The latter had also met at the temple and adopted resolutions expressing their thanks to Governor Ford for his disposition to protect them against mob violence, and declaring their determination to rely upon the laws alone for redress and protection, and if they failed to shield them, to place their trust in God. They furthermore declared their intention not to use force in repelling force, and implored the people of Warsaw and other citizens, to follow the golden rule, and to do to others as they would wish others should do to them. But a dark bloody deed has been committed. I care not what impositions, religious or other frauds, Joe Smith and his associates may have committed, or even how bad men they may have been, (much that is charged against them has never been proven) yet the circumstances under which they were put to death, has left a stain upon the people and civil authorities of that part of Illinois, a stain and such floods as that just poured forth by the great rivers of the West, can never wash out. Just to think that the Smiths, with Richards and another Mormon, at the request of Governor Ford, had peacefully surrendered themselves into the hands of the civil authorities, under a solemn guaranty of protection from mob violence; that their arms were taken from them, (those who say to the contrary, I am told on good authority, lie outright) and thus unarmed, they were confined in prison—and only a guard of 7 men left to protect them!!! with the 'Grays,' at a distance, who had been in a state of mutiny, because Joe Smith and Hiram Smith had been called in their presence. Generals of the Nauvoo Legion! At this juncture, we see a cowardly mob rush unopposed upon the jail, break into the prisoners' apartment, and in cold blood shoot down unarmed men, confined by a mandate of laws, to await their trial in a court of justice, and by a jury of their country!! Thank God, the annals of our country afford no similar instance of such lawless barbarity, and Heaven grant another scene of the kind may never occur in this or any other country. Let Mormonism be as false as all admit it to be; yet, the very last and worst method of checking its spread and growth, is by the martyrdom of its leaders.

As I came up to this city, an old woman of the Mormon faith was on board bound for Nauvoo, where her husband resided. She was accompanied by her daughter and son-in-law, a new married couple. I talked with the old woman about the death of the Prophet and his friends. She expressed her entire disbelief in the story, saying it was her opinion the Prophet and his associates were still living, and that I would sooner or later find she was right. It was in vain I showed her the newspaper, and tried to convince her to the contrary. In the evening, she asked me if I ever heard a Mormon song. I told her I had not. She then inquired if I would like to hear one. I replied affirmatively, whereupon, she commenced and sung two or three, in rather plaintive cadences, the words of which I could not distinctly hear. Her daughter, although not one of the faithful, joined in the song. When she had done, she gave me a pressing invitation to visit them at Nauvoo, and said I would not find them the bad people they had been represented to be. The young couple looked very youthful, and were handsome. The bridegroom's trade was that of a joiner and cabinet maker, which he intended to prosecute at Nauvoo. The greatest evil attending these people in general, is their ignorance; out of which springs their absurd religious delusion. I have no question, and have so heard from disinterested and intelligent Americans who have visited them and were familiar with their character, that in the words of the old woman, 'they are not as bad people as they are frequently represented to be.'

MANHATTAN.

HORRIBLE INMATE.
A gentleman in this city has a letter from his brother, dated at Isle Royal, in Lake Superior, detailing the following story: A man and his wife, a half-breed, were left on the Island last fall by the locators of copyrights or licensees, to keep good their possession. The Isle Royal is about 20 miles from the British or Northern shore. It is about 40 miles long, and but few miles in width. This man and woman were the only inhabitants of this solitary land during the severities of winter. On the 5th of March the man died. The writer of the letter arrived there on the 27th of April, in an open boat, from Isle Point. They found the woman still in the cabin where the two had lived, and the corpse of the man still in the bed where he died! The purity and cold of the atmosphere had prevented the decay of the body, and the lonely woman had been unable or unwilling to remove it. Nearly two months had she lived and slept in the same cabin with her dead husband, when the party arrived and buried it. The forms of a Christian burial were observed, although but one of the party understood the English language.—Cin. Cron.

Beware of counterfeiters—of the old Notes of the State Bank of Indiana.—A new emission of counterfeiters, of the denominations of five dollars, on the State Bank of Indiana, has been frequently seen, within a few weeks past. In the general appearance it resembles the old bills of the Bank—but the paper is too light and thin, and the heads are misplaced.

They are lettered A and two men cradling grain for a vignette, and the heads of Washington and Lafayette, whereas the genuine note, which has two men cradling on, has the heads of Franklin and Wayne. On the genuine notes, which have the heads of Washington and Lafayette, the vignette is an Indian in the act of shooting with his bow.

As this $5 note and the $20 counterfeit of our old bills are calculated to deceive a superficial observer, it is desirable that Editors would call the attention of the community to their detection. State Bank, J. M. RAY, Cashier. Indianapolis, August, 6th 1844.

The Welland Canal.—From authentic information it is ascertained that 865,000 bushels of wheat have passed through this channel this season. Of this amount, 208,000 bushels were consigned to Canadian Mills, and the balance 657,000 bushels went to Oswego and Ogdensburg. The aggregate amount received at Buffalo, and passing, from there to Port Colborne up to the 23d of July, was no less than 1,938,000 bushels, showing that about two fifths of the wheat from the west, seeks a market through the Welland canal.

Rich.—It is said that a fortune of three millions of dollars has been left by I. G. Coster, who died in New York, recently. Mr. C. was known almost throughout the civilized world as one of the oldest, most enterprising and most successful merchants that that city ever possessed.

Grand Robbery.—The office of the clerk of the Common Pleas Court at Cincinnati, was recently robbed of the indictments, recognizances and other papers belonging to the pending criminal term. The court had been in session five weeks and numerous convictions taken place, including ten for penitentiary offences. The result was that no sentences could be rendered and a venire for a new Grand Jury was ordered. The expense to the county will be some two thousand dollars.

LAKE SUPERIOR COPPER COMPANY.

Every body has heard of the mineral wealth of the Copper region on the south shore of Lake Superior; but it is only recently that any systematic efforts have been made to develop its hidden treasures. A large tract of country, embracing the mineral district was purchased by our government in 1842 from the Indians; and the government at once adopted the policy, and we think it was a wise one, of granting leases to practical miners, of such portions as they should select for their mining operations. The tract thus selected is termed a location, and embraces three miles square, or nine square miles of land; and the proprietor of the lease enjoys the exclusive possession of it for nine years, upon paying the government six per cent. of the mineral by way of rent.

The company above named was formed last winter, and the stock is owned by gentlemen in Boston, Washington, St. Louis, and in this city. They have obtained leases for fifteen of such locations, and are well selected, and rich in copper ore, and are now actively engaged in prosecuting their business; and we wish them success in their enterprise. Their headquarters are at Eagle Harbor, on Point Keweenaw. About twenty Cornish miners under the superintendence of C. A. Griest, of Mineral Point, are now digging the ore; but the company do not intend commencing the smelting process until next spring. Mr. C. C. Douglas, late assistant to Dr. Houghton, has been engaged by the company as their Geologist, and is now upon the ground.

Hon. David Henshaw, of Boston, one of the Trustees of the company, passed through Detroit yesterday, on his way to Eagle harbor, accompanied by Dr. C. T. Jackson, one of the most distinguished geologists in our country. Their object is to examine minutely the different veins of copper, and make an accurate analysis of it. We hope the Doctor before his return will give to the public the result of his examination. [Detroit Advt.]

ANOTHER HORRIBLE MURDER.

Philadelphia, Aug. 6th.
Alderman Hoffman, of Moyamensing, was called upon this morning, to hold an inquest upon the body of an Irish woman named Rebecca Brown, who died under circumstances of a horrible nature. The facts are these, the murdered woman is about thirty-five years of age, the wife of James Brown a hod carrier. They resided in a small street in the south-western part of Moyamensing, and Brown was in the constant practice of ill treating his wife, being addicted to intemperance. His brutal treatment becoming insupportable, the poor woman was obliged to apply to Alderman Johnson, on Saturday for a warrant. Brown having beaten her on Friday night in the most shameful manner, he was arrested and committed to prison to answer the charge of assault and battery.

When his wife appeared before the Alderman to testify against him, she presented a painful sight, her whole neck and face exhibiting marks of his brutality. It was difficult even for her to articulate, from the injuries received about her throat and mouth. Notwithstanding all this, she was unwilling to see him sent to prison, and implored the magistrate to release him from custody. He was however committed, and still remains in prison. His wife returned home, and on Sunday evening she managed to crawl to a cellar in Tenth street near Washington, occupied by an Irishman named Samuel Elliot, where she became worse, and after lingering in great agony until about six o'clock this morning, she died. Previous to her death, she is said to have disclosed the perpetration of a series of unparalleled outrages upon her person by the inhuman monster of a husband.

Her clothes were saturated with blood, and her body was bruised from head to foot.

A post mortem examination took place, but the result of the Coroner's jury I have been unable to learn up to the hour of closing.

Horrid Murder.—A cruel murder was committed on the 27th ult. in Butler County, at a place called Break Neck, about 18 miles from Pittsburgh, by an elderly man named Elijah Nellis, on the person of his wife. They had lived together as man and wife upward of thirty years, and had children grown up. The circumstances connected with the murder are these:—On the morning of the 27th July, the attention of some men reaping near his house was attracted by a call from him to them. They went to the house, but before reaching it, a girl from a neighbor's house, who was on an errand to borrow something, got in before them. She found him sitting on the side of a bed, fanning his wife; he said she was dying. The girl put her hand on the woman's forehead, and found it quite cold.

By this time the men came in, and to them he said she had a spasm, and it had, he feared, killed her. The woman being actually dead, as is customary the neighboring women gathered in, when upon an examination of the body by them and three physicians, who had been sent for, it was discovered that she had been choked. Her throat was black, and even the prints of finger nails were plain. On further examination one of her sides was found to be contused as if by pounding. The circumstances where so strong against Nellis that he was immediately arrested. As to the motive of this diabolical murder, it is said a woman lived near his house with whom he had been quite too intimate for some time previous, and this known fact had created suspicion in the minds of the men first called in by him. He was committed to the jail of Butler County, on Sabbath morning the 28th. [Philad. Inq.]

Fiendish Act.—The Richmond Star says: that the train between Weldon and Petersburg on Thursday night, when near Pleasant Hill Post Office met with an obstruction upon the rails, in the shape of a large silk placed there by some villain, which threw off the engine, tender and mail cars into the ditch. On Saturday evening, while leaving Weldon, another silk was found upon the track about 200 yards from the depot, but fortunately the slow rate at which the engine was moving prevented any serious damage.

Vegetable Curiosity.—We have been shown a cluster of six ears of Indian corn, all growing from the same stem, and covered by one sheath. Each ear is perfectly filled with grain, except a few rows where it adheres to its fellows, in which the grains are scattering.

[Norfolk Beacon.]

Fatal Accident.—A serious and fatal accident occurred at Haverhill, New Hampshire, on the 4th of July. A large number of ladies and gentlemen were upon the piazza of a house in the village, to witness the passage of the procession, when it suddenly gave way from the great weight upon it, precipitating the whole party to the ground, killing three ladies, and severely wounding several persons.

Three hundred and thirty four marriages were solemnized by the different clergymen of Lowell, during the year ending April 30, 1844.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

L. R. FOSTER, is now prepared to take Likenesses, by the Daguerreotype process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or coloured, at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Ivins' Store.

By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other method which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of an optical instrument. On y two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotype) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one, upon first beholding the effects of the art; and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature shown up in her every lineament and feature, and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend.

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, and at the Nauvoo Mansion; Price only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES. Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES. The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPHOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons travelling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.

This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents,) brings it within the reach of every person in the community.

A large supply of these celebrated articles just received and for sale at this office.

POETRY.

For the Neighbor. CRY OF THE MARTYRS.

Hark!—the sound of many voices mingling
Their feeble cries like the groans of myriads
Of expiring inmates, ascends the skies
In solemn music. While the wide expanse
Of Heaven's courts resounds with the sound:
Its strains, how mournful, sad, and solemn are How powerful and mighty, and dignified,
And grand, and sublime, and fill all heaven,
As the sound of many waters; or as
The voice of a great thunder; or as
The Siles, starting the angels, and penetrating
The heavens of God, thrilling every nerve
And kindling the flame of justice in each Mortal bosom—And whose voices are these?

They are the voices of ancient martyrs
Who were slain for the witness of Jesus;
And for the world of their testimony.
Yes—crucified, beheaded, sawn in sunder,
Burned, torn by wild beasts, betrayed, shot,
Hung, boiled, roasted, imprisoned, starved,
Tortured in ten thousand nameless ways,
And who, so cruel, or so hard in heart
As to afflict these blessed martyrs thus?
Verily some demons from the courts of Hell
To human form arrayed, alone performed it:
Or if by human aid it might have been
Some lone dog addled with—cruelty,
Trained from his youth to feed on human flesh,
Or tell me, where such atrocities could be found?
Alas, I blush to own the truth, and yet
Myself a man. There were their TRAVELING FRIENDS;
Their fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, sons,
And neighbors. Ah, too often fellow Christians,
In name, but not in spirit. Yes, pious Priests, and praying friends, too often betrayed them.
But how could these in conscience kill such men,
And all for their religion and their faith?
Ah, this, (themselves the judges) they never did.
They first accused them, charged with various Crimes, (and then, and then, and then, for justice,
And thus destroyed them, in holy zeal for God,
And finally thought to do him justice.

But hark!—That pining cry still tingles in My ears, and fills my weary heart with grief
What are their words that burn with might and power,
To pain both heaven and earth, and all that dwell?
"How long, O Lord! how long, and true, dost thou Not judge and avenge our blood on them that Dwell on the earth?"

Are these the awful words? And what reply
Is given by the avenging heavens?
By PATRIOTS—by martyred souls and wait Till your fellow servants who are to be Killed in like manner shall be fulfilled.

Wait—till Missouri's plumes are blacked in blood
Of innocence, and the souls of latter day Siles Mingle their cries with yours for vengeance on
The earth. Wait, till the plains of Illinois,
And the hills of Carthage, are soaked with
The blood of martyred prophets, whose cries
Ascend to heaven for vengeance on a rash Wait—till the last vestige of civil and Religious liberty shall expire in
The bosom of a beating nation, whose Banners mock the cries of justice,
And launch at the prayers of the oppressed.
Wait till then; but wait no longer—You have The answer.

A SONNET ON LIGHT.

BY W. W. PHILLIPS.
I saw the moonlight on the water,
I saw diamond gems, or starlight gold;
I saw the light on a woman's face,
All queenly tips and sparkling pride—
I saw the shining orb of heaven,
Assailed by a gleam of light,
With light of light, an EXISTENCE,
All glittering on each other's spheres—
But not a ray was half so brilliant
As when, a cherub, God exclaim'd:
He brought light, and light, pure light, came shining
On earth—without a sun or moon.

HYMN.

Wake, O wake, the world from sleeping!
Watchman, watchman, stand in power—Hear the Saviour now exclaiming:
"Tis the last—the eleventh hour!
Lo! the Lion's left his thicket;
Up yewatobem, he is haste,
The destroyer of the Gentiles
Goes to lay their cities waste.
Bring the remnants from their exile,
For the promise is to them;
Joyous shall the world his time out,
He must leave the tents of them.
Comfort ye the house of Israel,
They are pardoned, rather them;
Hear the watchman's proclamation,
Jews rebuild Jerusalem.
Soon the Jews will know their error,
How they killed the Holy One,
And they'll shout and shout hosanna:
This is the beloved Son.
Sound the trumpet with the tidings,
Call in all of Abram's seed,
Though the Gentiles may reject it,
Christ will come in very deed." W. W. P.

NIAGARA.

BY J. BARBER, ESQ.
Cloud-girdled Thunder! Embodied storm!
Whether enrobed in vapors dark and dim,
Or looms, magnificent, thy giant form
Through the dramatic bosom of the sun, Wondrous alike! What floods have swept thy brow
Since the bold plunge of thy primeval wave,
From those tremendous advent until now, Thou hast not paused, nor failed. Yon boiling grave
Roars from its depths the song Creation gave:

While towering billows, each a dwarf to thee,
In surging myriads sweep the storm vexed main,
Here, all the fountains of an inland sea
One everlasting avalanche sustain:
Stem Strength and Beauty in thy form contend;
Strength, that Omnipotence alone could stem,—
And beauty, from the mists that o'er the bend
Falls at my feet in many a dewy gem,
The peerless jewels of thy diadem.

Barrier of nations! on each cultured shore,
Lashed by the breakers of thy cloven stream,
His wigwam rude the Indian reared of yore,
Where now the dwellings of his conquerors gleam.
But what to thee are nations, or their change?
They cannot claim thy waters as a dower;
And what to thee injustice,—hate,—revenge?
Wildly thou laughest, from thy theme of power.

At man's poor wrath,—the turmoil of an hour!
Like some lone fragment of the Deluge, elef,
From its companion waves thro' coming time
A warning monument of justice, left
By the Omnipotent punisher of crime.
Methinks thou' a earnest. From an hundred rains
Pilgrims have come to thee, a mig'ty crowd,
And feel the awe which now my spirit whirls.
As here I stand before thy presence, bowed, Stunned by thy voice, and mantled in thy cloud!!

LIFE IN PARIS.

A Bostonian who visited the French capital last spring, furnishes the following sketches of things as they came under his observation. The letter is addressed to the Boston Daily Advertiser:

Paris, 1st April, 1844.
Maurice's Hotel is an immense building in the form of a hollow square, fronting on the Rue de Rivoli, and overlooking the garden of the Tuilleries, in the most fashionable and delightful quarter of Paris. Its proprietor is one of the most estimable and obliging men of his craft—everything in the establishment is on the most liberal scale. It is the head quarters of English and American travelers, and its table d'hôte is attended by the best company in Europe. Here then, a very citizen of the United States who finds himself in Paris should appear, if not as a permanent boarder, at least as an occasional guest, that he may make a comparison between this splendid establishment and the great Astor and Tremont of his own land.

The American must not expect to find the same arrangement as he meets with at home, for it is safe to say that in the two countries every thing is different—but he is fairly entitled to draw a comparison between the comforts severally offered him and will have the opportunity of showing the correctness of his judgment by the impartiality of his decision.

It is not too much to say, that at Maurice's—as perhaps at the Tremont or the Astor; one may have any thing he wants, upon the sole condition of being willing to pay for it. The first great difference in the French and American houses, is the amount of this payment, which in the former exceeds the latter by about fifty per cent. But the greater difference is made in the mode of computation. In America you have board and lodging to a certain extent at a fixed price:
in Paris each apartment and article is charged by itself.

But let us look at the table d'hôte, where dinner is served every day at six o'clock, for 4-12 francs a head. The room is inferior in size to its American rivals. The single table, which runs from end to end, can accommodate but 60 or 65 persons; but this table is decorated with taste. Splendid artificial flowers adorn the centre, and flower pots of verberna and hyacinths ornament the sides. It is a perfumed garden; profusely brilliant with light, crystal and silver; and occupied by persons in corresponding attire. You notice in a moment, that the attendants are servants, and not merely help; and that their ready and skilful attention, are the results of habit and discipline—to which the American hotels are entirely strangers.

There is no noise—no rattling of knives or plates—no running—no disorder—no tumult. The plates are changed almost imperceptibly, and you hear nothing but the conversation of different parties, mingling the various languages of Europe, in which the English evidently predominates. There is no hurry, and no unreasonable duration. The dinner is an hour, or an hour and a half in progress—and then the company retire.
This table is a very fair specimen of the capabilities of the market and the power of the artist. The dishes are well dressed and served hot and promptly. I have seen private establishments which are certainly vastly more sumptuous; and others quite respectable, not nearly so luxurious. A stranger will, however, be able to judge pretty well, from this exhibition, of the famous French cuisine, and its pretensions to epicurean perfection.

Do not set it down to American prejudice, when I tell you in one word, that it is inferior in most of its appointments to our native gastronomy.—There are two sufficient causes for this, one is the inferiority of the materials, and another the eternal disposition of the people to stimulate by adulterated articles. Every kind of provision is sold here at nearly double the American price, except bread.
Nothing passes the Barrier of the city, without paying the "octroi," which is a tax levied upon every article of food for man or beast; and this tax is so arranged as to cause the introduction of large and coarse articles rather than fine and tender ones. These latter are undoubtedly to be had for the tables of the wealthy;
but nine hundred and ninety-nine in a thousand, are supplied from the common markets. I have very carefully examined the productions there exposed, and am most decidedly of opinion, that they are greatly below our American standard. The Capon alone, is superior to our poultry, but the ducks and geese are poor; and when the turkeys are not stuffed with truffles, they have the appearance of having died upon their nest.
The salmon is very fine, and the turbot fat, but these are too costly for ordinary food. Other fish are thin and tasteless.
The lobster, at seven francs, is inferior to the American at fifty cents. It is here a different species. The rich Cape Cod oyster, or the plump New Yorker, is unknown. There is a small one, with a strong copper taste, which is eaten before dinner, by those who acquire a taste for it.

At Maurice's and places of established reputation, you may take with confidence of what is presented to you. But elsewhere, Prenez Garde, you may get a puppy soup or a cat for a rabbit. There are dinners for two francs, and dejeuner a la fourchette for one. But the ghosts of murdered reptiles seem hovering round the tables. You think this is exaggeration. Not so. Every thing is eaten; and its quality disguised in the cookery.
Every good thing is imitated by a succession of adulterations, successively departing from the original. It may not be, perhaps, that there is less honor in it; but it will certainly be imposed upon by getting the inferior article, when he asks for, and pays for the best. There is no where worse wine than in the shops here. The police seize it and pour out hogsheds in the streets. Still the gentlemen article is to be had only by good luck or favor. Paris is as much a foreign country to this wine district, as London or St. Petersburg, and as the markets of those cities are better than Paris, the best wines go there. But the enormous demand for the fine wines of the country, is a hundred fold beyond the production, and the proprietors cannot sell at any price the genuine juice. I have drunk at the tables of most particular amateurs the choicest wines to be had either for money or favor—and in one instance when they came from the vineyard of the proprietor who gave the invitation, but no champagne better than has circulated at the "reunions" of 1802. The better sorts of Bordeaux and Burgundy, that will not bear a sea voyage, are unquestionably more delicate—but the quality obtained, on ordinary occasions, is decidedly worse. It is more difficult and more expensive to get a good glass of French wine in Paris than Boston! Steam destroys nationality.

The epicureans here serve their wine in a peculiar way. All the fine wines of Bordeaux and Burgundy are in bottles, which are kept on their sides in the cellar.
Of course there is more or less sediment which must not be disturbed. Peculiar baskets are prepared, into which the bottle is carefully slipped at the same angle it had before retained, and the cork being drawn by a screw that produces no disturbance of the contents, the wine is carefully poured out by inclining the handle of the basket; and when entrusted to an experienced hand, none of the lees escape. But first of all these baskets with the wine, (each basket holding one bottle) are exposed to the sun or a gentle fire, until it acquires 42 degrees of Fahrenheit—all such wines requiring that temperature to bring out their rich flavor.
Champagne, on the contrary, is by a peculiar process reduced to 28 degrees, and the cork removed two hours before it is drank! You will not understand that this is invariable. But at a recherche dinner intended for display or good taste, it is considered a point of necessary etiquette, and is also a pretty good test of the character of the wine.

There are some other trifling incidents of Parisian life new to Bostonians. I have not heard the sound of a bell, except as the hammer of the clock strikes it. There is no noise in the street but such as is necessarily made by the passing of carriages. Thousands are in the public gardens every day—other thousands on the Boulevards—they laugh, joke, play, amuse themselves in various ways, but entirely without that obstre-pous clamor of an American population, which seems to identify uproar with enjoyment. I have not yet heard the report of a cannon. But bands of music a hundred strong are no unusual sight half a dozen times a day. The mystery of a wheelbarrow, or a hand cart is yet to be acquired. I pity the unfortunate porters who carry every thing; sideboards, sofas, beds, book cases, and weights of every kind on a machine fastened upon the back. But come: we are going to a party—and by a connexion of ideas which is better created by writing than animal magnetism, (now all the rage here) I can carry you with me.

It is the night of reception of the lady of the British Ambassador, the sister of the Duke of Wellington, and the object of high ambition to all Americans in Paris. We must go in a "Voiture de remise"; a common hackney coach would not be admitted into the court yard. A servant goes with us of necessity; and there is abundant need of his services.
Those who pretend to make a display take two or three. Well, we enter the carriage, and at two streets from our door, are "en file." That is, we make one of the eight hundred equipages proceeding to the same spot. Now in Paris, every thing is done by rule. A military guard regulates the approach, and all are compelled to go by one route, and in procession, without confusion or disorder. But stop; there is a coach with out-riders and servants in livery, that drives by, and advances directly to the door. Yes, that is the coach of a minister—an ambassador—a peer or a deputy,
and all such have a privilege, on reporting to the guard, to break through the line, and require the long file to stand still.

Now at the British Ambassador's we received all the dignitaries of this Empire, and all the representatives of every other, and their pretent of precedence intercepts the access of our entitled nobility well. It is 12 o'clock, an hour since we started, and we are now at the hall door of the magnificent hotel which the British Government purchased for the residence of its representative.—Our servant takes our outside garment, which he is to guard till our departure. We are received by servants in livery. One of a higher grade announces us, and we pass a double file to the already crowded and brilliant reception room. We are received with a polished politeness and elegant affability. But there is only a moment or two for our turn. The stream rushes from behind us, and we pass on.
The illuminated apartments are filled with the nobility of Europe. The stars and ribbons of the gentlemen—the beauty and the diamonds of the ladies—the extensive halls filled to profusion with flowers, and decorated with costly furniture—the general air of satisfaction and self-possession in this gay throng, combine to astonish and delight us. We admire the scene, to us entirely original —as one grand spectacle of royal magnificence.

We pass two or three hours in conversation, in walking through the various rooms, and in receiving the attentions of the elegant hostesses and such of our friends as we happen to find in this fashionable and noble assembly.
We prepare to depart; our servant is ready with our garments, and he orders the carriage—but there is another necessary delay, for the whole eight hundred are again "en file." The military guard regulate their approach, one at a time, and in this way power on one side and patience on the other, prevent broken necks. We return to our domestic habits by 4 o'clock in the morning, two hours at least before the doors are closed upon the last retreating visitors at that hospitable and almost royal establishment.

Delicate Dilemmas.—I was, as usual, strongly recommended, whilst staying at Murroo, to take a wife, like Ohmed Ma-homed, Ebin Israk, and, in fact, all the rest of my companions; who as is usual, had taken to themselves temporary help-mates. One of the girls who presented herself to me as a candidate was stated by her friends to be a very strong woman and had had as many as four or five husbands. I thought this rather a strange recommendation; but it was evidently mentioned that she might find favor in my eyes. I dismissed her very unceremoniously, as if I did not altogether understand the proposal, but, at the same time, gave her as proofs of my regard for her people, and of my strong platonic attachment to herself, a few red beads, and a little paper, that she had asked for in the first instance as her dower. It requires some little address to keep clear of these unscrupulous ladies; and I frequently had cause to fear that my constant rejection of their addresses would be construed into an affront to the tribes to which they belonged. An Arab friend of mine, whom I met at Mozambique, named Said Hamza, told me of an adventure of his in the country of the Muzegahs, some five or six weeks' journey up the large river that empties itself into the Indian Ocean at Lamoo. He had been fined by the chief for forming some matrimonial connexion without his authority; so he determined to have nothing more to do with their women. A girl coming into his hut, he accordingly walked out; and this caused a much greater quarrel than before, for the whole tribe asserted he had treated them with contempt by his haughty conduct towards the girl, and demanded to know if she were not good enough for him. Said Hamza in the end was again mulcted of a lot of brass wire and blue sood before he could allay the national indignation; which his extreme caution had thus excited. Such delicate dilemmas are best avoided, as I have before remarked, by engaging the first old woman that makes her appearance. To her must be referred all new comers of her sex; and she will generally manage to send them away without compromising the traveller at all. [Johnson's Travels.

Touching Letter.—The following is the letter addressed by the unfortunate Sennarat to his wife, a few minutes before his execution.

"Rose of my life; have patience; console yourself with religion, and with the idea that your husband has ever loved you tenderly, and even in this his last moment thinks of you alone. Make my children happy, and do it speedily, for this life is short, and in the other world the just will be rewarded. Farewell, say a thousand tender things to my dear mother, and to all the family. Console yourself for God's sake; think of your children; and do not forget your husband, who adores you in his inmost soul.
Farewell, farewell!!
Francisco De Sennarat."

Great Conflagration.—The New York
Journal of Commerce says, the City of San Carlos, the principal town in the Island of Chiloe, the most southern province of the Chilean Republic, has been the scene of a dreadful conflagration, which broke out in its very centre, and before it could be subdued, destroyed two thirds of the place. One hundred and fifty houses, comprising all the magazines of provisions, fell a prey to the flames. The unfortunate inhabitants, equally destitute of food and shelter, were compelled to abandon the ruins, and fly to the interior, to seek a refuge and means of subsistence. The port of San Carlos, a recruiting place by South Sea whalers, contained about 4000 inhabitants, all of whom have suffered more or less by this deplorable calamity. At the time of the fire there were anchored in the road an American schooner, a British brig, and a French whale ship, the crews of which, it is superfluous to add, performed all the duties that humanity imposed on them.

The Crops in England.—The following paragraph, from the London and Shipping Mercantile Gazette of July 12, gives a very favorable account of the prospects of an abundant crop in Great Britain during the present season.

A wonderful change has taken place in the position of affairs in the short space of three weeks, the weather experienced during that period having so far improved the appearance of the country, as in a great measure to allay, if not wholly to remove, the apprehensions previously entertained of a deficient harvest. The outstanding crop of Wheat is now generally described as very promising. The late rains have tended materially to fill the ear, and though we still have occasional complaints, we have no hesitation in predicting that, with moderately favorable weather for harvesting, the yield will be a full average. Under these circumstances there is little prospect of purchases recently made abroad on British account turning out profitable to speculators, and we certainly feel less confidence in prices being maintained than we did a short time ago.

Manufactures.—It is still every machine shop in New England capable of turning out factory machinery, has orders for twelve months ahead!

The New Haven Herald says: "Connecticut has been made the sport of all the civilized globe as the land of wooden nutmegs, &c., till she has lived down all the buffoonery and the slanders of her revilers, and still she is going on in the course of improvement, and astonishing not only our own country but the world at large with the effects of her genius and the success of her enterprises. In addition to the wooden spoons, wooden nutmegs, &c., we are now manufacturing wooden combs,—and this is no new thing either, but we mention it to relate the fact that a manufacturer of this latter article, informed us a few days since, that his business was not only prosperous, but that he had orders now on hand for one hundred thousand gross—(no mistake, 100,000 gross)—of these combs, of various descriptions, and was receiving additional orders every day. He is in favor of the tariff, and says the Englishmen could not beat him at fair play any how, unless he learnt them the trade.

From the S. W. Christian Advocate.
A FIRST RATE NEGRO STORY.
Fives miles from Huntsville lives a Negro Boy who is rather bordering on the marvellous.

On the 8th June, 1844, Rev. J. C.
Burruss, Mr. T. Brandon and myself went to see him, and were amazed.
From himself and Mr. Mc-Lemore, his master, we learned that he had no idea of a God. When asked who made you?
he answered, nobody. He has never been but a few times half a mile from the place of his birth. He has not mind enough to do the ordinary work of a slave; eats and sleeps in the same house with the white folks, having his own table and bed. He will not ask for any thing, nor touch food, however hungry, unless it be offered him. He was never known to commence a conversation with any one, nor continue one, further than merely answering questions in the fewest words. He speaks very low and tardily, he has never been known to utter a falshood, or to steal, and is but little subject to anger, will not strike a dog or any thing else; but when vexed by his sister, he will take hold of her arm, as if he would break it with his hands. He cannot be persuaded to taste intoxicating liquors.
His utter aversion to this bane, is either the result of his having seen its effects in his master, or it is instinctive. He has never manifested any predilection for the sex. There is nothing remarkable in the configuration of his head or his counteenance, save that his eye is uncommonly convex and continually rolling about with a wild and glaring expression. His laugh and movements are perfectly idiotical; he does not know a letter or figure.
Withal, in one respect, he is the most extraordinary human being I ever saw.
Almost his only manifestation of mind, is in relation to numbers. His power over numbers is at once extraordinary and incredible. Take any number under 100, and ask him its product when multiplied into itself, or into any other number, and he will state it at once, as readily as any one can give the sum of 12 times 12. He multiplies thousands, adds, subtracts and divides with the same certainty though with more mental labor. He has, however, no idea of numbers above millions.

With pencil and paper we made the following calculations and asked him the questions, thus: How much is 99 times 99? He answered immediately 9,801.
Well, how much is 74 times 86? He answered, 6401. How many nines in 2,000? He answered, two hundred and twenty two nines and two over. How many fifteens in 3,353? He answered, 223 fifteens and eleven over. How many twenty threes in 4,000? He answered, 173 twenty threes and 21 over. How much is 321 times 789? He answered after a short pause, 253,369. If you take 21 from 85, how many will be left?
He answered 64. If you take 5211 from 6920, how many will be left? He answered, 1809. How much is 7 times 9, twenty-two and 14? He answered 99, How many is 17 times 17 and 16? He said 405. If you had to give one dollar and a half, for one chicken and a half, how much would you have to give for two chickens? He said, two dollars.

If a stick, standing straight up, three feet long, makes a shadow five feet long, how high would a pole be, that has a shadow thirty feet long? At this he put his hand to his chin, drew himself up and gave a silly laugh. His master said, he did not understand such as that. We then asked him, how much is 3,333 times 3,555. In this instance, as in some others, he looked serious, began to twist about in his chair, to pick his clothes, finger nails, to look at his hands, put the points of his thumbs to his teeth, move his lips a little, and then seemed to think a little, and his countenance would give indications of mental agony; and so on.
His master told him to walk about and rest himself. He went into the yard and appeared alternately elated with rapture and depressed with gloom. He would run jump up, throw his arms into the air, above his head; then stand still, and then drag his foot over the weeds, look up and down; in a word he took on all sorts of crazy motions. We sat down to dine, and when we arose, we found him on the piazza sitting down perfectly composed.
On being told he had done it, I said, how much is it? He answered eighteen millions, five hundred and fourteen thousand, eight hundred and fifteen. What?
said I. He replied, 18,514,815.

We could get no clue to the mental process by which he ascertained such results. When asked, how he did it, his unvarying answer was, I studies it up.
But what do you do first, and what next?
He merely drawled out, I studies it up.
He did not count on his fingers, nor any thing external, nor indeed did he seem to count at all; and yet he combined thousands and millions, and played with combinations, just as others would with units. All the instruction he ever received, was from his master, who learned him to count one hundred; and would ask him how many twenties in a hundred and how many fives, &c.

On the following Monday, I saw him again, and asked him what was that hard sum I gave him last Saturday. He replied, 3,333 times 5,255. On Saturday we told him there was 365 days in a year, and 24 times that would give the hours, which he said was 8,760; sixty times that, the seconds; and he said, 5,256,000; and sixty times that, the seconds; and he said, 31,436,000. On Monday I asked him how many seconds in a year; and he recollected the number. Being then asked how much is 24 times 58? He answered 11,88. How much is 15 times 41 and 77 and 7? He said 700. How many thirty threes in 777? He said, 23 thirty threes and 18 over. His recollection of numbers is almost as wonderful as his power to combine them. I submit these facts to the consideration and reasoning of mental philosophers; for whoever has carefully read this paper, knows as much as I know of this amazing wonder.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE.

By the last steam packet from England, we received our regular papers from London, Liverpool, Edinburgh, Manchester, &c. From the Guardian of July 31, we extract the following VARIETIES.

The daguerotype is in full operation at Hobart Town.

It is reported that Government intends to fortify the whole extent of the channel coast of England.

Among the marriages announced in the Times last week was that of a "Mr. Emperor Adrian."

Advance of Wages.—The manufacturers of Carlisle have given the weavers an advance of 8d. per "cut," which will be about ten per cent.

Lord Brougham is expected to arrive in the north in the course of a few days, the requisite arrangements having been made for his lordship's reception at Brougham Hall.

Game laws on the Continent.—The correctional tribunal of Lille has recently decided that larks are game, and that it is unlawful to carry them about even when alive!

A Berlin paper states, that the Emperor of Russia has conferred the order of Alexander Newski on Baron Brunow, the Russian Ambassador in England.

The Wolverhampton Chronicle states, that an old woman of 87, residing in an almshouse at Leek, is now cutting a complete set of new teeth.

Upwards of 54,000,000 francs have been expended in Paris since 1831, in establishing sewers, water pipes, fountains, and paving the streets of that capital.

A letter from Dresden states, that since the recent troubles at Prague, letters arriving at Dresden from Bohemia are almost all opened by the authorities, and re-sealed with the imperial arms.

The present parliament has this month completed its third year, and during that period there have been no fewer than 131 fresh elections, occasioned by deaths, resignations, elections to offices, &c.

It appears certain (says the Nuremberg Correspondent) that the King of Prussia and the Emperor of Austria will meet at the baths of Ischia; but, it is added, that the intended meeting is unconnected with politics.

It is said, that Sir James Graham has sent a police officer to France to claim Richard Dadd, the madman who murdered his father. His imprisonment in France, for an assault, has just expired.

At a London and American shell fish establishment in Liverpool, two monster lobsters, which together weighed 47 lbs., have been exhibited within the past few days, having been imported from America.

The Lisbon advices of the 17th inst., announces, that the affairs of the government are in such a miserable plight that it had been obliged to suspend its payments; a bill for so small a sum as £120 having been protested!

There is now growing in the garden of Mr. Shaw, Cockpit Yard, Chesterfield, a vegetable curiosity, in the shape of a white rose, perfectly formed and fully blown, in the centre of which is a no less perfectly formed bud.

Chambers's Journal has increased since the alteration in its form from some what under 60,000, which was the amount latterly printed of the old series, to above 90,000, being an addition of more than one-half.

At the annual distribution of prizes of the City of London School, it was announced that Mr. Beaufoy had established a scholarship of £50 per annum for the encouragement of mathematical science.

Ancient pottery, on which zigzags, spiral, and concentric circles are found, are at least 3,000 years old. There are specimens in the British Museum. Hitherto they were thought to be Byzantine; they are of the Cyclopean period.

A confidential clerk of the Birmingham Town and District Bank, absconded on Thursday, with twelve £100 Bank of England notes. A reward of £100 has been offered for his apprehension, and he has since been apprehended in Chester.

Last week, there was sent to London, from Doe Park, near Woolton, a rye straw, measuring nine feet. The rye in the field from which it was taken is higher than has ever been seen in this country, the lowest straw being at least six feet.

As a proof of the depression in the value of agricultural property in Sydney, it has been remarked that the Sydney Herald contains an advertisement to let a farm of 112 acres, and offering to make the person who will take it a present of some cows into the bargain.

The proportion of books which pay for the expenses of printing and publishing is small; of those which leave profit, very small; of those which reach a second edition, not one in 1840; of those which pass through more than two, not one in many thousands.—New Quarterly Review.

Smuggling.—A large quantity of tobacco, upwards of 3,000 lbs, was lately seized, by information, from a cave in a slate-quarry, at Aberpwell, near St. David's Head, by the Arrow cutter, and taken to Plymouth. The landing was effected by a celebrated French smuggling cutter.

It appears by an article in the Swedish Mercury, that there is a great deal of emigration from Hesse Darmstadt to Algeria. Several families of cultivators, says that journal, recently quitted the village of Obbenheim, which is situated in one of the richest districts of the country.

Riots in Bohemia.—The Nuremberg Correspondent states, that the working classes of Brood, in Bohemia, had risen en masse, and destroyed several factories. Troops had arrived, however, from the neighboring garrisons, and no doubt was entertained of the restoration of order.

The Earl of Ducie, "the farmers' enemy," as the monopolists designate him, has carried off four silver medals, besides more substantial rewards, for the best agricultural machines exhibited at the Southampton Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society.

A quadrille was not danced—but swam in the river Seine the other day, by a party of gentlemen, in one of the large bathing establishments in Paris. There was a splendid band of music, and the swimmers acquitted themselves with much ability.

An application has been made to the committee of privileges in the house of lords to restore the dormant title of the earldom of Leyenax or Lennox. There are four claimants—Lord Napier; Napier of Napier; Lennox of Woodhead; and Haldane of Glogogles. This is one of the most ancient titles in Scotland.—Glasgow Courier.

Size of Farms.—The Maidstone Farmers' Club resolved on Thursday last, after discussion, "That it appears to the members of this club that in this district, it is most beneficial to the community at large that arable farms should not exceed 500 acres in extent, nor be less than 250 acres."—Maidstone Gazette.

The cities of Scotland are competing with each other in the excellent object of founding public baths. Dundee is to have this convenience for the people.—Lord Kinnaird has promised to give a hundred pounds towards the formation of a bath, and Mr. Duncan, the member for Dundee, five guineas.

Starch is manufactured in Australia so cheaply and successfully, that no imported starch can enter into legitimate competition with it. It therefore behoves those who desire the advancement of our domestic manufactures, to admit the free import of starch into Europe, instructing future shipments.—Adelaide Observer.

Mortality of Tailors.—In the registered causes of death of 233 persons, entered during 1843, in the eastern and western unions of the metropolis, under the general head of "tailor," no less than 123 are registered as having died of diseases of the respiratory organs, of which 92 were of consumption.

The Duke of Sussex's Library.—On Saturday took place, at Evan's Pall Mall, the 21th and last day's sale of the first or "theological" part of the library of the late Duke of Sussex. The proceeds of the 24 days' sale are £8,300, 1s. The whole library, on the valuation of it preparatory to being offered to the government, agreeably to the duke's will, was under £16,000.

A Rustic Senator.—A member of the Connecticut legislature, who was invited to a soiree given by Governor Baldwin, indulged himself with an ice-cream.—While spooning it into his mouth, in imitation of his neighbors, he advanced to an innkeeper of the house, and whispered, in a confidential tone, "Your cream, as you call it, is sweetened first-rate; but I guess you didn't know it was froz, did ye?"

The Landowners and Railways.—It was given in evidence before the select committee, that no less a sum than £8,500,000 has been expended by railway companies in England and Scotland, on land and "compensation." This is about an average of £5,000 a mile. On the Paris and Rouen Railway, the item was £2,300 a mile. The average in Belgium is £2,750 a mile.—Railway Record.

A seizure of about four tons of unmanufactured tobacco—the duty upon which would amount to about £1,300—was on Wednesday morning made by P. Moore, Esq. principal officer at North Shields, on board of the Eclipse, Captain Clark, from Holland. The tobacco was concealed among the ballast in the hold of the vessel. Three of the crew were taken into custody.

There are about 60,000 Europeans in the whole of Algeria more than the half of whom are not French, but consists nearly of all European nations, but principally Spaniards. In Oran alone, out of a population of 8 or 9,000 Christians, or Europeans, there are 6,000 Spaniards.—Out of the 30,000 French civilians, the 45ths, or 24,000, are people employed for the army, or shopkeepers and petty dealers, or masters of cafes and hotels, &c.

The wooden ware annually made in Northern Massachusetts including one million of chairs, and vast quantities of tables, bedsteads, tubs, pails, pianos, bureaus, brooms, brushes, and other articles, is estimated to exceed fifteen thousand tons. Ships sailing from Boston for the southern ports, the West Indies, and South America, often take wooden ware between decks, and fill the hold with ice, of which article forty thousand tons are annually exported from Boston.

The Nouveliste (a Bruges paper) states that it has been ascertained that a picture of large dimensions, which has been many years placed above the chief altar of the church of Wynghe (West Flanders) is from the pencil of Rubens. This painting, of which no one before was aware of the author, represents the adoration of the infant Jesus by the shepherds in the stable at Bethlehem. The work is said to be one of the finest examples of the "Prince of Flemish painters."

The Artesian well at Southampton.—This well, though uncompleted, is a work of the greatest magnitude, vying with, if it does not surpass, the great well of Grenelle, by which Paris has lately been supplied. The depth of the Southampton well is at present 13,000 feet. The shaft descends through 78 feet of alluvium, 200 feet of clay similar to the London clay (which is a general substratum in the Southampton basin,) and through another 100 feet of plastic clay, before it reaches the chalk, through which it descends 100 feet still further.

Consumption of fish in Birmingham.—Few persons have any idea of the large consumption of fish in our market, especially during the present season. We have ourselves learned with some surprise, that it is no uncommon occurrence for one hundred tons of salmon to arrive during the week, by railway, from Liverpool. This immense supply is obtained from the Irish fisheries, but chiefly from the Shannon, and is only a small proportion of the extensive importations from the north and south of Ireland.—Birmingham Journal.

Political Sentiments of the Wesleyans.—The Wesleyan Chronicle of last week presents its readers with an interesting and useful table, containing the number of Wesleyan voters in twenty-nine cities and boroughs, and seven county districts, of which four belongs to the West Riding of Yorkshire, and the manner in which they disposed of their suffrages at the last election. From this it appears, that out of the total number of 1,843 voters in these boroughs, 1,370 voted on that occasion for liberal, 308 only, or about one-sixth, for Tory candidates.

THE ANTI-RENT TROUBLES.

West Sandlake, August 10th.

It having been generally understood that Gov. Bouck was to visit us to-day, in accordance with an arrangement with a committee of the tenants, there was accordingly a large turn out of probably some 2000 of the tenantry. A flag was raised, having on it the representation of an Indian, with the motto—

"Down with the Rent."

And in one of the windows of a tavern was placed a transparency, representing another "native" with the motto—

"The land is mine saith the Lord."

About 150 of the celebrated, though atomalous tribe of Indians, who have been the instrument of all the trouble, were also in attendance. These savages presented a most comical and grotesque appearance, and certainly looked anything but ferocious, or ferociously inclined. They wore masks in most cases of glazed quail, with apertures for sight and breathing, covering the head and neck entirely, and blouses of calico, decorated with party-coloured patches, furs, &c. and from their ears hung large brass rings, while a few had strings of beads hanging from their noses. The chiefs, as they were termed, were more profusely decorated, and by way of distinction bore long spears. They were variously armed, some carrying swords, bits of scythes, knives, and threatening cheese knives, others clubs and muskets, while all had pistols in their belts. The language spoken I believe was our common vernacular, mouthed with a strange intonation, with an occasional sprinkling of Dutch. "Natives" was the term generally applied by the chiefs in addressing them, although they were profusely divided into several tribes, as I heard one of the leaders designated as the Tuscarora chief.

At about half past ten o'clock, the approach of the Executive of the State was announced by the repeated discharges of a six pounder, the usual signal gun of the insurgents, which was placed at the four corners. His Excellency on entering the village was received by a committee and escorted to the house of Mr. Burton A Thomas, where the committee of conference of one from each town on the manor, awaited to receive him. The Natives, while the conference was going on, withdrew to a neighbouring wood.

The Governor remained in conference with the committee for some two or three hours. In the meantime, the people who had flocked into the village were gathered into crowds and knots, discussing with much apparent feeling and excitement, the rent question, and indulging in various surmises as to the character and result of the conference. At about 2 o'clock the Governor and the committee adjourned to dinner, when the church bell was rung, and the people assembled in front of the church.

Mr. Gregory, one of the Committee of Conference, then mounted the stand and addressed them. He detailed the particulars of the interview with Gov. Bouck. He stated that he had proposed to the Governor that the question as to the title should be left to the Governors of any three of the New England states, (Connecticut excepted) for their examination and decision. To this he said Governor Bouck demurred, for the reason that they were common men like himself, with one exception, that of Gov. Briggs of Massachusetts, who was a lawyer, and therefore were not a whit more competent to decide. He also said that the Governor had informed them that he had directed the sheriff of the county not to serve any process without previously consulting the Attorney General and the Justices of the Supreme Court. He concluded with an earnest exhortation to them to stand firm on the ground they had taken, and continue to resist any attempt to enforce the payment of their rents by all possible means. No matter what is done, he said they must refuse the payment of rent, and must rely on their arms—the arms of the law, which was as much on their side as on that of their opponents. The orator added that he was informed the Attorney General had given it as his opinion that the sheriff had not exerted the entire power vested in him, and that until he had done so, the State Executive could do nothing in the matter.

When the speaker had concluded, the Indians came galloping furiously into the village under another discharge from the six pounder. One of them unfortunately was thrown from his horse, and framed upon by those who followed. Upon picking him up he was found to be much injured and he was carried into a neighbouring house, where he died in about an hour after. His name was Corse.

While the Indians were engaged in attending to their wounded comrade, the Governor was escorted down to the meeting in front of the church, where he received the greetings of the people. While engaged in shaking hands with them, the Indians came down again, and formed in a circle completely surrounding the Governor and the people. This it is understood was against the express wishes of his Excellency, and upon the chief manifesting a desire to greet him, he immediately left the ground. The Indians then dispersed, as did most of the people; and the Governor left for Albany.

Thickness of the Crust of the Earth.—The first investigation of importance that presents itself, is the thickness of the crust on which we dwell. We have seen that this ought to be continually increasing, though with increasing slowness, and that there was a time when it was so thin as to be almost in a state of fusion. We have stated, that the increase of temperature observed, is about one degree Fahrenheit for every fifteen yards of descent. In all probability, however, the increase will yet be found to be in geometrical progression, as investigation is extended; in which case the present crust will be much thinner than we have calculated it to be; and should this be found to be correct, the ingenious theory will become a subject of more importance, in a geological point of view, than we are at present disposed to consider it. Taking, then, as correct, the present observed rate of increase, the temperature would be as follows.

Water will boil at the depth of 2,430 yards.

Lead melts at the depth of 8,400 yards.

There is red heat the depth of 7 miles.

Gold melts at 21 miles.

Cast iron at 74 miles.

Soft iron at 97 miles.

And at the depth of 100 miles, there is a temperature equal to the greatest artificial heat yet observed; a temperature capable of fusing platinum, porcelain, and indeed the hardest substance we are acquainted with. These temperatures show that the earth is fluid at the depth of 100 miles, and little more than the soil on which we tread is fit for the habitation of organized beings.

Relics.—In the cellar of a house in Portsmouth, N. H., recently, the bones of two or more individuals were discovered, six feet below the surface; also, buried with them, two clay smoking pipes, and an old fashioned axe. There is no doubt that these are Indian relics. The house, which had just been taken down, had been standing over one hundred years, and as there had probably been no Indian burial, within what is now the compact part of the town, for more than two hundred years, the relics must be of that age, at least.

At Philadelphia, recently, in digging for a foundation on the site of the Old Academy, in Fourth street, the workmen came to a coffin, which broke to pieces at the first blow of the spade, and exposed a portion of the mouldering remains of its tenant. The handles of the coffin were perforated with the rust, though in some places traces of the silver plating could be seen. The Academy was commenced in 1741, and finished in 1744; it was intended as a meeting house for the celebrated Whitfield, but the funds failing, it was purchased by a subscription raised by Dr. Franklin, about 1750, for an Academy or College. It is, therefore, to be supposed that the interments took place between the years 1741 and 1750. In the course of their excavations, the workmen have dug up a number of coffins, of all sizes.—Reveille.

The Democrats and Whigs.—When a hawk and a snake were once at war very ferociously, a spectator cried out;—Fight on no odds which beats; and really there seems to be no loss or gain in the predominance of either party now. They both despise each other like the parietes, omni and plebians—but what of it? Shallow water always shows the most bubbles.

Short Articles.—Canada is full of discontent; great earthquake along the shore of Connecticut; John Tyler has backed out as a candidate for the next Presidency; England is on the eve of receiving another "heir" apparent of the fourth magnitude, "to rule Britannia"; Col Stone of the "Commercial" died recently at Saratoga Springs; the Evening Transcript of St. Louis, has expired; the steamer Judgo McLane, has been snagged in the Ohio river; a deep snow fell in August on the white mountains of Canada; the latter end of the flood at New Orleans is now dangerously breaching through the levee; a map by the name of Clock drowned himself recently in Connecticut river, that clock has stopped of course; the abolitionists say, don't poll us nor clay us at the next election; the Lord has improved the "rapids" for the last six months, more than Congress can, during its existence, if it should continue to the age of Methuseleh,—plenty of water makes a river.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 4, 1844.

O Wisdom!—A Newspaper Editor is so much like every body, it takes some skill, and thought, and time, to find him out.

Alas! he writes and shines, & shines and writes, Just like a jack-o-lantern on the plain, And fame, so like the faint of a shay'd pig, With tail greas'd, slips through his hand like an eel.

And then he wonders why he luck is bad; A man of letters, news, and knowledge too, Not "squired" by ten thousand hearts of oak, That know the worth and want of mighty men! O could I been born with a silver spoon, So near one hand, that I could have entic'd A golden wedge with t'other—then I think, While lawyers roll in wealth (but never go To law themselves); and doctors, bless my stars,

Who puke, and purge, and bleed, and sweat, for life, Both old and young, (but never touch themselves), And leave grim death at last to claim his right, While they for "practice" claim a "dreadful bill."

That must be paid, 'Mo! 'a muly' good, I think, I think I'd let the people think, When they walk by themselves,

And talk by themselves, And themselves doth say, it is true; it is true; Beware of thy selves,

And take care of yourselves— The Doctor and Lawyer cares nothing for you!

Extra Maneuvre.—By the N. Y. Sun, we learn that Gen. James Arlington Bennett, of Arlington House, Long Island, has issued a "feeler" to the President of Texas, to know on what condition he may locate 5,000 troops in that nation, and signs himself, "James Arlington Bennett Inspector and Major General Nauvoo Legion."

In the first place, more than a year ago, Gen. Bennett sent his resignation to the Commander of the Legion, which was accepted by the Court Martial. In the next place there is no such officer in the Nauvoo Legion, as "Inspector and Major General." The only one that has any resemblance, is the "Adjutant and Inspector General," according to the revised laws of said Legion, and that is now, and always has been filled by Hugh M'Fall, a worthy citizen of Hancock county. We care not how many men are Generals, nor how many men fight for Texas, if they will let the Nauvoo Legion alone; that has nothing to do with Texas. Peace gentlemen!

Death.—H. A. Muhlenberg died suddenly of apoplexy in the city of Philadelphia, on the 10th ult. His death, being a candidate for Governor, by the democrats of Pa., will leave a "wako" to be closed by some less fortunate key stone.

The Democrats and Whigs.—When a hawk and a snake were once at war very ferociously, a spectator cried out;—Fight on no odds which beats; and really there seems to be no loss or gain in the predominance of either party now. They both despise each other like the parietes, omni and plebians—but what of it? Shallow water always shows the most bubbles.

Short Articles.—Canada is full of discontent; great earthquake along the shore of Connecticut; John Tyler has backed out as a candidate for the next Presidency; England is on the eve of receiving another "heir" apparent of the fourth magnitude, "to rule Britannia"; Col Stone of the "Commercial" died recently at Saratoga Springs; the Evening Transcript of St. Louis, has expired; the steamer Judgo McLane, has been snagged in the Ohio river; a deep snow

Negro Wit.—A large St. Louis Negro says, "wall Sam, I see you hab dat same ole whip saw, eh? O yes, Jim, I'zo a hos wid dat for any ting, I and do saw—boat hulls, weh-ah weh-ah! "Yes Sam" but dare is one saw mash you and youn all to pok a nut. I tink old Whellington must had im at Waterloo, and dey say dare be one up do river some where?—Why what you mean Jim? Why do you giv em up Sam? No—but what about de Whellington Saw? Wah Sapi, a meat saw—oh poh! you don't cum it on dis Nigger, Whellington never hab meat saw, dat was "wah-saw," wah eh wah-eh. Wah oh! dat be de wust saw on aith.

Elder Lyman Wight, last week, removed up the river, with a company of about 130 saints, to settle on government lands in Wisconsin Territory. He calculated to locate 60 or 80 miles above Prairie du chien.

Honorificabili inhabitantibusque.—A pretty long caption, but the nature of the case seems to justify it. For some time our foreign exchange papers, especially from London, have been discussing the merits of the practice of opening letters at the British General Post Office, in order to pry into other men's business, learn the secrets of other nations, and take a little advantage of the times. The French growl about the custom as unjust and unnatural; and if we are not mistaken, the plenipotentiaries, generally consider John Bull as fallen back upon a "reserved right" that disagrees with our caption, and the honor of all nations. The "London Chronicle," which may be looked upon as the Queen's mouth piece, among the various positions of the case, thus discourses:

"The committee may settle the difficulty by a simple statement of facts; for, as to the power of opening letters in special cases, a month seldom passes without applications being made to the Home office to stop the letters addressed to the families, or friends, of criminals, who have escaped from justice, in order to discover their hiding place, and to force a restitution of their plunder, which have been completed with, hitherto, by every Home Secretary, almost as a matter of course.

We do not say this power is indispensable, or right; but we say broadly that it has existed almost from time immemorial, and has been largely used. Every banking house knows it; we could name twenty commercial men who have told us that they have recovered large sums of money by the aid of the Post office, which has enabled them to trace fraudulent debtors, and fugitive clerks, when every other means had failed, and if the Home office warrants had been confined to this, we doubt whether we should ever have had a complaint.

But the peculiar odium, that attaches to this power in the hands of Sir James Graham, arises from the supposition that it has been unfairly used; that it has been employed by the Government, as a political weapon against the Chartists, and prostituted in the service of the Continental states; that the exception, in short, has become the rule; that letters have been opened without the plea of necessity, for the gratification of curiosity, or personal malignity; that no man's correspondence is safe. This it is that has excited the public mind, and produced a degree of interest and excitement, such as we have seldom witnessed upon any similar question; but this, Sir James Graham most peremptorily denies.

Nothing, certainly, could be broader, or bolder, than the way, in which he met the charge brought against him by Mr. Dancombe, on Tuesday, in a speech full of raciness, and happy hits. He should not have shrunk, he said, as the sworn servant of the crown, from any obloquy, that might attach to the discharge of his official duties, but when he saw ex-ministers, privy councillors, men who must have been perfectly aware both of the existence of the power, which they denounced in him, and of its constant application by themselves,—concurring in a vote of censure, intended to crush an individual, and to destroy a right, which he believed it to be essential to preserve, though it could not be too cautiously, or sparingly used,—he resolved, at once, with the concurrence of his colleagues, to call for a solemn, and searching inquiry into his own conduct, and that of his predecessors, pledging himself to show that he had done less than most of those, who had gone before him, and, nothing, that he was not perfectly justified in doing by established practice, as well as by law."

The article from which we extract, is characteristic of an Englishman—long under, still we cannot close without giving a piece of his mind on the Frenchman: "Le diable est aux racines"—viz:—

"We set aside all the nonsense, that has been talked by Monsieur Guizot, or written by his predecessors, about the sacredness of the soil in France, and the inviolability of correspondence. Every body knows that, whatever our talents, in this line, may be, we are but tyros in comparison with the rest of Europe. There is not a Post office upon the Continent, into which a diplomatic man, who has been three days out of leading strings, would not put a scrap of paper of any kind, that he was not ready to read in the market place; and when Monsieur Guizot admits that letters are sacred—in fact, as well as in Law," when Monsieur somebody else,—"quoted by Mr. Rebeck, pretends that it was the wish of his Imperial Majesty Napoleon, 'that the thoughts of Frenchmen should be free as their actions,' we denounce, the phrase as a piece of splendid humbug, which no human being, who has crossed the channel will believe."

Letters are opened by every Foreign government. Some do it more, some less, but all do it without scruple, whenever they have any thing to gain."

Riots.—In our foreign news will be found "riots in Bohemia." By other papers, we find that Canton in China, has been the scene of several violent "riots." An attempt has been made to murder the king of Prussia. "Riots" are renewing in Canada. And another "riot" in Pennsylvania, near Manayunk, has further disgraced that State, since the July number of flare ups. Where has the wisdom and virtue of the world fled to? Riots, riots, the whole earth is filled with "violence," as it was in the days of Noah. And what did the Saviour say it was a sign of?—The end!

To Honest men.—G. W. Westbrook, has published in St. Louis, a Pamphlet of 36 pages, entitled:—"The Mormons in Illinois; with an account of the late disturbances, which resulted in the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the Prophet and Patriarch of the Latter Day Saints." Mr. Westbrook, as he avows, is "no Mormon" takes a middle course, and so far as was in his power, gives facts and truth: His course is certainly meritorious; and his pamphlet can be circulated wherever Davis of Alton's "catch penny" of lies and apology for murder, lurks in its crimson cozening and black heraldry, it will have a weight of influence which an abused people greatly need.

We subjoin the following from his concluding paragraph:

"The conduct of the Missourians and Illinoisians towards the Mormons throughout has been brutal and detestable in the extreme—discovering the same spirit of intolerance and proscription that prevailed with our forefathers in their persecutions of the Quakers, and the burning of the witches of Salem—the same spirit that excited the Protestant against the Catholic, and vice versa, and deluged Europe in oceans of blood—the same spirit that impelled thousands of deluded and misguided zealots to brave the fatigue and privations of a pilgrimage over the rock-ribbed mountain Alps and the burning plains of Arabia, to drive the Infidel from the Holy Land, and thought they were doing God service—the same spirit that burned the convent in Boston, and fanned the flames of the abolition riots in almost every city in the United States; the same spirit that has so recently swept over Philadelphia like the burning sirocco, 'black suffocating and bloody'—a spirit that can only have its origin in ignorance, and be cherished and nourished until it is raised into a hideous devastating monster, by prejudice, superstition, and a constant appeal to the baser passions of our nature. This spirit is not the one instilled into the minds and hearts of his followers by our glorious Redeemer, of 'peace on earth, and good will among men; nor is it in accordance with that golden precept which says 'that you should do unto others as you would that others should do unto you.' There is a moral force and power in these simple precepts (the Constitution of the Divine Law-giver) that, when carried but into all the ramifications of society and of life will triumph over ignorance and prejudice, and selfishness, and mobocracy; and union, peace, order, and love will reign. Let us all then, strive in our daily walk, and in all our transactions and intercourse with our fellow men, ever to keep these golden precepts in view. I am not a Mormon, nor am I a member of any church, neither have I, to my knowledge, any prejudice against, or predilection for, any particular sect or denomination of religion; but I like to see equal liberty and equal justice to all. I have known many Mormons, and have been intimately acquainted with some of them since their first commencement as a religious sect: I have seen them at their homes and abroad, and I have ever found them ready and willing to discuss their peculiar doctrines freely, fairly, and peaceably; and I have never seen any thing like intolerance or proscription for the difference of opinions; and I believe that a large majority of the followers of the reputed prophet are as sincere in their faith, and as honest in their dealings with their fellow-men, as any other community of like numbers in our country."

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

We learn by an official report, that sales of the Public Lands for the last year, amounted to 1,639,674 acres, being an excess over the sales of the previous year of 540,476 acres. These sales, says the commissioner, have been the greatest in Missouri, Alabama, and Illinois; but to some extent have been very general—indicating at all points, increase of numbers, industry and enterprise. It was supposed that the demand for the public land during the past season, would have been considerably enhanced by the emigration from foreign countries; but it is not perceptible that such has been the case—being attributable, perhaps, to the fact that heavy investments of this character had been made by the capitalist when speculation was rife among our citizens, and who were constrained, by a change of the times, not only to enter into competition with the Government, but to sell at a price less than the minimum of the Government. The proceeds of sales for the first, second and third quarters of the year amount to $1,380,426.01; and, including a just estimate for the balance of the calendar year, will be $2,055,024,012—making an increase upon the proceeds of the preceding year of $637,092.05.

This increase would doubtless have been very much enlarged under the influence of existing pre-emption laws, which so justly favor the actual settler, the best lands produce nothing more than the minimum price of $1.25 per acre. Of the whole of the lands sold the present year, perhaps not more than two thousand acres have been sold at prices above this minimum.

Giant.—They are growing a giant at Coxsackie, in New York, who promises to overtop all competition in this country or Europe. His name is Nathan Lampman, and he is sixteen years old, weighing 198 pounds, standing at this time 7 feet 1 inch in height, and growing "like mad." He is described by Dr. Smith as "a great tall, awkward, good natured, sixteen year old boy." He is believed already to have the longest legs on the continent, and has actually grown nine inches the last year. He is an ambitious youth, and has a great desire to outgrow all creation; an aspiration quite likely to be reached; for he has good health and good habits. The Doctor thinks he will reach at least another foot, and on the whole we have a very good prospect of raising an "Empire Giant."

Entitled to a Premium.—On last Sunday the wife of a weaver named Carey, residing in Poplar street, Northern Liberties, was delivered of four children, three boys and one girl, all living and now doing well. One of the boys weighed 4 3/4 lb., another 5 1/2 lb., the other 5 lb., and the girl 4 3/4 lb. I am happy in having to say that they are all healthy and fine looking children, and from present appearances are likely to live. The mother is in high spirits.

Connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans.—The St. Augustine News of the 23d inst., says: By an arrival at Key West, a few days since, of a vessel from the Spanish Main, we learn that the French Government have been actively engaged for the last two months in laying rails, grading, and otherwise making other preparations for a steam conveyance from Porto Bello to Panama, thus connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and doing away for the present any interest upon cutting a canal at the Isthmus.

Sale of Indian Lands.—The sale of lands comprising a portion of the Buffalo Creek Reservation, acquired by the Ogden Land Company, commenced on the 14th inst. A considerable quantity was disposed of near the city bounds, ranging from $70 to $100 per acre.

A number of chiefs and head men of the Seneca nation, were present at the sale, who, by their counsel, protested against it, avowing their determination never to relinquish their premises until stern necessity compelled them.—Rev.

A Strange Fancy.—The following ludicrous circumstance took place in Falkirk, last week:

The parents of a child about six years of age, on ordering him to bed, were not a little nonplused by his answering "I'm no gann to my bed the night, for I deamed the 'streen that I was to sit on a stick and sleep like a hen." Persuasions and threats were all in vain, on a stick he would be; and willing to gratify what appeared to be a momentary notion, the parents in want of a proper bunk, proposed that the back of a chair should serve for his roost during the night. No sooner said than done, the child denuded himself of his clothes, hung them on the chair back, mounted his roost, and in a few minutes, to the surprise of all, was fast asleep. He was allowed to remain thus for some time, and on being awakened, it was only by working on his fears that he was ultimately induced to relinquish the bunk for a more comfortable nest.—Edinburgh Chronicle.

UNPARALLELED AND DREADFUL AFFRAY.

The Marion (Miss) paper contains the particulars of a most dreadful occurrence in that place. It says:

A Mr. Fisher had put up a brick yard near the town of Marion, on what he supposed public land; and after he had made a considerable quantity of bricks, ready for burning, it was discovered that the land belonged to some person in Georgia, who appointed a Mrs. Shumacher his agent. Mrs. S. ordered Fisher from the land, and refused to let him move the brick. She notified Fisher, in writing, that he must quit the premises, to which Fisher replied that he would die first, and proceeded to settle up his little matters. Mrs. Shumacher made her will. On the 6th instant, Fisher and his two sons, on one side; Mrs. Shumacher and her husband on the other, all heavily armed with guns and pistols, repaired to the "brick-yard." It seems that the Fishers arrived first, and on the arrival of the other party, the battle took place. It is said that Mr. Shumacher fired the first gun, which was succeeded by a general firing from both parties, in which Mrs. Shumacher was mortally, and Southey Fisher dangerously, wounded. Eight guns were fired, and two shot by Mrs. Shumacher herself; she lived about twelve or thirteen hours after received the wound, and expired. It is thought that Fisher will recover. Mr. Shumacher has been committed to the jail of this county.

CONVENIENCE OF A DISH KITTLE.—You want nothing of iron ware but a dish kittle, said an old housewife in the backwoods, to her daughter who had just got married. "Why, when your father and I commenced, I had nothing but a dish kittle. I used to boil my coffee in it and pour that into a pitcher; then boiled my potatoes in it and set them on a warm plate, while I stewed up the meat in it. I used to milk in it—and always after a meal I fed the pigs out of the dish kittle." You can do a great deal with a dish kittle, Sally, if you are only a mind to."

THE FIRST STEAM BOAT.—She excited the astonishment of the inhabitants on the shore of the Hudson, many of whom had never heard of an engine, much less of a steam boat. She was described by some, who had distinctly seen her pass in the night, as a monster moving on the waters, defying the tide, and breathing flames and smoke. Her volumes of smoke and fire, by night, attracted the attention of the crews of other vessels. Notwithstanding the wind and tide were adverse to its progress, they saw, with astonishment, that it was rapidly approaching them; and when it came so near that the noise of the machinery and paddles was heard, the crew, in some instances, sunk beneath the deck from the terrific sight, and left their vessels to go on shore, while others prostrated themselves, and besought Providence to protect them from the approaching horrible monster, which was marching on the tides, and lighting its path by the fire it vomited! All this took place, not in regions explored by 'Sinbad, the Sailor,' but on the river Hudson, thirty-seven years ago.

Tincher Documents.—A gold watch was taken from Tincher, the Cincinnati counterfeiter after his arrest, marked as follows, presented to A. Morgan by Mrs. Hewitt. In memory of his cousin, Chas. Grant Hewitt. A letter was found on his table to a man in Hosiery land, requesting him to come to the city and speculate in counterfeit money, which he said had been got up in first rate style. The letter was all ready for mailing. Another letter was in the house, from a man in the New Orleans City Prison, stating that a fellow there had turned States evidence, and revealed the names of all the counterfeiters in the United States, and his Tincher's, among the rest. Some names mentioned in this letter, says the Commercial, will lead, it is expected to the arrest of certain men in high places, both in the west and in New York city—men who are now above suspicion.

Cultivation of the strawberry.

The usual time for transplanting strawberry plants is August. That time is chosen because they have then done bearing. Buds set out in August will bear fruit next summer. The ground should be well prepared. The plants should be trimmed and set in rows fifteen inches apart. The plants should be kept free from weeds and well watered until they commence a new growth. Moss or oak leaves laid between the rows in the spring will keep the ground moist and improve the fruit. Should the frosts in the spring throw the plants out of the ground, they can be pressed into the earth again by the foot.

The soil proper for the common variety of strawberry, as well as all others, is light, warm, and gravelly; and the manure to be applied should be exclusively vegetable, and not animal manure. The usual practice is to manure the ground with rotten dung, with a view to increase the size and quantity of the fruit; but in doing this the flavor of the fruit is destroyed in proportion to the richness of the soil. Besides, high manuring produces strong vines and little fruit. Rotten leaves, decayed wood, ashes, in small quantity, mixed with other vegetable substances in a compost heap, will make better manure for strawberries than any animal substance whatever.

Queen Victoria at the Opera.—A grand fete was in preparation at the Opera. Since 1834 nothing of the sort had taken place. Queen Victoria was to be present in her state box and state costume surrounded by the highest nobility of her court. I had great difficulty in procuring a ticket of admission, for on this occasion a stall cost six guineas, and boxes were let as high as thirty guineas. Three boxes near the stage, thrown into one, and lined with blue satin and crimson velvet, and silver fringe, besides being profusely ornamented with gold and surmounted with trophies, awaited the youthful sovereign. Two men at arms in the costume of the middle ages, with tall halberds, stood upright beneath the royal box, of which they seemed to be the pillars, so statue-like and in movable did they appear. At half-past seven the Queen made her entrance; she wore a magnificent tunic of diamonds, and her blue dress glittered with precious stones.

Prince Albert, in a scarlet uniform, accompanied her Majesty; the ladies in waiting wore the Duchess of Buccleuch and the Countess of Dunmore. Behind them I remarked the Earl of Jersey and Lord Edward Bruce. The curtain rose immediately, and on the stage, at the back of which was an immense scene representing the Queen crowned by divers allegorical figures, Lablache, at the head of the entire Italian company, commenced "God save the Queen!" The theatre rang with shouts of applause, which her Majesty repeatedly acknowledged with infinite grace.

Phenomena at the Grandes Mulets.—The Grandes Mulets are two rocks which project from the Glacier des Bossons, whose summits are so pointed and their sides so perpendicular that the snow does not rest upon them. Here we halted for the night. They had loaded a cannon in the valley previous to our departure, and were to discharge it when they saw us (through their telescope) arrive at this point. (Grandes Mulets,) which they did, but neither myself nor the guides heard the report, although some of our guides said they saw the smoke. I had taken up with me six old pigeons, the strongest and shiest I could find in the pigeon house of the hotel, and now determined to let two of them off from the rock, the time being marked on a small piece of parchment, and attached by a string to one leg. I had desired the landlord to note the time when the pigeons made their appearance at Chamoni. I then tossed one of them a few feet in the air, that he might see to take his direction, when, to my surprise, he fluttered a little, and came down nearly as rapidly as I had thrown him up. When we then attempted to catch him, he endeavored to fly; but, being unable to rise, he fluttered about, ran with his wings extended a few yards, and was easily taken. I presumed he might have been injured by the confinement in the basket, and so I made the same experiment with three others, the result being the same; proving that the rarity of the air was too great for their supporting themselves. But the next day, in descending, we let them off about half way down, between the Grandes Mulets and the upper point of vegetation, and they took their courses for Chamoni, and were, doubtless, safely at home long before we reached the perpetual snow line. [Prof. Silliman.]

Postage Opposition Meeting.—The citizens of Lockport have held a large meeting to take into consideration the subject of the interference of the General Post office Department with the transmission of letters by Express mails. A series of resolutions were reported to the effect that the persons composing the meeting will, "one and all, send our letters by express to all such points as they will reach, and instruct our correspondents abroad to send us through the same medium; and that we will not, while these abuses continue, take letters from the mail sent to us from any of the points reached by the express, except in cases where we have good reason to think we will materially suffer in our interests by the omission." [Miss. Repub.]

Destructive Storm.—Lyons, and its environs, in France, was visited on the night of the 24th of Jan., by a storm of extraordinary violence. The rain fell in torrents, and the hail was so large that in several houses nearly all the windows were broken. In and near the Palace Louis XVIII., several trees were broken down, and more than three hundred birds, which were killed by the hail, were found on the ground next morning. In the Faubourg de la Croix Rousse, the damage was very great, and some buildings are said to have been destroyed by the wind and rain.

A good book and a good woman, are excellent things to those who know how to justly appreciate their value; but there are many who judge of both only by their covering.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

R. FOSTER, is now prepared to take LIKENESSES, by the Daguerreotype process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or colored, at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Ivin's Store. By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other method which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of an optical instrument. Only two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotype) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one, upon first beholding the effects of the art; and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature shown up in her every lineament and feature and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend!

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, and at the Nauvoo Mansion; Price only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case.

Instructions in the Art, given upon reasonable terms, and Apparatus for sale. Aug. 10-1f

TO THE FARMERS AROUND NAUVOO AND VICINITY.

THOSE brethren who want to exchange their grain, pork, beef, potatoes &c., for property, wearing apparel &c., would do well to give the Temple committee a call. They would be glad to exchange any kind of property in their hands for grain, inasmuch as provisions are most wanted to carry on the works.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail! Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

POETRY.

LINES.

BY MRS. AMELIA B. WELBY.

Oh, for the bright and glad hours,
When like a wandering stream,
My spirit caught from earth and sky
The light of every beam;
When, if into my laughing eye
A tear drop chance to start, Tears banished in a moment by
The sunshine of the heart.

When musing on the happy past,
The first spring time of life,
When every tone of wind and wave
With melody was rife;
When all youth's hopes and promises,
Those rainbow's of my sky,
Danced forth in fairy visions
Before my wandering eye.

My heart is with the leaping rills,
That murmur round the home,
Where first my lips were taught to speak;
My feet to roam;
The sweet songs of happy birds,
The whispering wind-voiced breeze
That caught the faint breath of the rose,
And waved among the trees.

How many mournful memories
Steal gently through the mind,
Like spirit voices borne along
Upon the wandering wind;
And, as thought leads me back again,
I must seem to trace
In each sweet flower, and shrub, and tree,
Some fond, familiar face.

'Tis thought, because I smile on all,
That I am vain and gay—
That, by the world's light flattery,
I might be loved away;
They know not that my heart oft breathes
Its fragrance out in sighs
That sad songs tremble on my lips,
And tears within my eyes.

My thoughts are as pure and sweet,
As when I was a child,
And all my bright imaginings
Are just as free and wild;
And were it not for one bright link,
With an affliction's chain,
I'd wish to wander to that spot,
And be a child again.

THE LOST DARLING.

BY MRS. HIGGINNEY.

She was my idol—night and day to scan
The fine expansion of her form, and mark
The fine lining mind like velvet rose-bud start
To sudden beauty, was my chief delight
To find her fairy foot-steps following me,
Her hands upon my garments, or her lip Close sealed to mine—and in the watch of night.

The quiet breath of innocence to feel
Soft on my cheek, was such a full content
Of happiness, no one but mothers know—
Her voice was like some tiny harp that yields
To the slight-fingered breeze, and as it held Brief converse with her doll, or kindly soothed
Her moaning kitten, or with patient care
Counseled of the alphabet, but most of all
In tender cadence in her evening prayers, Tari'd on the ear like some ethereal tone,
Heard in sweet dreams. But now alone I sit,
Musing of her, and dew with woman's pride
The little robes, that once with woman's pride
I wrought—as if there were a need to deck
A being formed so beautiful. I start, Half-fancied from her empty crib there comes A restless sound, and breathe the accustomed words:

"Hush, hush, Louisa, dearest!" then I weep,
As though it were a sin to speak to one Whose home is with the Angels.
—Gone to God!

And yet I wish I had not seen the pang
That wrung her features,—nor the ghostly white
Setting around her lips.—I would that heaven
Had taken its own, like some transplanted flower,
In its bloom and freshness.

Gone to God!
Be still my heart!—What could a mother's prayer
In all the wildest ecstasy of hope,
Ask for its darling, like the bliss of Heaven?

WOMAN'S CHIEF ATTRACTION.

BY LONGFELLOW.

What I most prize in woman
Is her affection—not her intellect.
Compare me with the great men of the earth:
What am I? What a pigmy among giants!
But if thou lovest—mark me, I say I love—
The greatest of thy sex excels thee not!
The world of affection is thy world—
Not that of man's ambition. In that stillness

Which most becomes a woman—calm and holo—
Thou sittest by the fireside of the heart, Feeding its flame. The element of fire
Is pure. It cannot change its nature;
But burns as brightly in a giddy camp
As in a Palace hall.

ESCAPE OF CAPTAIN PETIT.

The expedition of Sentman, however condemned for its ill-considered and fool-hardy character, yet, from its instan-taneous and terrible catastrophe, and the revolving barbarity of Santa Anna's instrument, Ampudia, takes a strong hold upon our sympathies. Captain Petit, the commander of the vessel which carried the ill-starred band to their fate, and whose escape was little less than miraculous, has furnished the editor of the Courier des Etats Unis with a narrative of the circumstances attending it. It is a story of daring and of peril, seldom equalled, and we have prepared a sketch of it for our readers.

Sentman was betrayed by his own Secretary, one Juan Messa, and after a single interrogatory, was shot. Petit had he says, received the General and his companions merely as passengers, and was furnished with regular papers, but in the confusion of landing, under the fires of the two Mexican armies, they became mislaid, and he himself, only followed Sentman ashore to see if the latter had them not. Not finding them, he made his way with much difficulty to Sancti Spiritus, and was received at the house of an acquaintance, a Creole of New Orleans, one Jules Mazange, who, on the arrival of the Mexican officer in pursuit, first concealed his guest, but afterwards, probably becoming alarmed by a false story of pardon, &c., betrayed him into the hands of the enemy, by whom he was conveyed to Tobasco, and thrown into a cell. After an examination, he was ordered to be shot on the next morning at six o'clock, and placed in a chupelle that is to say, in a cell where was a lighted altar, &c. Within two hours of the time, his friends, some merchant of the place, arrived to say, that they had prevailed on Ampudia to grant a short respite, and he was reconducted to his dungeon, situated curiously in a very building formerly occupied by Sentman as his residence. Here he remained three days, when, on the 3d of July, he was again ordered to be shot, at six the next morning, released from his chains, and placed in a chupelle, as before.

As the clock struck two, the Captain says, that he was fired by a sudden inspiration, a ray of hope! He threw himself before the altar, prayed, and arose full of energy. Two doors, unfastened, but guarded by twelve men, a sergeant and a captain separated him from the street. At three, he called the officer, who approached, sword in hand, and being asked the hour of execution, answered "six o'clock." Ere he had finished, Petit darted by, like a flash. "Fire!"
cried the Captain; but Petit was already out of the building. The balls whistled around without touching him, and he dashed onward in the dark, for nearly an hour, falling twice, but hardly checked in his speed, when he stopped at the river, exhausted, bathed in sweat, but full of courage. Dressed simply in a shirt and pantaloons, the latter tied round his waist he plunged into the river, but in the middle of the stream, faint with exertion, and embarrassed by his nether garment, he nearly yielded, when again rousing himself, after many efforts, he succeeded in untying his girdle, struggled to the bank, and crawled ashore naked; whence, after half an hour, he was able to dry himself in among the bushes and bamboos, lacerating his flesh, and his whole body covered by venomous insects.
There he remained, in a sort of hole, all that day and the following night, venturing only to the river when driven there by intolerable thirst. From his retreat, he heard voices at a great distance, and at night, in a violent storm, creeping forth, he came in the neighborhood of some Indian cabins, the lightning discovering to him two canoes, of which he took the smaller, and paddled with his hands into the stream. The wind, though, was so violent, that at three in the morning, six hours, he had made but two miles. Arrived at the mouth of a small stream, he left his canoe, crossed some fields of cane, and in two hours found himself again near Tobasco. Completely worn out, his body but one sore, he fell at the foot of a tree, where he remained three days. On the third day, the American brig Ontario, of New York passed, to which he made signals, at first feigned to be unnoticed, but at length the pilot asked if he was not Capt. Petit, and he not daring to answer, the vessel pissed on. Quite desperate, he sprang into the water and endeavored to reach her, when seeing his determination, they sent him a canoe. The pilot had heard of his escape, and recognized him. They clothed and gave him nourishment—he had been six days without food—but the Captain declared his inability to protect him, and only at the price of a draft for two hundred dollars on Tobasco, to be divided between himself and crew, did he consent to let the fugitive have a canoe and two hands to take him to the bar at the mouth of the river. They took him some distance through the night, but day returning he concealed himself on shore, t being agreed that the men should return for him at dark; but they came no more; and here he remained four days, in a greater degree than ever, a prey to hunger, his feebleness extreme, but possessing in his own words, tojours bon courage. Four biscuits was all he had received for his two hundred dollars.

About a mile off on the opposite bank he perceived an Indian hut, and in the hope of finding a canoe, he stripped, and fastening on his head merely his shirt, and the bowie knife given him by the Captain of the brig, he swam across.
There was no canoe there, but a little lower down he found one, which he managed all right with the aid of a bamboo, making nine miles, and leaving but four and a half to go, to reach the bar.
Day breaking he landed, and had scarcely concealed himself, or he heard the sound of horses, and Ampudia himself puffed with his stilt, on their way to embark at Frontera, for Vera Cruz. Towards evening he resumed his route, but on turning a neck of land, he met Ampudia's escort returning. He landed, and they called to him, probably supposing him, however, to be an Indian, no pursuit was made.
Once more he set forth, but encountering a schooner within two miles of Fron-tera, he again landed. Finally he reached the bar, where the vessels ready to sail make their last stay, but there was not one there! Re-ascending to Frontera, he hailed a barque bound for Holland, the Captain of which was fast asleep. The watch would not disturb him, but climbing the side, Petit descended to the cabin himself, so somewhat alarming the commander by his wild appearance. Here he learned that the American Consul was a ball-giver that very night to Ampudia, but the Hollander enabled him to reach an American brig nearly ready for sea, the Captain of which as it turned out, it was at the bar also. The mistake a message ashore and returned with orders from the commander and the Consul to conceal the fugitive, as the Consul could do nothing for him in his official capacity. However, he used his influence to hasten the departure of the vessel, and the next day, Petit saw lessening in the distance that land where already had been dug his grave.

MODE OF KILLING THE LION IN KORDOFAN.

They trace out the lair where one of these animals generally takes its noonday repose; but the nature of the ground must be such that the tree under which it sleeps is isolated, or at least some-what distant from the other trees. If the ground be advantageous, the negroes take themselves to the scene of action four hours before mid day, and climb the tree opposite to that under which the animal takes his nap. During this time he knows the lion to be out in search of prey, and is sure that he will return to indulge in his siesta when the heat increases, between ten and eleven o'clock.
The lion does not trouble himself about the business of the man on the tree, even if he should happen to see him; and his adversary remains perfectly quiet till between twelve and one. The huntsman is furnished with a sackful of small stones and a few sharp spears. When the sand on the ground is burning hot, so that the animal's cannot even walk about, he hunter begins to pelt the lion with stones, always aiming at his head, and the negroes are very expert marksmen.
The proud king of the beasts utterly disregards the first three or four stones, and does not consider it even worth his while to rise; but the blows upon his head thickening, and being perhaps, in the eye, the audacity appears too great to be borne with patience, and he sets up a frightful roar as a signal of revenge.
With one leap he is at the foot of the tree on which the disturber of his rest is perched, and receives a lance in his body.
his roar now becomes more terrific, not that the wound is so irritating to him at this moment as the burning sand is painful to his feet, and he retires once more to his lair. Another stone hits him, he becomes furious, makes a second charge at the tree, and is welcomed by one, two or more spears. He now takes to flight, velling and howling with pain; but the loss of blood soon exhausts his strength, and the huntsman, who keeps him in sight from the tree has in a very short time, the pleasure of seeing the royal beast stretch its carcass on the plains.

The number of lions in this province is not very considerable, but they frequently enter villages for prey, and carry away a head of cattle before their visit is even suspected. In the day time they are neither heard nor seen, for they generally lie crouching in a dense covert or sleeping beneath a shady tree. But early in the morning, as soon as the sun begins to cast its rays on the sandy bil-lows of the desert, the royal animal rises from his lair in quest of prey. His voice may then be heard in the distance; it commences with a low murmuring, which gradually increases, until at last it becomes a fearful and terrific roar. Like the roaring of thunder, and is audible at a distance of two miles. The whole animal kingdom trembles, and evinces the greatest fear when the king of the beasts is near; the sheep tremble as if attacked with ague, place their heads together, and endeavour to hide themselves; the horses break out into a sweat with fear; and the dogs hurry away as fast as they can to find a place of refuge. In fine all the beasts are seized with the most unequivocal terror when the lion makes his approach known. Should a caravan happen to be near the spot it is impossible to keep the camels together, they leap about in all directions, and are scattered abroad under the influence of fear; I myself once had the opportunity of witnessing a scene of this kind. On arriving in my travels at the wells of Sonmeria, we suddenly heard a murmuring noise near, resembling the rolling of balls in an empty barrel, but we were soon acquainted with its true cause when it gradually increased to that thunder-like roar.

With the first perception of this noise,
the camels belonging to our caravan suddenly took fright and instantly separated in all directions. The men and the cases were thrown off, and if one of the riders happened to keep his seat at the first assault, he was subsequently necessitated to leap down to avoid being felled by the branches of the trees; for we were unfortunately near a forest of mimosa, and every one was in danger of being torn by their large spikes. This confusion, however did not last long, for the lion took quite an opposite direction to the route of our caravan, but a whole day was lost in collecting the goods, that had been thrown off, or torn down by the trees, and one of the camels strayed to a great distance. — [Pallme's Travels

A COMMERCIAL TOWN IN EAS- TERN AFRICA.

In some localities, cities, and flourishing empires, may be said to exhibit a sort of phenomenal existence, the duration of which is measured by the actual presence of the trade that gives them birth.
At Berbera, for example, throughout a considerable portion of the year, the traveler, who changes to land or arrive there discovers nothing but some eighteen hundred or two thousand empty huts, between which the prowling hyenas or jackals in troops scour and howl by night. Man seems to have abandoned the place forever. The port is as destitute of shipping as the town of inhabitants. On a certain day, however, fixed and known to the disciples of trade, a few white sails appear in the offing, approaching the desolate and deserted shore; and, on land, probably at an equal distance, clouds of dust spreading and surging up into the atmosphere, announce the approach of what might easily be mistaken for an army. Long strings of camels, mules, and asses, heavily laden, and escorted by warriors on horseback, with matchlock lance, and shield, emerge from beneath these clouds and make towards the silent straggled in a few minutes doors fly open, tents are pitched, fires are kindled, life of every kind abounds, and Berbera is transformed into a populous city. And what a population! There is scarcely, perhaps, a single people or tribe dwelling within a thousand miles of the spot, which has not its commercial representative at Berbera.
There you behold the Benjan from India, peering forth cunningly between piles of rich goods; the Persian with shawls from Kerman and turquoises from the neighborhood of the Caspian sea; the natives of Mesopotamia, and Oman, and Hadramut and Yemen, and the H-iz with whatever commodities the soil of Arabia produces; the Egyptian, the Nubian, the Aby-sinian, the Dankah, the natives of Susa, Enavi, Kaffa, Kambat and Zenger; the Hurruri, the Isah, and the Somanli, all surrounded by the productions and merchandise of their respective countries.
The whole of this multitudinous assembling brought together and pervaded by the spirit of gain, is engaged from morning till night in excessive turmoil and wrangling. Honesty, moreover, is a rare visitor among them. Each endeavors to over-reach the other, high words arise, quarrels spring up, blows are given and returned, lances flourish and cresces drawn, and here and there a pool of Mussulman or Pagan blood tells of the way in which bargains are sometimes concluded by these rough customers.—
All the dialects and jilions of Babel pass current there, each man screaming at the top of his voice, in order to make himself heard amid the indescribable din, created partly by human tongues partly by the neighing of horses, the strange grunting of the camel, the bellowing of oxen, and the braying of asses. Dogs, too, of every size and species, lean, hungry, savage and without manners, prowl about the pur-lous of the mart in search of offal, howling and barking to augment the concord of sweet sounds that denotes the wherea-abouts of the devotees of commerce.—*For-

RICHESS OF ANCIENT PERU.

That the tales of the vaunted riches of ancient Peru were by no means without a good foundation, a single proof will be given on the undeniable evidence of an official document, extant in the archives of Cuzco, which I had copied in the year 1835, when I happened to be in command at that place. It appears, that in 1514, a year or two after Pizarro first entered Cuzco, he went to Xanxi, and during his absence, forty of his influential companions in arms, whom he had left behind, commenced a general ransack for the gold and silver that still remained in possession of, or was concealed by, the aboriginal nobility or wealthy classes in that place, under the pretext that a conspiracy was on foot. In the course of this operation, the Spaniards encountered an un-wonted resistance, which gradually increased, until the Peruvians became, in turn, the assailants; whereupon the marauders shut themselves up with the booty already collected, in the fortress within the city. Here they were sorely pressed by numbers and on the point of succumbing when, according to legendary records, they were saved by "Our Lady of Belim," who descended in a cloud; and hence the popularity of her image down to the present day. The more probable version of the miracle is, that a detachment of Spaniards approached in a cloud of dust to the rescue of their beleaguered comrades. Be this as it may, the forty rescued, and completed the general pillage; but, to counteract the unfavorable impression which the absent Pizarro's report of the transaction might produce on the court of Madrid, the plunderers drew up and signed an act, which I have read presenting Charles V. with 300,000 gold pesos, and 300,000 silver marks, worth altogether, perhaps, half a million sterling in the money of that day. How much each of the forty received of the residue, or how much Pizarro's proprietary share amounted to, is not known; neither can it ever be fully explained how the widely spread wealth of a proverbially rich country was absorbed by an inventive tyranny, which neither slumbered nor relaxed in the course of the ensuing three hundred years.—Frazer's Magazine.

THE GUELPHS AND GHIBELINES.

The names which in Germany only conveyed the idea of a family quarrel, signified in Italy, from the first, a much more serious affair. In the eyes of all, the Guelphs were the defenders of the priesthood; the Ghibelines were the defenders of the empire. But this was only the surface of things; at the bottom, Ghibelism was feudality,—the nobles;—
Guelphism was the community, the people. If it supported the Pope it was because the Pope supported it. The people triumphed,—the community established itself irrevocably free and equal, the noblesse were almost every where completely put down. Feudality became thereforeforth impossible. From military genius, or by the riches of individuals, noble families might remain influential.— They might covet, even obtain supreme power in some of the towns; but as a body, as a caste, the nobility were completely effaced. That question set at rest the people, the conquerors, stood embarrassed with their victory.

The time was not yet come to found Italian unity on a popular principle; the dying of the day, for the gathering together in one of all the people whose different races had crossed and mingled with one another in Italy, had not yet arisen.
A kind of anarchy, therefore, began, in the absence of one governing principle, single and strong enough to bear down all fractional and personal aims, all local egotisms. Whilst twenty republics made savage war upon each other within the bosom of the Peninsula, within the bosom of each republic, general ideas gave place to interests; belief gave place to passion;
questions of principle to human quarrels.
All parties experienced, in consequence, a series of modifications, which became still more complicated owing to the interference of the French, who were called in by the popes (whose fatal policy it always was to keep one foreign power in check by means of another, without ever appealing to the Italian nation).—Foreign Quarterly Review.

CATHOLIC MISSIONARIES IN OREGON TERRITORY.

The last number of the Ami de la Religion, which was received by the Britannia, states, that seven female Roman Catholic Missionaries were at once embarked for this country, with intention of settling at a small colony in Oregon, in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company.
This colony bears the name of Williamette, and is composed of Canadians and Roman Catholic Indians. The Pope has already appointed a bishop of the whole territory, with the title of the Bishop of Philadelphia, et in partibus infidelium.—On board the same vessel are to come Father de Smet, with his company of priests and settlers, and Father de Vereuys, of the College of Peace, both of whom come on a mission to the Flathead Indians.

Both these ecclesiastics, with their trains, bring with them all the implements and materials for colonizing, and for manufacturing. Houses and mills are to be erected, and permanent settlements begun with religious designs, are at once to be occupied.— Phil. Chronicle.

Private Posts.—The discussion of the eastern private mail affairs, grows quite interesting. The press, to a great degree, condemns the Post-Master-General for his course in attempting to stop them by prosecutions.—
One thing is quite certain, the enterprising Yankees, who have the matter in hand, deliver their letters an hour before Uncle Sam's fat officers.
They are stopped, every day or two,
by the Deputy Marshals, but do not stay stopped, and there does not appear to be any way by which the government can effect that object.

The Landing at "Wolfe's Cove," the Night before the "Siege of Quebec."
Swiftly, but silently, did the boats fall down with the tide, unobserved by the enemy's sentinels, who were—or who should have been—at their posts along the shore. Of the soldiers on board, how eagerly must every heart have throbbed at the coming conflict; how intently must every eye have contemplated the dark outline, as it lay penciled along the midnight sky—and as every moment it grew closer and clearer; of the hostile heights I Not a word was spoken, not a sound was heard beyond the rippling of the stream.
Wolfe alone—this tradition has told us;
repeated in a low voice to the other officers in his boat those beautiful stanza with which a country Church yard inspired the muse of Gray. One noble line—
"The paths of glory, lead but to the Grave."—must have seemed at such a moment fraught with mournful meaning.
At the close of the recitation Wolfe added: "Now, Gentlemen, I would rather be the author of it than take Quebec!"—Lord Mahon's History of England.—[Related by Professor Robinson of Edinburgh, who in his youth, had been a midshipman, and was in the boat with Wolfe.]

JOKE, OR NO JOKE.

Some days ago, a man and his wife, residing in the Blackhawk Road, between whom the "green-eyed monster" had thrust the apple of discord, hid a "fall out" regarding a certain "Lothario" in the neighborhood, whose visits were, upon the whole, more free than welcome;
but to test the accuracy of his suspicions, the Benedict at length threw himself upon the bed in an apparent state of utterly helpless inebriety, under a royal salute of Billingsgate from his better half. Betrunking herself that she might now with impunity put her oft-repeated threat of "doing" him into execution, she affixed a tolerably strong cord to his neck, blinded the window, passed the cord out of it, secured the door, went to the garden, commenced pulling with all her "might and main." Not many minutes elapsed, when the intended victim slipped the cord from his neck and fastened it to the bolster, and when the pull commenced a stout resistance ensued. After pulling some time, he began to slacken, and ultimately ceased resisting, which convinced the female operator that the work of strangulation was completed. While coming from the garden to the house, the man adroitly lifted the cord from the bolster to his neck, and there he lay, with open eyes and mouth, motionless. A hue and cry was instantly raised by the woman that her husband had hang't himself—the neighbors gathered speedily in crowds, and among them the cause of the whole,
who was specially sent for; and loud were the lamentations of the whole. At his own time, the hanged man resuscitated himself, showed the blister half-wrenched through to the astonished assembly, explained the whole, and concluded the farce with giving the guilty pair a deservedly hearty drubbing, and turning them to the door.—Dundee Cour.

Warning to Tobacco Chewers.—A gentleman of North Springfield, Massachusetts, a short time since, fell a-leap with a large quid of Maryland's best Cavendish in his mouth. He soon began to dream, and imagined himself at an oyster supper, and swallowed the tobacco. In a few minutes he fell into strong convulsions, and died in a very short time. He leaves a sweet wife and eleven innocent babes to mourn his loss. When will men give up the use of this licentious and poisonous weed?

These particulars are given by a Reading paper. The story is a little fishy.

GLEANINGS.

Good Physic.—The late Joseph Physic, of Newbern, N. C., set free twenty-one slaves at his death, which were lately shipped from that port for Philadelphia in accordance with the laws of that state.

Hot toast.—The following was given at a public celebration at St. Matthews' Parish, S. C.

By C. W. Lewis.—Southern rights, and Southern wrongs.—The day is near at hand, when it will be necessary to maintain the one and defend the other, with gunpowder and ball. "Southerners are you ready? Ay, we answer that embodied spirit and essential idea of hell. John Quincy Adams, we are ready, and "let it come."

Come to life, with a wife.—The Ohio papers noticed some weeks ago, the mysterious disappearance of a Mr. Wait from Cleveland, Ohio, and the search that was made for his body in the bottom of the river, where it was described to be by a young woman in a magnetic sleep. It appears, that instead of being butchered, barreled and sunk in the river, that Mr. Wait, aforesaid, not long after his mysterious disappearance, made his bodily appearance in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and eloped with the wife of a former neighbor of his at Chagrin Falls, now a resident of Wisconsin.

Massachusetts Hospital.—The Trustees of the Boston Hospital recently wanted $50,000, to enlarge their institution. The sum of $62,550 was promptly contributed; of which more than $40,000 was from citizens of Boston. There were six contributors of $2,000 each, nineteen of $1,000 each, and thirty-three of $500 each. The remainder in smaller sums.

Rats.—If they are troublesome, sprinkle unslacked lime in their holes, and about where they congregate, and they will depart without fail. This is more simple than a trap.

A sign of justice.—The Baltimore Patriot says: "About 800 bales dew rotted Hemp has been sold in New York for shipment to England at $100 per ton—freight 1-4d. The better qualities have advanced $10 per ton, and the inferior qualities $5, and holders firm."

Burnt to death.—An intoxicated man, named George Westley, was burnt to death in a barn in Cato, New York, a few days ago. He had matches in his pocket, which ignited, set fire to the hay, and burnt the barn and himself.

Smuggling.—Nine bales of raw silk were seized at New York, on the 22d, having been shipped on board the packet Sheridan from Liverpool, without being invoiced.

Revenue at New York.—The amount of duties collected at the port of New York, from the 1st to the 20th of August, was $2,240,000. During the same period, the value of goods paying duty, and imported, was $5,690,000; of free goods, $480,000. Total of goods, $6,070,000. In the same time, there was $17,500 in specie imported. The Express says that the proceeds of five foreign vessels, all supposed to have large cargoes of dutiable goods, would be added to this amount in that and the coming week. At this rate, the income from customs alone during the calendar year, will reach thirty millions of dollars.

A hole in the North.—We learn from the Green Bay Republican, that a tremendous hurricane has done great injury at that place and its vicinity. Houses were unroofed and dams and bridges everywhere swept away. Loss estimated at 20,000.

A big negro.—In Hartford they are showing a negro girl fourteen years of age, "whose weight is five hundred lbs with arms as big as a man's body, waist like a wash tub, shoulders like a barn door, a lump of solid fat between them of the size of a tin pail."

Men of blood.—A fight took place recently, in the vicinity of the West Ward Hotel, Mobile, between two butchers. One was wounded severely and conveyed to the hospital. It is not often that butchers exercise their art upon each other.

A shower of frogs.—In the course of the afternoon of Monday last, during the prevalence of rather heavy rain, the good people of Shelby were astonished at a rather remarkable phenomenon. It was rendered forcibly apparent that, with the descent of the rain, there was a shower of another description, viz: a shower of frogs. The truth of this was rendered more manifest by the circumstance that several of the frogs were caught in their descent by holding out hats for that purpose. They were about the size of a horse bean, and remarkably lively after their aerial but wingless flight. The same phenomenon was observed in the immediate neighborhood. —Leeds Mercury.

Texian Prisoners.—The Picayune has been put in possession of communications from Texian prisoners, confined at San Juan d'Ulloa, and in the castle of Perote. Their situation is melancholy enough more especially so is the lot of these Perote. The prisoners at each place seem to look upon themselves as abandoned to their fate by their own government and given over and forgotten by their friends. At San Juan d'Ulloa, the fate of the prisoners is represented as meagre in the extreme for able bodied men, but the treatment they receive otherwise, from the Mexican officers, is altogether humane. At Perote it is not so. A gentleman from Mexico, says, that there are now 111 of them in that place, and that only 8, a portion of the 10 who escaped from the castle some months since, were in chains.

A Banner Hen.—An agricultural paper says of a hen of a certain breed, that she laid 160 eggs daily in succession.

Long Cloth.—There is a manufacturer in Putney who has lately got an order for eight miles and a quarter of cloth. He has already executed a few miles of the order. —Leeds Mercury.

Origin of the Scarlet Military Coat.—It was the custom of the Spartans to use scarlet for their military dresses, to prevent the sight of their blood from operating as an encouragement to the enemy.

The Mayor is doing a good business in making two persons one; converting the singular into the plural; in other words marrying loving men and women. His honor's terms are very reasonable; three shillings, invariably paid in advance, all sorts of money taken except red dog and bogus. —Noah's Messenger.

Spanish Quarters.—Spanish quarters are not received in Bank, they are refused at the Post Office, will not pass in the Land Office, and we observe that auctioneers now give notice that they will not be received by them at par. These refusals indicate that these coins will soon go out of circulation, or if they pass at all, will pass for twenty cents. It is desirable to substitute our own American coins for these foreign coins, and if we can effect a reform in the rates of postage, we think that these old foreign coins will disappear. Our own decimal coins are much more convenient. —Bra-

LATER FROM TEXAS.

By the arrival of the Rover, from Galveston, we have received the Galveston Weekly News of the 3d instant.

The only news we can gather is that the yellow fever has been prevailing to a considerable extent in Galveston for some time past.

Among the deaths we notice that of A. M. Green, Esq., U. S. Consul at Galveston, who died on the 28th ult., and of Mr. Richard Drake Sebring, late editor of the News. Mr. Sebring was a native of Seneca county, New York, in reference to the prevailing sickness, the News says:—

"The deaths since the sickness commenced have probably not averaged more than four or five per day; and we have observed that the mortality has been chiefly among the emigrants who have recently arrived from Europe and unacclimated persons generally, although a few deaths have occurred among our old citizens. But we are happy to state that the health of the city is evidently rapidly improving. For the last three or four days there have been very few cases, and they of a mild nature; and we feel confident that in a short time the health of the place will be effectually restored."

Considerable sickness also prevailed in Houston, and a number of deaths had lately occurred. The Telegraph of the 31st says:—

"We understand that a report is in circulation abroad that Houston is now visited by the yellow fever. It may therefore be proper to state that the health of the city was perhaps never better than at this time."

Stewart Newell Esq., is the acting U. S. Consul at Galveston since the death of Mr. Green.

We do not find a word about the annexation question or the relations with Mexico in the News. Nothing is said about Commodore Moore's trial, except what appears to be an official report of the proceedings of the court martial on the 20th June last, at which time a Mr. Stewart was under examination. —[N. O. Tropæ, Aug. 15.]

THE INVASION OF TEXAS.

Santa Anna we do not believe has the remotest idea of reconquering Texas, but circumstances have compelled him, whether he would or no, to make a hostile demonstration against the new Republic, and he has taken hold of the matter with a seriousness that blindly leads his subjects to participate success. The daily taught lessons taught him on the battle field of San Jacinto can never be forgotten; and he is a man of too much experience and foresight to be blindly led into another so fatal an error.

It is stated that an invading army of thirty thousand men are to concentrate at San Luis Potosi, which is nearly three hundred miles north of the city of Mexico, on a direct route to Texas. To many it may seem strange that an officer almost unknown, as is Gen. Canizales, should be appointed to the command of this expedition, when men of known valor and experience like Urrea, Paredes and Arista, are not even mentioned. To place money and soldiers at their disposal, would be an act which Santa Anna's shrewdness too well foretells the consequences. He knows they but wait the opportunity, and would quickly take such an advantage to improve it, of separating the Northern departments, and adopting a federal system of their own.

An army of fifteen, and perhaps twenty thousand men, may, possibly cross the Rio Grande, and even besiege and take San Antonio, and deploy upon the Colorado; but farther than this they cannot advance. Paddy offered the appointment of an army of raw recruits armed against their own will, and forced to endure every privation and suffering—they will be starved—starved—and cut up by the avenging Texans, and finally the remnants of the country. Such will be the final result of this great invasion, unless foreign influence and foreign aid are at the bottom of the movement. No invasion by land alone can ever succeed, unless other soldiers and other capital than Mexican support it—defeat but awaits any such attempt and Santa Anna is well aware of it.

If however, foreign aid is at the dictators command; and he really does entertain the hope of reconquering Texas, the steamers of war which are now being refitted in our harbor—and which an endeavor is being made to man with an American and English crew the policy of which we will not now discuss—are destined for an attack on Galveston by sea. In such a case, a combined invasion might seriously threaten the safety and prosperity of the New Republic for a time. To be conquered by Mexico, however is an impossibility—sooner shall we see the "long star" wave triumphantly on every hill and in every valley where the Dictator now holds his sway. We are greatly mistaken in the character of the American people if they will permit Texas to pass once more under the yoke of Mexico.

The Poor of London.—At a Coroner's inquest recently held in London, on the dead body of a child, a conversation took place between the Coroner and Jury, respecting the frightful abuses of the Metropolitan poor. A jurymen instanced a case of 120 persons living together in one house, in St. Giles's. Mr. Wakely said that when he was churchwarden, he found in the same neighborhood, 52 men, women and children, huddled together in the room, in which there was neither bed, bedding, nor furniture of any kind, the only things upon which the wretched creatures had to rest their limbs, being old bags and pieces of carpet. Subsequently, another inquest was held on the body of another infant child, aged seven weeks. It was found in a wretched, naked back room, 21 Hampton street, which measured nine feet square, and which contained the father, mother, and two children. The father, who is a shoemaker, had no work for the last six months, and the family had not tasted animal food for six weeks. The child was found dead by the mother's side, and the supposition was that it died from inanition, the mother being unable to give it nourishment. In the Cooper's Arms, and on the same day, Mr. Wakely held another inquest on the body of Jane Green, aged four weeks, who died suddenly. The corpse was found in a wretched hovel, of the same size as the former, with the mother and three other children, at four, Phoenix place. From the mother's statement, the child died from want. All the support this family had, consisted of three loaves of bread, and 2s 6d a week allowed by the parish, out of which the mother had to pay 2s a week rent. In both cases, verdicts of "Natural Death" were returned. Mr. Wakely and the Jury expressed their horror and surprise that such frightful destitution should exist in the Metropolis, and Mr. Wakely declared his resolve to expose it in his place in Parliament.

SNAG BOATS.

The Hellepolis, Capt. Pierce, and the Archimedes, Capt. Riddle arrived here on Saturday evening last, and we understand that their commanders are directed to work in the Mississippi, between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio, as long as any obstructions can be found, unless compelled by ice or exceedingly low water to abandon the work. They are now removing snags of the largest and most dangerous kind, and will continue in active operation during the summer and fall, unless there shall at any time be less than four feet water in the channel. A great improvement will, of course, be made in the navigation of this part of the river.

The Sampson, Capt. Sawyer and the Sevier, Capt. Dillingham, have been at work in the Missouri, since the 1st inst., and will continue in that service until they may be driven out of it by ice. We understand they are removing an immense number of snags, and that they will render the navigation much safer than it has ever been. The Gopher is operating in the Ohio, between the falls and Cairo, and is doing good service.

Three new snag boats are now being built at New Albany—one double and two single, and all designed to work in low water. This is a material change for the better, but the Government must build more double boats, and discontinue the use of the single boats, and in future for the improvement of our great rivers, the commerce of which is still increasing with astonishing rapidity.

Mo. Reporter.

Sandwich Islands.—The Boston Courier says: Messrs. Hallio and Richards, commissioners from the King of the Sandwich Islands, have returned from this city to Washington, and are at the Marlboro' hotel. These gentlemen have recently visited France and England, relative to forming treaties with those governments, establishing the independence of the Sandwich Islands government, and have we learn, been quite successful. They are now awaiting an opportunity to return to the Islands.

PEACE.

Our voice has ever been for peace, and, since the bloody tragedy at Carthage, and the horrid riots and bloodshed at Philadelphia, public opinion, through the Newspapers and from the correspondence of our friends abroad, has sounded in loud peals against domestic violence. The tone of public feeling is deep and very fair in words towards maintaining peace, by a faithful administration of the laws of the land. The noise of murder and rebellion has died away from one end of our nation to the other, and the people are reflecting what ought to be done to insure tranquility and safety to the whole community, civilly, politically and religiously. But while they thus meditate in solemnity upon the awful havoc and calamity that has disgraced the fair fame of our infant republic, and calculated with great anxiety what shall be the next step to prevent the like evils in future, the rumbling echo comes back from Europe, "O democracy where are thy charms, that ages have viewed in thy realm?" The freemen of the United States, in the assassination at Carthage jail, and native American slaughter, and burning churches at Philadelphia, degraded themselves below the wild Indians of the forest! Oh America thy liberty is death!

If any thing can humble the pride and foolish animosity of the American people, it is the gigantic finger of scorn, pointed at them by the crowned heads of the old world. America in the day of her boasting, has laughed at the British right of search on the high seas; at the British Orders in Council; at the Berlin and Milan decrees; at a Russian ukase; and a bull from the Pope; but now the great horn of dilemma has changed, and the statesman, priests and people have to mourn over their own "orders of extermination!" And this is not all, the "little horn" is springing up in every society: the blow aimed at Mormonism, does not satisfy its votaries with the blood of its victims; no; the Catholics are threatened next; foreigners next; and so on, for revolutions never go backward. The Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Quakers, and all other denominations, when they come in the way of self made power, must succumb or die; the government, unless in its agony, it cuts the cancer out by the roots must crumble to pieces.

Who then, will not give his voice for peace? Who will not defend his country's rights? And who will use all honorable means to stop the effusion of blood in future, that foreign nations may not reproach the land of liberty, with crimes that might have been prevented by a timely application of law? If there are any that refuse to do these things, let them speak, for they are not for peace, and the people ought to know it.

TRIAL OF ELDER RIGDON.

On Sunday the 9th inst. Elder Sidney Rigdon was tried for unchristian like conduct.—Fellowship had been previously withdrawn from him by the quorum of the Twelve, and he notified to attend and make his defence on the above day. The oldest bishop of the church at the head of twelve high priests according to the Doctrine and Covenants of said church, acted as the tribunal, while the other quorums in order, and between six and seven thousand members, with the Twelve presiding, patiently investigated the matter for five or six hours. Elder Rigdon and his party held a private meeting in the morning, and sent word to the stand that he should not attend the trial or pay any attention to it.

After the meeting was opened by singing and prayer, ELDER YOUNG proceeded to lay the specifications against Elder Rigdon before the church both verbally and written, which plainly exposed a secret plan to divide the church, by false prophecy and false pretences: blessing the church and people while on the stand before them, but secretly cursing the authorities, and the present course of the church, and many other matters derogatory to men of God. ELDER HYDE followed as testimony and fully substantiated the charges, and made some very excellent remarks, quoting the trial of the two women for the child before King Solomon, wherein Rigdon said divide the child; but the "Twelve" like the true mother, exclaimed don't divide the child.—Let it live.

He was followed by Elder P. P. PRATT as testimony confirmatory of the same facts, and adding some new items. He was very pointed and plain giving a detailed account of Elder Rigdon's course since he came from Pittsburgh and before, having known him before he was a Mormon. ELDER AMASA LYMAN supported the previous witnesses and gave some new items, and closed by saying that Sidney Rigdon had prophesied falsely in Kirtland, in 1832, lost his license, and was suspended three months.

ELDER PIERCE made a few remarks and read a revelation concerning Sidney Rigdon, given in 1833, in which it seems he was "to bow down under the yoke like unto an ass that croucheth under his burthen, but would yet rejoice on account of him that putteth forth his hand and lifeth him up out of deep mire," &c.

ELDER KIMBALL continued the testimony, setting his face against Sidney Rigdon's iniquity and false revelations declaring them pat with Gladden Bishop's, adding that Joseph Smith shook him off last fall, but through the mercy of brother Hyrum, the saints agreed to fry him a spell longer.

ELDER YOUNG again proceeded and summed up the testimony and referred the matter to the council.

ELDER MARKS rose and said he felt it his duty to speak in favor of Elder Rigdon; he was patiently listened to some time, but he produced nothing to prove him clear of the charges or show his innocence.

ELDER YOUNG replied with great force and spirit.

ELDER TAYLOR, (the editor of this paper) laid the matter open in a masterly manner, and was listened to with great attention. After a few remarks from some others, Bishop Whitney, in a very candid manner gave his decision that Elder Sidney Rigdon be cut off from the church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints, and the twelve high priests, sanctioned the decision by a unanimous vote. The congregation, also (excepting some few whom Sidney had ordained to be prophets, priests, and kings among the Gentiles) sanctioned these proceedings by a unanimous vote.

Fellowship was then withdrawn from his followers, especially Samuel James, Jared Carter, Samuel Bennett, Leonard Soby, George Morley, Joseph H. Newton, and John A. Forgeus, were cut off from the church.

Elder Marks was called upon for his views, &c., and he said he was willing to go by the decision of the church.

The proceedings will be published in full hereafter. B.

Cool Weather.—The wind in the north this morning and the weather has turned so cool that fire seems to be the best friend we have. The elements indicate a visit from old Boreas.

Increase of Crime.—It is a fact established by statistics that cannot be gainsaid, that in the European countries, crime has wonderfully increased, in spite of all the ameliorating influences of education. This shows the vanity of all hopes of reforming the world by cultivating the intellect. The moral powers must be cultivated, or education will merely increase the ability to do evil, without diminishing the disposition.

This is rather a sorry calculation for one or two thousand years' exertion in what the world calls the Christian Religion. Civilization and education, sing small, with all the boasted light of the 19th century, to magnify the sound. But it cannot be concealed, that religion in the hands of "hireling priests," sings smaller! Mobs in Europe; mobs in Asia; mobs in America; and wickedness everywhere, is a kind of demoralizing incubus on the charms of sectarian religion, that makes its influence appear to an honest man, and seem to a saint like the night mare.

The "moral powers" must be cultivated! What without education? What numdumplism! To make mankind better, teach them better. The wild Indians and Arabs, are not so full of intrigue and deception, as the Christian population of England and the United States. Gambling and jockeying, and forgery and adultery among the clergy of the various churches of Great Britain, and our high-sounding Republic, are more popular, than fasting, praying, and thanks giving. What is the use, then, of rubbing on so much soft soap, to tickle the filthiness of this generation. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the last days, "violence," then filled the whole earth, and by the time the missionary boards have sent their "hired servants," and tracts to all the world—all the world will be drunken with their iniquity. That's all. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Obedience to the commandments of the Lord, and virtue among men, priests as well as people, will do more than all the monied moves that characterize this century. Money, gentlemen, money! creates a love in the hearts of mankind, which the priesthood and humility of God despises as the gates of hell;—hence that love swallows up compassion, revelation, and perfection, and the whole earth is filled with "violence." "Is it a fact," crime in Europe, Asia, Africa, and even America, "the asylum of the oppressed," has wonderfully increased! and 1844 seems to add fresh blood to the old wounds; and who among the holy, says peace! be still!—"Thou shalt not kill."

We hear of bloody doings, in Shelby county, Texas. Moderators and regulators, as they term themselves, are arrayed against each other, and number about two hundred each. Several persons have been killed, and some houses burned, and plantations destroyed. This is a horrible state of things, and if they would only hold off for a short time, they might have the pleasure of shooting the Mexicans instead of one another. We hope our next news from that region of country will be of a peaceful character. [Caddo Gaz.]

"The heaven works," and iniquity abounds. Governments are getting rotten, and men give evident signs that they are "governed too much," or else not enough. This world is a case, and the whole people will soon be case hardened.

English Opinion of American Riots.—The scenes that have taken place in Pennsylvania and Illinois would have disgraced a nation of savages. We question whether even among the aboriginal natives of the continent of America, distinguished as they have been for wild and pitiless ferocity, and utter disregard of human suffering, any record can be found of deeds more sanguinary than the riots at Philadelphia, or the massacre of the Mormon leader and his brother in the prison of Carthage. For the particulars of these events, so shocking to humanity, so disgraceful to America, and so discouraging to the friends of Democratic institutions, we must refer to our compendium. [Liverpool Mercury.]

All in time; "murder will out," says Shakespeare. The opinion of the whole world is what we want. If Warsaw and Carthage are ahead of the savages in savage deeds, as well as Philadelphia, let public opinion tell it! Let the law, administered justly, cleanse the public and private garments of men; and let "measures not men," wipe off the blood spots from our country's calendar. That's all.

The Jews.—We have received an immense number of communications from both the contending parties amongst the Jews of this city. Most of them are horribly personal and abusive; and none of them give any additional information respecting the difficulties in the camp of Israel. We advise both parties to cultivate brotherly love, and keep cool. It is silly at all times to get angry, but in this hot weather it is positively insanity itself. We never get angry; it is true occasionally, the violence of the party press, degrading our glorious institutions—the corruption of courts of justice, trampling on the laws of both God and man; and the hypocrisies of wicked pretenders to honesty and virtue, blaspheming all that is pure and good, excite us to wrath; but these things would provide the man of Uz himself. And after all, pity mingles with our indignation, making it like that of the tender father who loves while he whips the erring child.

We say then, to the children of Abraham, keep cool; let not the sun go down upon your wrath—leave of roasting each other, for you have got other fish to fry—and who of us Gentiles can equal you at that!—N. Y. Herald.

The foregoing indicates that the Jews are in trouble, though it would be assuming a great responsibility to allow that the New York Herald said or meant any thing for fact. If there is a thing in the world like "Esau," Bennett is that very thing; his hand is against every body, and every body is against him, which brings us to the conclusion that he is thus declined:—

A FEW SERIOUS THOUGHTS.

We have reached a crisis in the condition of our country that demands the serious reflection of every one that properly appreciates the supremacy of law, of good order, and the stability of our institutions. It is not to be denied that for many years past there has been a great falling off in the moral tone of society, and particularly in that portion connected with the administration of the Government. We have seen whole communities convulsed by reckless associations of individuals, taking the law into their own hands, to the extreme of putting to death citizens of the country in the most summary and cruel manner, as lately in the case of the Mormon Joe Smith and his brother. We have seen a district of country rise up against the ministers of the law, and with brute force drive them from the performance of their duties, as in the case with the "Patron Manoe," in the state of New York. We have seen mobs, again and again, put all the authorities of a city at defiance, and confound the churches and destroy property; and more recently, we have seen a mob in its fury resisting the civil and military authorities with all the dread consequences of civil strife. We have seen the highest functionaries of incorporated institutions bring them to bankruptcy by fraud and robbery; we have seen States, unimpaired of every high and solemn moral and just obligation, repudiate their debts, and beggar their creditors; we have seen numbers of the officers of the general Government violate their oaths of office, and by speculation, peculation, and fraud, become defrauders to the aggregate amount of millions of dollars.

Under the eye and sanction of the Executive we have seen a party, pressing upon the worst passions of the masses, to divide society into two great parties, the rich and the poor, as antagonists in all their objects, and urging the latter class to redress their grievances by the power of their numerical superiority.

We have seen some in high places stepping above and beyond the Constitution in the exercise of power gained by usurpation; and we have heard the transgressor lauded by the multitude for his daring. These are but a part of the deep stain that rests upon the country, from the conduct of those who have set the laws at defiance, and have disregarded all the restraints of morals and duty.

It is very evident that these transgressions are but the effects of adequate causes, about which diversity of opinion may exist. May they not be traced to the departure in the administration of the Government, from those sound principles that distinguished its early history, and continued to exercise their influence until within the last fourteen or fifteen years, for a great part of which time the Government has been administered more in reference to the prospects of a few leaders, and to the supremacy of their party, than in obedience to the great interests of the country? During that period, the cardinal principles of the fathers of the Republic have been repudiated. In selections for office, it is no longer inquired "Is he honest? Is he capable?" A new code of ethics has been introduced in the memorable maxim "To the victor belong the spoils," and, in consonance with this piratical creed, the only question that has been asked is "What has been done for our party?" The consequence has been that prodigal and unqualified persons have been invested with office, who, when they have not robbed it where they should have protected it, have, from ignorance and indifference, left undone what they should have done.

This principle of rewarding the rabble followers of the camp, has raised up an army of mercenaries that hover around the Government like vultures over a carcass; and, for what they can do, not less than for what they have done, legion in number, they get access to the ear of power, and poison it with false and pestilential suggestions. It is thus that their virtually administered the Government by their depravity, corrupt it by their profligacy, and weaken it by their ignorance. We appeal to the candid, even among the true friends of the Administration, referred to, to say, whether these evils have not been seen and felt for some years past.

So we say.—The foregoing thoughts are just; within a few years past, the general Government and nearly every state Government, have disgraced the halls of legislation and their country by criminality collectively or individually. Representatives have been murdered in the legislative hall in open session, and members of Congress shot dead, if not on the floor of the Capitol, so near that the blood spattered upon the members' clothes, and upon the door steps! And now the Nation is cherishing the same principle. Where are the old patriots that carried the government so steadily while in its infancy; that the surrounding kingdoms never heard a whisper, or a threat from the "beautiful child" that was born on the 4th of July 1776? Where, tell us where, is that spirit which valued fidelity, and their country's honor higher than British gold? Shame on a country and people that will elect gamblers, duellists, or even boasting Demagogues to the National or State Councils, not naming "Executive!" So long as they do so, mobbing and murder will disgrace our country and her institutions, and foreign nations will say justly, "a republican government is a political machine" too weak to sustain its own laws, and must end in anarchy, bloodshed, war and disgrace.

John Bull's notion of the American fashion of mobbing.

What do you mean, you incomprehensible Yankees, by behaving here in the nineteenth century, and in that boasted glorious, free, and enlightened Republic of yours, like a stupid, savage, bigoted, populace in the dark ages, or rather like a horde of barbarians and cannibals, shooting one another in the head, burning down houses and churches, committing in short, arson and murder by the wholesale, right and left? Why, the wild Indians, say, the very niggers are angels to you! What is it that has prompted you to this reciprocation of atrocities? Religion, forsooth—religion! The Turks would cry out upon you, Catholics and Protestants both. Call it by its right name—sanguinary intolerance, bigotry. These raffianly proceedings, which have disgraced you before the universal world, will go down to posterity, with the massacre of St. Bartholomew and the Sicilian Vespers.

And you in particular, you adobe-brained Irishmen, at a time when the welfare of your native land, especially requires that you should keep quiet and order, and show that you can live like peaceable citizens under a free government—how dare you behave in this outrageous manner? You, I say, especially, who profess to believe in a faith which expressly denounces revenge, and prescribes as a duty patience under insult and contumely.

I will tell you what—were it not that such a set as you, all of you, are not worth the expense, I would recommend a subscription for the purpose of sending over to you a supply of straight razors, an army of barbers to shave your heads, and a staff of physicians and surgeons, selected from our principal asylums, to keep you, lunatics, in order.

So much for you from PUNCH.

MURDER—CONFESSION—TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF THE MURDERERS.

A few days since, we copied a paragraph from the Van Buren (Ark.) Whig, noticing the hanging of four men in Texas, for the murder of Indians. Col. W. S. Reeves of Arkansas, has furnished the Van Buren Intelligencer, with the following particulars of the affair—as embraced in the confession of L. Ray, one of the murderers:

Andy Jones, Willie and Read, came to my house and proposed to go and kill a party of Indians who were encamped about 12 miles above my house on South Salphor. At first I objected, but they insisted; we went, and I prevailed upon them to return. Upon our return, we heard of Mitchell, and Jones observed that it was the same Mitchell that he knew, he was of the right sort. Jones went to Mr. Mitchell's to get some corn on his route back he met with Mitchell, and they came to my house and commenced talking about killing the Indians. Again I endeavored to persuade them not to kill them, but to no effect. They started, and I went with them. When we arrived at the camp, which consisted of three men and two boys, of the Delawares tribe, Jones shot one of the men; Read shot another. Both were killed instantly. Mitchell snapped at me, and hit his gun by a blow upon the Indian's head, who ran off; they told me to pursue him, which I did, and run about eighty yards, and then shot at him. When Mitchell came up, he asked me which way he went, I told him to wait until I loaded my gun and I would show him we pursued him some distance. On our return back, we came by where a little Indian boy lay dead; I asked Mitchell whether he had killed him; he said he caught him and Read stabbed him with his knife. One Indian man (wounded) made his escape also a boy unharmed. This property taken from the Indians, were 12 horses, 4 guns, 3 brass kettles, some saddles and about 40 deer skins, all of which was equally divided between us (five in number). At this time, Jones, White, Read and Mitchell, have in their possession a negro man, who they say they took up in the prairies. The last conversation I heard them have, they were talking of running this negro off and selling him. Jones and White had conditionally sold their part to Mitchell and Read. Read observed that he had done almost everything that a man could do, but as to running negroes he said, he did not know whether he was a secure hand or not. Mitchell observed that he had "dealt in the article" some, and the only way was to sell him and ask him to meet you in some remote place, and make him work of him, meaning to kill him. Read told me that Jones and White had killed a man in the State of Arkansas by the name of Perry hired them to kill him, who gave them a nice mare, a rifle gun, and promised some money. White and Jones waylaid the open field until Moss came to work. Jones fired first according to agreement, and killed him. They got the nice mare and carried her to Missouri and placed her in the hands of John Whitesides who with Elias Riegan her off.

Col. R. says, that the trial was conducted in the following manner. The company on the ground consisted of about 250 persons, who selected four of the oldest settlers in the country to choose a jury of 12, which was selected from different parts; and of the most respectable men in the country. The prisoners were asked if they had any objection to be tried before this tribunal, to which they had none. The jury was absent a short time and returned a verdict against Jones, White and Mitchell, and sentenced them to be hung, but was divided in opinion respecting Ray, who made the confession. The verdict was submitted to the company, who formed themselves in a hollow square, when a vote was taken. The vote was unanimous to hang Jones, White and Mitchell. In the case of Ray, a few words for sparing him because he confessed, but

ROUTE TO INDIA.

The English papers inform us, that a letter, dated Alexandria, reports the movements of the new Governor General of India. "Sir Henry Hardinge, who left Alexandria on the 25th of June, reached Cairo on the following day, and remained there to visit the lions of that city, the pyramids, &c., until the evening of the 28th, when his Excellency started for Suez in a britzka and six horses, and crossed the desert in the extraordinary short space of twelve hours. On the morning of the 29th, his Excellency embarked on board the Peninsula and Orizaba, until Company's steam ship Hindostan, which sailed at 10 o'clock that day for Madras and Calcutta. What is the revolution of time about to produce? As the N. Y. Sun observes: "Think of a gentleman, with a carriage and six horses, rattling over the same road in twelve hours, that Moses took forty-nine days to traverse, with 600,000 Israelites, 3,000 years ago! And what is now a sandy desert was then a rich and fruitful country, covered with splendid cities, the ruins of which are every where seen at the present day. If the old canal which united the Mediterranean with the Red Sea, be again opened and rendered navigable, a passage may be made from England to China entirely by water. We live in a wonderful age, and are always on the look out for extraordinary events. We understand that half way between Cairo and Suez, in the centre of the desert, is a shanty kept by a New England man, who sells coffee, tobacco, and other Yankee comforts, to travellers."

MASSACRE AT THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

A mail ship from Sydney, brought to England intelligence of further murderous outrages on English vessels and their crews, by the natives of the South Sea Islands. A seaman who escaped the general massacre, told the officers of a vessel which visited the islands, that the brig Janot was wrecked off Canton on Dec. 14th. Part of the crew perished, and the rest escaped to the Isle of Pines. Here they did not stay long, in consequence of the ferocious disposition of the natives, and they set sail and touched at Mangoe, where they were immediately attacked, their boat destroyed, and twelve of the crew murdered or seriously maimed. This seaman escaped, but knew nothing of any other murders, except that he had seen a great variety of valuable goods distributed among the natives. At Spore Island, however, the officers of the Magnet ascertained that the name of the former ill-fated ship was the Two Sisters, a South Sea whaler, commanded by Captain Brand, and that every soul of the crew had been barbarously murdered.—[Reveille.]

During attempt to Escape from Prison.—The Richmond, Va. Star, gives an account of a daring attempt to escape from prison there recently. At the usual lock-up hour, Mr. Green, the Jailor, went in to turn the keys on the prisoners for the night, when one of them, a very desperate fellow, known as "Bull" English, refused to go in his cell. The Jailor, being wide awake, soon suspected that all was not right, that English intended to attack him, and, if possible, get possession of the prison key. He, therefore, immediately threw it out of his reach, and gave the alarm. In a few moments, the necessary aid was at hand. In the meantime a message was despatched to the watch house; and on the appearance of the officers, English, finding any further efforts useless, drew from his iron pin, when all the manacles fell off. English is in prison on some serious charge, and his unruly course caused him to be placed in chains. By what means he took off his irons remains yet to be ascertained, though we presume he must have had an accomplice in or out of the prison.

Daring Outrage.—We learn by a handbill published by W. B. Clymer, and S. Maylett Esq's that on the morning of the 24th inst. while lodging at the house of Wm. Cooper in Springfield Bradford county, their room was forcibly entered by a dozen or fifteen men in disguise, seized and carried away their carpet bags, containing title papers, & contracts of the Dingham Estate to lands in that part of the county. They offered $300 reward for the detection of the thieves and recovery of the property; but is said that his community of settlers in that region have combined to resist the titles to the land; and although the trunks and their contents (excepting the papers, which were doubtless burned) have been recovered, and several persons arrested as probably concerned, it is impossible to find witnesses or attorneys willing to appear against them! A pretty state of affairs truly under a government of Laws to protect rights and punish wrongs.

[Susquehanna (Pa.) Register.]

Alarming from Hayti.—By the brig Wolcott from Gonaves, Hayti, we have intelligence to the 2d instant. We are indebted to the first officer of the Wolcott for our news. He states that it was quiet and healthy at Gonaves and in that part of the island, but news had reached there that the yellow fever was raging at Port-au-Prince, and numbers were dying daily with that terrible epidemic. A French Frigate lying in the harbor had lost her commander and a great number of her crew.

American Clocks.—A novel species of clock (never there at least,) has recently been introduced into England from the United States.—These clocks, which are common enough, have mirrors in the doors. These mirrors vary in size from a few inches to two feet in length. On the first importations of the article, it seems that the officers of London and Liverpool, uncertain as to their correct denomination, delivered them on the payment of the duty as goods manufactured, at the ad valorem duty of twenty per cent. The matter has since been brought under the notice of the Board of Customs, and they have directed that, in every instance the ad valorem duty be charged on the clocks, with the addition of the duty of the plate glass of 4s. a foot. The importers have remonstrated, and have requested to be allowed to scrape the silver off, which has been refused, and the parties informed that they can only be allowed to remove the glass and export the same. The importation of these clocks has lately been very considerable, a parcel arriving by almost every American vessel.

Private Post-Masters Arrested.—Mr. Hale, head of the private mail establishment in this and other cities, was this afternoon arrested at the New York boat, at the suit of the United States, for an infraction of the Post Office laws. One of the deputies was also arrested; and within the last few days several of the agents, carriers and runners of the concern have been held to bail for similar infractions; and we understand the Post Office department is resolved to persevere in its endeavors to put down what it considers a lawless proceeding on the part of these men.—[Phil. Paper, Aug. 8.]

Another rather singular item of news is, that a young lady swallowed a needle and thread, last Saturday, and at the last accounts, she was completely sewed up.

MASSACRES AT THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.

On the 14th of last January, the Magnet, whaler, Captain Lewis, came to anchor off the north-west coast of Lifford, one of the South Sea Islands, and by a number of natives coming on board to barter with the crew, the latter were informed that a vessel had lately been captured, and most part of her seamen murdered by the natives of Maryee Island. In order to test the truth of this story, the Magnet got under weigh, and proceeded to the spot, which she gained on the following day. Soon after her arrival, a canoe came along side with a missionary and three men, who had but just come from the south-west extremity of the island; and upon being questioned as to the alleged outrage, they confirmed what the officer of the Magnet had previously heard, their information being that all hands had been killed, and the ship sunk, but the sails, rope, and part of her stores had been deposited in the hold of a rock abreast of the spot where the vessel went down. The missionary further informed the crew of the Magnet that another vessel had met with a similar fate—that the whole of her unfortunate crew, with the exception of two seamen who had managed to escape to a more secluded part of the island, had been slain—and that if the Magnet could lay to till the following morning, they would bring the two survivors on board. Capt. Lewis consented, and about the middle of the day the missionary came alongside with one of the seamen, and the account he gave of the transaction was, that he sailed from London in September last, in the brig Janet, of Danborton, on a voyage to the South Sea Islands, for a cargo of sandal-wood and tortoise shell, but they were wrecked upon the coral reef of Caledonia, on the 11th of December. Some of the crew perished in the wreck, and the remainder (14 in number) escaped by a boat, and landed safely on the same day in the Isle of pines. Their stay there was but short, owing to the ferocious disposition of the natives, and they again set sail, in the hope of gaining some other island where a more civilized race of people might be found. Unfortunately, however, they touched at Maryee, where they were immediately attacked, their boat destroyed, and 12 of their crew seriously wounded. He and another sailor named Richards, were saved, and they eventually sought refuge in that part of the island. He was then questioned as to whether he knew any thing concerning the capture of the former vessel, and he replied in the negative, but added that lately a great many things had been distributed amongst the natives, such as sails, clothing, and mathematical instruments. He also observed, that a short time previous he had noticed a proa leave the island manned by natives, and amongst a great quantity of goods on board he perceived a watch and chronometer. Nothing further having been learned as to the fate of the missing ships or crews, the Magnet proceeded on to Lifford Island, on a further search, and on coming up to that place, the officers ascertained that the name of the former ill-fated ship was the Two Sisters, a South Sea whaler, commanded by Capt. Brand, and that every soul of the crew had been barbarously murdered. Shortly after her arrival off the coast, a large number of the natives, of both sexes went on board. The crew were at their respective duties but unfortunately, one of them happened to take a slight liberty with one of the women, and a dreadful slaughter ensued. The natives then plundered the vessel, and in order to carry out their diabolical revenge, fired her, and she was thereby utterly consumed. The crew of the Magnet being well armed, and believing that some portion of the unfortunate whaler's cargo was distributed amongst the residents of that part of the island, detained the brother of the chief (Bulla), until the things belonging to the Two Sisters were delivered up. Amongst the articles brought on board were a quadrant, greatly injured, a jolly-boat, with the name Two Sisters painted thereon, a chronometer, account books, and the log, which had been kept up to the 10th of December last. The Magnet then set sail for Sydney. Five fine ships during the last two years, have thus been captured and destroyed, and their crews murdered by the savage barbarians of the South Sea Islands.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

On the night of the 19th inst., in Cincinnati, about twelve o'clock, an old man was stopped on Fifth street, east of Main, by a couple of villains, who knocked him down and robbed him of a gold watch and pocket book. The robbers, after securing their booty, were seen to enter one of the livery stables near by; and a couple of watchmen coming up a few minutes afterwards, searched the stable, outhouses, &c., without being able to find them. The old gentleman offers a reward for the detection of the robbers, and the recovery of his property.

Economy.—It is said that a lady moving from Philadelphia to Illinois, saved the cost of transportation of a feather bed, by using it as a bustle!

"I contend the gentleman is entitled to the floor," as the member of Congress said when he knocked his opponent down with his fist.

The Mexican Navy consists of nine vessels, carrying sixty-three guns.

Lines on leaving Europe.

By N. P. WILKIE.

Bright flag at your tapering mast!

Flag out your field of azure blue;

Let the star and stripes be westward cast,

And point as fleecy clouds the westward cast;

Stare at home, oh little and quivering spar!

Point home, my country's flag of stars!

The wind blows fair, the vessel flies!

The promise of the rising breeze;

And, swiftest of a thousand keels,

She leaps to the cheering sea!

Oh! fair, fair cloud of snowy sail!

In whose bright breast I seem to lie;

How oft, when blew this eastern gale,

I've seen your emblems in the sky!

And long, with breaking heart, to thee

On such white pinions, o'er the sea!

Adieu, oh lands of fame and gold!

I turn to wash our foam in track;

And long, with breaking heart, to thee

On such white pinions, o'er the sea!

My lips are dry with vain desire—

My cheek no more is wet with love;

My tears, my tears, my tears, my tears!

Oh! what has changed that traveler boy!

Adieu, the world's his dying boy!

His visions fade behind him, his weary heart speeds

Home!

Adieu, oh soft and southern shore,

Where dwelt the stars long in the heaven;

These forms of beauty seem no more,

Yet none to Adieu's ravishment given!

Oh, still the emerald sun delays,

And pierces through fount and crumbling

time.

To win to his adoring gaze,

These children of the sky again!

Traveller, beauty, oh! have over

That light on other earth hath shown,

Has made this land her home for ever;

And could I have further alone—

Were not my birthright bright and far

Then, oh! what bliss, to see thee can be—Held not the West, oh! glorious star,

Now, when the stars are shining on the tree—

Scarcely to heaven, oh! angel, yet,

Rune, with her harp of song, should teach me to forget!

Adieu, oh! fair and blue I see,

Your voice to clasp the horizon's rim,

And though to clasp the horizon's rim,

My heart aches, and my eyes are dim!

Adieu, oh! fair and blue I see,

When loosed upon a bright and blue

As spreads the sun in the river

In which it may have flowed before—

To Eng and, over vale and mountain,

My fancy flew from climes more fair—

My blood, that knew its parent fountain,

Ran warm and fast in English air.

My mother, in the prayer to-night,

There came a new world and warmer tears!

Oh, long, I long, I long, I long!

Come home, the love, the love for years!

Shy, shy, oh! wave, wave, wave, wave!

Far, far, oh! wave, wave, wave, wave!

The ear of heaven bends low to thee!

He comes to show who calls with me!

The wind-tossed, under needs up to thee!

How stands the life when light is blue,

And by a thrill from heaven unbroken,

I know my mother lives and prays!

Dearest, when thou art, when thou art,

When thou art, when thou art, when thou art,

When I can gaze upon thee, oh!

And thou, with thy dear eyes, on me—

'Till be a past me, little said,

To trace what weight, what heavy fingers

Upon each other's forms have had—

Fall away, fall away, fall away!

But there's a change, believe, mother!

To star, dearer thoughts, of thine;

Leaving, but with me comes an heir

To share the heart, when on my face

Thou, oh! when thou art, when thou art,

One star, alone in memory's heaven—

Then, who had with thee, one treasure only,

Woe of one flower with tears at even—

Room in the heart! The length she left

I darkened to lend light to ours!

There are bright flowers of care and love

And hearts that languish more than flowers—

She was the light—thine, my dear!

Room, mother, in thy heart!—place for her in the prayer.

Jealousy is, in some sort, rational and just; it aims at the preservation of a good which belongs, or which at least we think belongs, to us; whereas envy is a frenzy that cannot bear the good of others.

Agricultural.

From the Western Shepherd.

Introductory remarks, showing the great superiority of Wool, as compared with

Beef and Pork, the present Staples of the Western States. The amount of Wool grown in Australia.

It is the province of the farmer to furnish the raw material for food and clothing. Hitherto the farmers of Illinois have attended to the production of food alone, by so doing the competition is so great as to bring Pork, Beef, and mutton down to the lowest price, yielding no profit to the husbandman. The price of Pork and Beef, in Illinois, is generally from two to three cents per pound.—

Yearling cattle are from three to five dollars each. Corn is, usually, from six to twenty five cents per bushel, and not unfrequently, it sells as low as twelve and half cents per bushel. Fourteen millions of acres of prairie grows within the limits of our State; the greater part of which grows but to die and be consumed by the fire. When meat is two and half cents per pound, and freight to New Orleans is only one cent and a quarter, the farmer gives one half his produce to carry the other half to market. A bushel of Indian Corn weighing fifty-five pounds,

at twenty cents, is not worth hauling twenty miles. Old habits are long continued, and those who have always grown

Corn will continue to do so even at six cents per bushel; and those who have only fed it to hogs will still do so when Pork is only two cents per pound. The fact is generally admitted that much of our produce is too bulky to carry to market and too worthless to sell at home. To point out a more profitable appropriation of our boundless pasturage, and abundant

Corn, is the object of this little treatise.

Wool is a staple article of commerce all over the world. This country has much of it from foreign nations, which might be profitably raised by our farmers

at home. Its small bulk, and great value, renders its exportation, at all times, easy and advantageous. This qualification alone ensures a competition of purchasers.

Three cents per pound will send it from the interior of Illinois to France, to England, or to the Eastern States. A waggon load of Pork (twenty hundred) is worth but fifty dollars; a load of Corn but eighty dollars; a load of Hay but four dollars. Twenty hundred weight of Wool at fifty cents per pound, is worth one thousand dollars. And the farmer might if he pleased, carry all his produce in this form to his ultimate market, with his own team. But we could not send our Corn and Hay to England, even were we so disposed, it would not be suffered to go there. But turn that Corn and Hay into Wool, and she will gladly pay cash for it. We want an article of export that will bring cash, and Wool is that article. The imperishable, and a most indestructible quality of Wool, renders it a safe article to keep, to transport, and to dispose of. Our present produce is perishable. Great losses are annually sustained from our Flour, butter, Meat, and tinned Meat. Wool is liable to none of these casualties.

An Agriculturalist is a species of manufacturer, and a sagacious manufacturer will always turn his machinery to the fabrication of those articles that command the best prices, and pay the best.

To manufacture Corn, Hay, and Grass,

into Beef and Pork, at two or three cents per pound, is a very poor business. But to manufacture this same Corn, Beef, and Pork into Wool, at fifty, sixty, and seventy cents per pound, is a very good busness. We have fed other people, almost gratis, long enough; it is time that we should receive something for clothing them. Blacks can feed the union; and if the efforts of her farmers are rightly directed she can clothe it too.

In 1807 the whole quantity of Wool produced in Australia was two hundred and forty five pounds. In 1839, ten millions, one hundred and twenty eight thousand, seven hundred and seventy-five pounds was sent from that Colony to England, making a return of a million pounds

sterling to British subjects, while others would have gone to foreigners.—

England alone, consumes annually

Wool to the amount of thirty millions of dollars. What has been done may be done. Five millions a year, in addition to our other produce, would be a very pretty picking for our farmers. Will they take it? It is within their reach.—

The intelligence and good sense of the farmers of Illinois must give the right

reply.

Colloquy for Oxen.—A writer in the Western Cultivator advocates the substitution of colts for yokes in working oxen. The advantages claimed are, that it leaves the ox freer, and enables him to work with greater ease to himself, and of course more efficiently for his employer. The matter is certainly worth consideration. Whether it would prove the best or not is to be decided, but the yoke is a hard instrument to work under.

Mackerel Fishing.

—This is a great business down east. A correspondent of the Boston Transcript at Gloucester says:

"I have been quite interested this last week in witnessing the drawing of the seines for mackerel, and I scarcely know a more busy and animating scene than the beach presents on these occasions.

There was a large number of small boats in the harbor, some engaged in fishing or placing the seine, or merely attracted there to watch the drawing, while the beach was covered with groups of spectators, men, women, children, and fishermen, in their gay red shirts and grotesque attire adding variety to the scene.

When the fish had become entangled in the net, it was pulled on shore by the men hauling on long ropes, and animated to the exertion by songs and shouts,

From the N. Y. Prophet.

"MAGNA EST VERITAS ET PREVALEBIT."

"Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose upon the earth, so truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting, to mislead the strength. Let her and falsehood grapple."—Milton.

The distinguishing characteristic of the age in political and religious matters, is a tendency to Ultratism. In the language of an eminent writer, "men seem to see now as they never saw before, in extent as well as in clearness of vision. We are almost ready to persuade ourselves the experience of the past is of little value to us; that the change of circumstances is so great; that what was wisdom once is no longer such; that the political or religious systems which we now rear on the ruins of the old ones, must ever endure as the monuments of our superior wisdom. Gibbon informs us that it was while viewing the ruins of ancient Rome, that he first formed the idea of that gigantic work, to which he devoted a large portion of his life; a work replete with instruction from the dead in our dangers and our duties; he thought that history was philosophy teaching by example; and indeed it is so.

We may gaze with speechless admiration upon the monuments which fallen nations have left of their glory, on the Ionic elegance of the temples of Apollo at Miletus, and Diana at Ephesus, the Doric grandeur and sublimity of the temple of Theseus at Athens, what are these confessed standards of excellence in the fine arts, compared with the price at which they were purchased—the price of liberty? Where are Athens and Rome? These once glorious republics have become blended with the chaos of the past; they live only in our memories; their downfall may be traced to their departure from those virtues which were the foundation stones of their strength. Who will look for one moment at modern Rome, where he may see the ruins even of the ancient city? What is true of nations is equally true of the people of God, if they depart from his counsels, their destruction is sure, and God leaves them to rear their own systems upon a heterogeneous mass of error and truth, which they vainly suppose are decided improvements of his plan of salvation, and must eventually supersede it. But who I ask, that is not thoroughly imbued with the common spirit of Ultratism and innovation, will regard for a moment, the religious systems of men, when he may behold in all its native simplicity and dignity, the plan of salvation as devised by Almighty God?

Like the early Christians, the Latter-day Saints are charged by the priests of the day, with being innovators, a charge which they indignantly disdain, and which is truly ridiculous, considering the source from whence it emanates; from those miserably flimsy pretenses to Christianity, who would an influence decidedly inimical to her extension, and indeed hostile to her very existence, for while the avowed infidel attempts openly, but fruitlessly, to sap the foundation upon which rests Christ's Church. These with the more specious appearance of friendship and zeal for her doctrine, wage war not merely with her enemies, but covertly with Christianity herself. These pseudo friends in the persons of ministers and church members have taken her under their insidious protection, only to dishonor her at their leisure, and use what advantage they have acquired by faithless and hollow professions, to give an air of probability to the plausible insinuations which they have prepared against her, and to plunder her by stealth of some of her fairest distinctions, so that we are wholly unable to recognize her in the printed, patched, and disfigured garb in which they have arrayed her.

I was once said by Talleyrand, of a celebrated physician, that he knew a little of every thing, a little of medicine. But it may not be said of these persons, with all their professions, that they have embraced even the first principles of the doctrine of Christ. I write with warmth but with no roots of bitterness in my heart; I write with the solemn conviction of my responsibility as one who has embraced the truth in the love of it, and in view of the august tribunal before which all men must one day appear. Oh! that God would inspire me with wisdom from on high, to present truth in such plainness that some wayward wanderer in the winds of error may fall in love with her who is coming up out of the wilderness, leaning on the arm of her beloved. Any person tolerably conversant with the annals of history, must know that there is no principle which is so directly opposed to the tastes and views of the formalist or profligate, as revelation from God; a principle which God's people have always held, and for which martyrs have died in every age—a principle (this fact need not be disputed) which has always distinguished the people of God in the days of their abedience and prosperity. When men have rejected revelation, and hearken out to their own desires, broken covenants, which can hold no water; then it is that God has left them in their flagrant wickedness, to all the distraction of division and uncertainty to the worse than Cimmerian darkness of an enslaved mind. Thus it was with the Jews; they killed the prophets which were among them, and God left them to their own ways; and immediately they divided into different sects. Herodians, Pharisees, Sadducees, Samaritans, and others, just like the sects of the present day, without any bond of union, all of them utterly destitute of a knowledge of God; their natural inclinations and blindness led them to place false constructions upon the prophecies, and of course they did not know when they were fulfilled. They declared if they had lived in the days of their fathers, they would not have killed the prophets, but evinced the utter futility of their professions, by slaying those whom God had sent among them. The mystery of the whole was they were destitute of revelation, which God intruded, but for the wickedness of man, should always remain in the church. Lo! the fulness of time had come, and God spoke as he did in the morning of creation, "Let there be light," and there was light. The Messiah had come, but Oh! how humbly, how directly the reverse from the common expectation; the Jews had rejected the prophets, and they knew him not.

Who will say that prophets are not necessary? Who will say that revelation is unnecessary? Jesus went forth (preceded by John who worked no miracle) and established his church on the foundation of apostles and prophets, he himself being the chief corner stone. Eph. ii. 20. And he gave to this church spiritual gifts, which were to continue in the church so long as she remained in an organized form. Eph. iv. 1, Cor. xii. And for this church he prayed just previous to his betrayal when he knew that he must soon leave them.

Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also which shall believe on me through their word. That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. How different all this is from the religion of the present day; even the very foundation is taken away, and most of the gifts, and so far from praying for a union, the gospel contemplates and for which Jesus prayed as an evidence to the world of the divinity of his mission, the religionists of the present day, when talking with the Mormons delight to call to mind and expatiate on the advantages of division in the Christian church; the fact of division they are too often reminded of by the Jews of the skeptic, and the failure of their much loved projects, and to cancel their confusion, they have taxed their inventive powers, to construct some kind of a robe to hide their hideous deformity. How preposterous to tell us of a advantages. A lowering that some benefit might arise from discussion, can they at all compare with the more serious side of the tapestry—garments dipped in blood, the groans of the wounded and the dying—the blood and constantly swelling ranks of infidelity, embracing the brightest and most promising portion of the world, and last, not least, that spirit of bigotry and persecution which is as savage as the tiger, and as cruel and relentless as the grave. I ask where is the grin! and echo answer where? How any one can for a moment suppose after having studied the New Testament that any church not organized according to the pattern there laid down by the great Head of the church, can be the true one, it is difficult to conceive, unless their creed be "credo quidlibet impossibile." The pigmy form, dishonest spirit, repulsive aspect, and incongruous teachings, of the present churches, prove, to any person with a cast of mind ordinarily reflective, that they are the growth of any other than an apostolic age. It is impossible to convince the world that that decrepit form without dignity or grace, characterized by a certainty of disposition, wholesale denunciation, and a spirit of falsehood and murderous persecution, is the pure, peaceful, transferring, religion of Him who spoke as man never spoke.

It is most curiously obvious that there has been a wide departure from the simplicity of primitive Christianity. This apostasy has been foretold in the days of the apostles. 1 Tim. iv. 2, Tim. ii. 13, &c.

At the close of the sixteenth century, such men as Luther, Calvin, Knox, and Melancthon, awoke from their profound slumbers, heartily sick of the corruptions and mummeries of Papacy, and were hailed by thousands of the sons and daughters of oppression and superstition as the auspicious omens of a brighter and happier day. They discarded, to be sure, many of the follies of the system of religion from which they had just emerged, but after all, theirs was a partial reformation—they were still in Babylon—their highest aims seem to be but to mend the old system; and prove that time to the present day, at different periods, such men as Wesley, Murray, Edwards, Campbell, have arisen from some cause or another, and have become the projectors of new editions of Christianity, so that the religious world has become a Babel of conflicting faiths; and the skeptics triumphantly to the opposing sects, as an unanswerable argument in favor of his assertion that the Bible affords ample ground on which to rear superstructures of faith wide as the polar expanse, and therefore cannot have emanated from God.

Christianity as it fell from the lips of Jesus Christ and his apostles, is now treated as if it had at length been discovered to be fictitious; not only by infidel and the unthinking, but by the various denominations of modern Christianity themselves. From the days in which Christ said the Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force, men have been aware of the miserable inefficiency of their faith, yet none seems to have looked with a longing, lingering desire towards God for a restoration of the faith once delivered to the saints, the great mass have been willing to hear and teach for a doctrine the commandment of men. No never had the voice of man been heard for centuries proclaiming the apostle's faith, until God saw fit, to send forth into the vineyard, a youth, with the bloom of boyhood upon his cheek, uninitiated in the mysteries of controversy, totally unacquainted with the erudition of the schools, one who loved truth and the approbation of his God, better than the praise of man. He was the son of an indigenous man, depending entirely upon manual labor for his subsistence. Under these circumstances he went forth gifted with that wisdom which comes from God only, which all the machinations of his enemies were not able to gainst or resist. All the eloquence of the most gifted pulpits, all the arguments of the most profound reasoners; the whole host of historians, logicians and politicians, have been unable to detect a single departure from the scriptures, in the religion which he promulgated. The wicked falsehoods of catch-penny tracts, pamphlets and newspaper effusions, which have been widely and industriously circulated; the false accusations of perfidious hypocrites who have excommunicated him from her bosom; the almost incredible labors and unparalleled self-denial and sacrificial persecution to which his ministry has been subjected, all, &c., have not been able to prevent the most rapid and astonishing progress of primitive Christianity, that has been known since Jesus dwelt among men.

Already has the foothold in various parts of the United States, the Canada, Nova Scotia, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and the islands of the sea, &c., and this church who was looked upon as contemptible, is now formidable in numbers, and a Daniel predicted the little stone shall fill the whole earth. This gospel of the kingdom must first be preached among all nations, then shall the end come.

Who, I ask most solemnly, who, but the most sceptical, cannot recognize the hand of God in this?

In the prosecution of their holy work, the saints of God are obliged to contend with not only the almost invincible force of educational prejudices, pre conceived and long established opinions, but also with the great and countless flood of falsehood that was ever put in circulation by Satan himself, mendacious loquaciousness and all his host. It is almost, if not quite, beyond the range of language to exaggerate here, my heart grows warm as I write upon his subject, and I wonder that the red hot bolts of Heaven's condign vengeance have not been visited upon them. I shudder for the people of this generation, who have aided in this enormous work, by the suppression of truth or otherwise, when I call to mind that there is a day of terrible retribution at hand, when all men shall stand at the judgment seat of Christ, to be judged according to the deeds done in the body. Then will the hollow-hearted professor of religion know that there is a God of justice, then will the minister of religion, and the mercenary editor, (both grand engines in these times) forget their ill-gotten gains, they will forget utterly their meagre short-lived triumphs over truth and its faithful advocates; and they, the aspirants of whose invective against the Saints of the Last Days, nothing could abate will be crowned with shame, the numerous, mournful train, will be obliged, sadly indeed, to drink to the very dregs, the bitter portion of the chalice which they have prepared for themselves.

The fair breutcheon of our country has been polluted, the constitution has become vitally illegible, and many of the brave sons of Columbia, have been degraded to the condition of slaves. Oh! God of our fathers, speed, oh! speed the day, when the hand of injustice shall be removed from thy people, and the glorious era of universal and everlasting righteousness shall be ushered in. The blood of the martyrs of Jesus, yea, prophets, patriarchs and saints, has crimsoned this fair land, nay it ever be a memorial before thee of their undying faithfulness in thy cause. It is very common for religionists to suppose that the Latter-day Saints cannot be a good people, because they are so severely persecuted. "But Christ says, 'If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love you; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you. Remember the word that I said unto you—the servant is not greater than his lord.' And again—"They that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." The religion of Jesus never did and never will become so fashionable as to shield its adherents from persecution; it is only when it is mixed up with the follies of men, and diluted down to their taste, that it receives the adulation of the multitude. If the people of God were beloved by the world in any age, (I speak reverently, my heart trembles while I write,) 'tis not the language of our Lord attribute to him a very strange way of speaking, and something of a deceptive manner!" The dreadful fire which followed the early disciples seem to have been rekindled, and the ministers of the Latter-day Saints have and do now ask themselves the question on entering their fields of labor, have grace and strength to suffer for the gospel as they suffered. I am requested to write to the church, who even in this age of illumination and civilization, has assisted to perform the last task of sepulture to bury their brethren at one time, who died noble martyrs for the "faith once delivered to the saints." Thousands of men, helpless women and young children, have been forcibly ejected from their peaceful homes, in an inclement season of the year, and no virtuous indignation, no Christian sympathy was aroused in their favor; yet with all their sorrows, the Latter-day Saints would not exchange their faith for anything, for the value of the universe; they know in whom they have believed, and that deliverance shall eventually be theirs.

In the New York Sun of the 10th ult., I noticed among some flippant remarks on Joseph Smith the beloved Prophet, an assertion that he was a heartless, unfeeling aspirant, a man without a redeeming quality; it appears to me that such a libellous assertion, must have proceeded from very narrow or wilfully distorted views. A mere cursory glance at the nobleman's life, ought to cover with shame the man's face who can be guilty of such base-faceted falsehood. If such had been his character, would he have invariably stood between his people and death in all their persecutions? Was he ever assailed by temptation to swerve from the path of the just? If so, it must have been during the late troubles at Nauvoo. To a man of acute sensibility, of warm and generous feelings as were his, it must have been painful to tear himself from his people, the partner of his choice and his children. Assassination he knew was almost inevitable, he saw the grave fast opening before him and was he unappalled? He was. Overwhelmed as a man of selfish ambition must have been, he stood firm a practised declaration, that his was that high order of moral responsibility and benevolence to which extraordinary minds alone are a tributary. He laid down his life like a good shepherd for the sheep, the damp shroud and the lonely coffin are his, but his spirit calmly smiles in the presence of Jesus. "The blood of the martyrs shall be the seed of the church," God's nobleman the chivalry of the age, the heralds of salvation, shall be raised up by thousands and fly on the wings of the wind, to the remotest bounds of the everlasting hills, all nations shall hear, until he shall come whose right it is to reign; then in the morning of the resurrection, when even "chains that now bind down God's people shall be knocked off, when the martyrs for Jesus, shall at his mandate burst the bars of death, and stand with their sheaves with them upon the earth redeemed, then having passed through all their afflictions, having endured hardships like good soldiers of Jesus Christ filled with those eternal joys which flow from the throne of God, like incense from a censer, Hallelujah! Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! Then shall the righteous shine forth in the kingdom of their Father in all the splendor of the regal sun, reflecting forever the celestial rays that hang from the Eternal Presence. God grant to breathe his benediction upon his people, to stretch out his arm to sustain them in all their afflictions, and preserve them blameless unto the coming of Christ is the prayer of your brother in the Lord.

Not So.—The New York Prophet is mistaken about Gen. Smith's views of Mr. Polk, Oregon, Texas, &c. General Smith opposed Van Buren, Calhoun, Clay and Polk, and was prepared to oppose others on principle. And as to the admission of Texas, Oregon, or any territory, it was on "petition" of the people; Vas populi, rex Dei; but as for annexation (by party power) of any place, he never named it; and as for supporting Polk or Clay, it was all the same—might just as well go for Boggs and Beaton, Jack straw and the Dey of Algiers. No Mormon can serve General Smith's Views—and Mammon!

The News.—The Mississippi and Missouri Rivers are failing; a thief stole a pair of saddle bags on the steamer "White Cloud," containing $450. Prince Albert has presented the Autocrat of all the Russias, with a stud horse worth $3000. A Durham Bull worth fifteen thousand dollars, and Leicester ram all pure blood and high priced; Joseph Bonaparte; the king of Spain is dead; Uncle Sam has sent out a new snag boat called the "Gopher"; it is said that the inhabitants of the whole world use yearly eight hundred millions of pounds of Coffee, and as much sugar; these at a bit a pound, are worth ten hundred millions; Mr. Norris, the Philadelphia engine builder, has agreed to go to Austria, and build engines for Prince Metternich; Queen Victoria, by her love and affection for the people, blessed; her nation with another "Duke of York," on the 5th ult. the Princess de Joinville, has also given the French a Princess; the Post master of Cairo, Ky. recently robbed the mail of $320. The Pope is sick; Wm. Ousley has been elected governor of Kentucky; the yellow fever is making some severe ravages at Galveston; a fire at Granville in Michigan, recently destroyed $50,000 worth of property; a girl, aged 14 died not long since, on Long Island, from swallowing a peach pit; there has lately been quite a gale at the mouth of the Mississippi; in the interior of Africa, exist a people without the use of fire; Insurance offices there would doubtless be a nuisance; the governor of Massachusetts wrote to the governor of Rhode Island, saying, if he did not release Gov. Dorr, the Bay state would go for Polk and Dallas, and he replied—he did not care a d—n if it did; the Portland Locomotive run into a drove of cattle the other day and killed an ox, besides throwing off the brakeman; Professor Maffei is storming the castle for the Methodists in North Carolina; his wife keeps a tavern in Texas; the world is wide and so we say, bless every thing 'an inch high that deserves it.

PARTY SPIRIT.

The experience of almost seventy years, has taught many of the people of these United States, that party spirit is the bane of a free government. It cannot be concealed, that the high toned feelings, lofty calculations, and national jealousy for the common weal, which, in the infancy of our Republic, animated and stimulated the hearts of the people, have degenerated into a low spirit, too disgusting, among noble minded men, to need reprehension. This singular and sinful, degradation of a nation's honor, has not crept into the bosoms of freemen, through a want of education, for even the lisping infant is taught that, 'Intelligence is the life of liberty,' but the great evil arises from the patronage of the public crib, bestowed upon unworthy men, as a quid pro quo for electioneering services; whereby the "larks and fishes," have become more charming than the virtue of the nation or the honor of the officer.

Where the virtue of the people once would have spurned the idea of 'bees' and 'gatherings' for political effect, now the habits of the multitude bespeak a loud huzza for county mass meetings; state mass meetings, and national mass meetings, showing the surrounding kingdoms that shallow water becomes disturbed by storms sooner than deep water.—In fact, if the tempestuous state of society as it bursts into mobs does not indicate heated passions, from Congress hall, down to the log cabins, then all signs have failed in this great political drouth in the domains of freedom. But it is so, and why is it? Ah! that is the rub! Did General Washington ever go from State to State, and gather the people by tens, fifties and hundreds of thousands, to hear the wind of Statesmen, and the rant of demagogues? No; he was too wise to triffl with the people's time and money, to subserve self ends! He was ever opposed to political combinations where no restraint could reach the leaders; and no remuneration could reward the poor devotee.

But we are going on, too far, and must conclude by saying that the present mood of manufacturing public opinion and pushing forward party spirit, by great gatherings of the people, will eventually grow into a monster as detrimental to the continuation of liberty in the United States, as Virgil's wooden horse was to the peace of Troy.

Illinois Canal Loan.—The following letter, on the progress of the Illinois Canal loan, addressed to Col. Oakley, one of the Commissioners, per Libertia, is rather cool for great calculations towards public works in this state.

London, August 19, 1844.

I did not write to you on the 16th by the Great Western, hoping that I should be able to day to advise that progress, or a beginning, had been made in a measure which I expected would enable the committee to complete your arrangement. I am sorry it is not in my power to give you this advice, by this conveyance; but the matter is in the hands of a gentleman of the committee, a friend of yours, who is very devoted and who still believes, in the way to which I refer, or in some other, that your object will be attained.

In the meantime, I am anxious to impress on you the importance of nothing being done by the State, which will effect the opinion of parties here, its character for honor and good faith. Illinois 44-42, nominal; Louisiana sold at 37; Pennsylvania 68 a 70.

Man Eaters at New Zealand.—The Journal des Debats gives the following story, communicated by a correspondent at Akaroa, in New Zealand:

Probably, before my letter arrives in France, you will have learnt that the Mahouris, a tribe of Zalanders, have killed thirty English of this colony; but you, perhaps, will not know that the bodies of these unfortunate men were eaten. This is but too true. We have been out on a hunting party, for about a week, when one evening we arrived among the friendly tribe of Turnipara or Mahouris, and found them retaining themselves with human flesh. We all conceived that they were eating simple natives or native slaves of their own. As I understood the language, I could not resist expressing my indignation, and I threatened them with chastisement from the crew of the corvette. The savages were alarmed, and endeavored to appease me, by saying, 'they are not men of Mahouri that we are eating, but some Yee-Yee'—for it is thus they call the English. They then exhibited to us the heads of their victims, and I recognized among them that of Capt. Wakefield, one of the distinguished inhabitants of Port Nicholas, who had entertained us at his house when he went to the town to procure provisions. I was seized with horror at this sight. My companions blamed me for having risked irritating the cannibals, as we are only five against two hundred. But they gave us confidence, by saying, 'Oh, the Ouri outi (for so they distinguish us) are good people, but the Yee-Yee are very wicked. They then related that they had killed the English, because they wished to establish themselves in a bay, which they had not purchased, and which the Mahouris were unwilling to give up. We then retired, with our hearts full of horror and disgust.

Truly, mobocracy, like the atmosphere, reaches round the globe. What a monstrous fear pervades the breasts of men, that their neighbors may do their some good; or, jealousy, that somebody will do some wrong. What a happy time it will be when jealousy and enmity cease!

The Potatoe.—We know that the Potatoe was first introduced into Europe, by Sir Walter Raleigh, from Virginia, in 1585. Potatoes were, at first, cultivated by a very few, and considered a great delicacy. In a manuscript account of the household expenses of Queen Anne, wife of James II., the purchase of a very small quantity of potatoes is mentioned at two shillings a pound. In 1682, they were for the first time, planted in the open fields. Sweet potatoes had been brought from New Granada, by Sir John In 1545.

America boasts of various roots and herbs, &c., potatoes, tobacco, Indian corn, and the &c. consists of liberty, mobocracy, and murder, with impunity. "How we apples ruin!"

The Osprey.—We are grateful to Capt. Anderson for his strict punctuality, and we understand he will be much obliged to his patrons in Nauvoo, if, in future, they will be ready precisely, at 8 o'clock, as he must "be off" at that time, to keep his promise and word good.

"Gov. Ford and the Mormons have not done 'agit'ing" yet. Some violent outbreak will most likely occur in or near Nauvoo shortly. It is monstrous that these fanatics, the Mormons, cannot be kept in order. We almost think that their extermination would be a work of philanthropy."

[N. Y. American Rep.]

For a native American, we really think the above smells pretty strong anti-philos-adelphos. The pleasant shrubbery of New York, appears to be sprinkled with now and then a "red bud" as well as the Western wilds. When will virtue reign? And when will peace and religion be as earnestly sought for the bliss of mankind, as contention, strife, and folly are to destroy one half of the world, for the lust and ambition of the other? "Almost philanthropy" to exterminate! Mr. Native, or Mr. "Red Bud," who is the plebeian, and who is the patrician? Shame, shame on the man, that seeks to murder his countrymen! Jefferson, Adams, Washington, or Hancock's spirit never dwelt in such a breast.—No, never; but Benedict Arnold's does, with all his infamy, disgrace, and serpentine vengeance to ensnail it. Oh!

The Savage and the Christian.—Joe-o-set, the walking bear, a famous Sauk chief, of stalwart frame and noble bearing, was a twelve month or more ago, persuaded by some speculating Yankee to abandon his wild retreats and simple savage life, and submit to exhibitions of himself in the principal cities. At Cincinnati, he was introduced on to the theatrical boards, and, in a class of plays got up to represent Indian life, he acted the principal character, with considerable success. From thence, he was taken with other red men, to the east, and finally across the ocean, to "astonish the natives" of the old world. Joe-o-set became a lion in the court of royalty, was presented to the Queen, and wherever he moved, clad in his grotesque and fanciful adornments of person, was the observed of all curious eyes. His biography, in full Indian costume, was taken in London, by the lithographers of the Queen, and is a beautiful specimen of the art, as well as a striking memento of her race fast fading from existence. But unfortunately Joe-o-set, in forming an acquaintance with the pale faces, learned some of their vices, and his change of habits, and free use of the poisonous fire-water, appear to have given disease a death grasp upon his powerful frame. According to the Cleveland Herald, he is now lying in the chamber of a kind and benevolent family on the pier of that place, in the last stages of consumption, having been landed there, recently, on his way from Europe to Fort Leavenworth, Mo., without money, friends, or a single voice to cheer him in his native tongue. Still he submits, without a murmur, to the directions of physician and nurse, and with patient resignation, points to the dwelling of the Great Spirit, and remarks: "Joe-o-set, die—go up."

We clip the above from an exchange, and solemnly add, that "the poor Indian while imitating our vices catches our disorders" and learns the benefit of civilization, and Christianity.

Steamboat Accident.—From the officers of the steamboat Gulnare, who arrived here this morning on board the steamer Virginia, we learn that on last Sunday morning, between 12 and 1 o'clock, the steamboat Westwood bound down, ran ashore and sunk the Gulnare in Walnut end, about 55 miles below Memphis, striking her on the starboard side just at the forward hatch, which caused her to sink in about five minutes, almost to her hurricane roof. The Gulnare, at the time of the accident, was hugging the West bank of the river, on her way from New Orleans to this city, with a heavy cargo of merchandise. She had a barge in tow, which was between her and the shore, and on this the passengers were enabled to save themselves and most of their baggage. The Gulnare was owned in this city principally by Messrs. Plaine, Tompkins & Barrett, and we learn she was not insured. By a letter from Capt. R. M. Strother, we learn that the boat and cargo will be a total loss. Two deck passengers were drowned in attempting to save their baggage; neither of their names are known; one of them was a discharged soldier of the third regiment of U. S. Infantry. A deck hand belonging to the boat was also lost; his name is John Holberg. The Westwood is a new boat, and belongs up Cumberland river.—New Era.

The Shirt Tree.—In the forests of the Orinoco, there is a tree which often attains the height of fifty feet. The natives make shirts of the bark of this tree, which requires only to be stripped off, and to be deprived of its red and fibrous parts; the shirt is thus formed without a seam. The head is thrust through one end, and two lateral holes are cut to admit the arms; natives wear these shirts in the rainy seasons, which, according to Humboldt, are equal to any of our Macintoshes for keeping out the wet.

THE MORMON TRAGEDY—AGAIN.

The Editor of the Warsaw Signal continues to denounce us, (the senior) for our unwillingness to retract the opinion we have heretofore expressed—that the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, under the circumstances in which it was perpetrated, stands "conspicuously at the head of the black letter list of public offenses in the United States." Well be it so. Although we aim to merit, and are gratified to receive the approbation of all, we are nevertheless unwilling to secure it at the sacrifice of what we esteem a sacred public duty. It is hardly to be expected that any of those who, a few weeks only before the horrible occurrence took place, had solemnly resolved, in public meeting, that their difficulties with the Mormons could be settled by nothing short of powder and ball, will be persuaded, by any thing that an impartial observer may say, that they committed a heinous crime in carrying their murderous resolutions into effect; and we are inclined to believe that nothing which the perpetrators, or their apologists, may offer, in extenuation or justification of the act, will change the views we have heretofore taken of that truly lamentable affair.

Our contemporary says, if when, in his address to the people of Illinois, the Governor stated that, before he gave the assurance of security to the Smiths, he obtained a pledge of honor by a unanimous vote from the officers and men under his command to sustain him in performing it, his Excellency meant to convey the idea that such unanimous pledge was given by all the officers and men in the county, under military command; he, the Editor, will venture to say . . . that it is false; and that he can prove this assertion by the testimony of scores of witnesses, whose character for truth and veracity will compare favorably with any men in the state. Now we do not deny it our business to decide, whether Governor Ford did actually mean what he said, on the above occasion, or the contrary. Since our resumption, in part of the Editorial charge of the Telegraph, we have neither flattered him on the one hand, nor vilified him on the other. The only notice we have taken of him has been to give his official communications a reasonable degree of credence. If he has misled us, by giving a false coloring to the murder of the Smiths, the fault is not ours. His testimony, however, is good, until contradicted by evidence equally respectable, and conclusive.

It matters but little, however, in considering the question at issue, whether Joseph Smith was guilty or innocent of the atrocious crimes laid to his charge by his enemies, and which still remain to be proved. Had he been even tried, convicted, and sentenced to suffer the most painful and ignominious death, to take his life in any other way than that pointed out by the law, would have been willful murder. To kill him, before trial, after he had voluntarily surrendered himself, upon the most perfect assurance of safety to his person, that could have been asked or given, was incomparably more criminal. It is his damnable fact, which stamps his assassination with a character of unparalleled atrocity. Had he been attacked, while he remained at Nauvoo, surrounded by his devoted followers, the matter would wear a wholly different aspect; and the act, however censurable, would have been at least redeemed from the imputation of "perfidy and cowardice." But, as it now stands, it cannot be spoken of without horror; and the failure to attempt to justify or excuse it, only serves to give it a still darker hue. The true policy of those concerned should be to patiently submit to the rebuke which they so richly deserve; and endeavor, by their future respect for the laws, to atone for their past misconduct.

The 8 goal is that we, (the senior) should be the last to speak in terms of the deod reputation of the late tragedy in Hancock county; for the reason that about seven years since, we apologized for, or at least failed to condemn a far more atrocious crime, perpetrated in this place. But if this latter assertion were actually true, the soundness of the position deduced from the alleged fact might still be questioned. At the period spoken of, those scenes of popular violence, which have of late so frequently disgraced the country, and clothed the land in mourning, were comparatively rare. It was, therefore, quite natural that those among whom they occurred should endeavor to excuse or palliate them, in order to escape the odium which they were calculated to bring upon the community in the midst of which they were suffered to take place. But now, when their magnitude and frequency seem actually to threaten the very existence of our social and political system, it is no longer allowable to be merely apologetic. More especially are the conductors of the press, every where, bound strongly to denounce all and every one who break, let the pretense for be what it may. Nor should any former delinquency of duty be offered as an excuse for a similar neglect at a time like this, when a resort to mob violence appears to be fearfully on the increase in almost every part of the Union.

But, it is not the fact, that we either "apologized" for, or "failed to condemn" the riots which unhappily occurred in this city in 1837. On the contrary, we denounced them in terms sufficiently decided to provoke the resentment of some of the individuals concerned, who anonymously threatened our press with demolition, and our person with violence, for paying, as they alleged, spoken "too harshly" of those gentlemen who had determined to stop the course of Abolition in this place. True, a few of the most zealous of the persecuted party also censured us, because we had not deemed it proper to take an active part on their side. But the great body of the citizens generally approved of our course; and now, after the lapse of seven years, we are still of the opinion that, had we acted differently, the excitement and ill feeling which then prevailed—and which it was the dearest wish of our heart to assist in allaying—might have continued to exist to the present day. Aiming to neutralize the duty of mutual concession and forbearance, we used the language of mildness and persuasion, rather than that of bitter reproach and invective. In this we are aware, we differed from the Editor of the Signal, who seems to have before him, and to be still doing, his best to fan the flame of discord in his own neighborhood.

It is not necessary to our present purpose to institute a comparison between the lawless transactions which took place in Alton in 1837, and those which have recently occurred in Hancock county. The reflecting and candid observer will perceive at once that there is a very marked distinction between them. Desecration was unquestionably the object of the mob in both cases. In the one, however, the intended victims were defenseless captives, who had given themselves up under a most solemn assurance of protection—in the other, it was a certain description of property, defended by armed men, who might have left the place of danger, without molestation, at any time before the attack. The first was effected with as little hazard to the perpetrators as a cook is liable to, when decapitating a chicken—the last cost the assailants as much blood as the assailed. The one was committed in open day, by a large armed force, in the presence of an approving multitude, and is now unblushingly justified, if not gloried in—the other at a late hour of the night, while the citizens were buried in sleep, by a small number of unknown and irresponsible persons, and has ever since subjected Alton and her population to contumely and reproach. We might easily carry the comparison much farther; but for brevity we will remain for the Editor of the Signal to decide whether we shall ever again refer to the subject.

NEWS FROM THE WEST.

Victoria, July 6th, 1844.

Editor of the Star—Dear Sir: News arrived in town to-day that another attack upon Corpus Christi has been made by the Lipan Indians. Mr. Berry, my informant, who was in the fight, says that between 30 and 40 Indians attempted to steal horses from the Ranch, but did not succeed in taking off more than 15 or 20. Four Indians were killed, and several wounded. The war was desperate. After being repulsed and then their retreat cut off, they were obliged to take refuge on a mud reef in the bay, and there kept from morning until near night. Then, making their escape from that place, they again made another attack upon the Ranch, but were made to retreat by the discharge of a six pounder, which tore one Indian and his horse to atoms. The remainder have not been heard of since.

Another report arrived to-day, that of fatal dispatches passed through Corpus Christi a few days since, from Santa Ana to our Government. Also, that Gen. Wolf has been defeated at Monterey by the Federalists and Ransieros, and retreated to Matamoros, where he is now fortifying himself.

We understand that the extent of the sickness with which this city has recently been visited has been very much exaggerated by individuals and by some of the papers in the interior. That we have been severely scourged by disease, and that death has reared his shafts black and fast around us no one will deny; but that the deaths have averaged from 13 to 17 a day, as we see stated in one of the papers alluded to, we know to be incorrect. It is true that in one day, the 2nd ult. 17 interments did take place; but it is also true that nearly one-half of those interments had died the previous day, and burials continued to take place until a late hour at night. The deaths since the sickness commenced have probably not averaged more than 4 or 5 per day; and we have observed that the mortality has been chiefly among the emigrants who have recently arrived from Europe, and unaccustomed persons generally, although a few deaths have occurred among our older citizens. But we are happy to state that the health of the city is rapidly improving. For the last three or four days the temperature has been very favorable, and of a mild nature; and we feel confident that in a short time the health of the place will be effectually restored. The unsanitary state of the weather for some time past has been inopportune, and we trust when it once begins fairly settled, and we can get a good steady breeze from the south, the sickness will disappear.

Great Fire in Cincinnati.—A friend has kindly sent us the following:

To the Editor of the Louisville Journal: Cincinnati, September 9th. Gentlemen:—At two o'clock this morning a fire broke out near the Broadway House, on the opposite corner, consuming some three or four houses on Broadway, and destroying to a great extent, as many more on Mye street. The buildings situated on Broadway are entirely consumed, and naught but the chimneys remain to mark the spot; on Market, the third floor and roof of the Columbus House, and those adjoining on the same street, were consumed. It was at a late hour this morning that the fire was entirely quelled. The Holmes house and a very narrow escape, as did many others in the immediate neighborhood. The amount of loss I have not ascertained; it must be large, judging from the number and size of the buildings destroyed. Yours, &c. T. V.

Firemen's Riots.—The Philadelphia papers state that on Saturday evening about 9 o'clock, in consequence of the ringing of an alarm bell in the southern part of the city, a general alarm of fire was raised, which drew the Fairmount Engine company into the district of Southwark. Great excitement prevailed, as a conflict between the Westcott Hose and Fairmount Engine companies was feared. At the corner of Second and Catherine streets, a fight ensued between two or three persons, in which the Fairmount took a part. For a time dreadful consequences were threatened, the residents in the neighborhood became alarmed and closed their houses. Finally however, without any serious results, the Fairmount proceeded out of the district, when the excitement subsided. These difficulties in part grew out of a single being divided into several municipal governments. Fire Engines belonging to one district create jealousy in coming into another and riots ensue. Nothing but the most thorough reform on every exciting topic and subject which legal measures can reach, can save that city from such outbreaks.

Singular Discovery.—Yesterday some men were digging near the church at Hoxton, they discovered at about thirty feet below the surface of the earth, two small earthen urns of remarkable texture, and some fragments of Roman tiles, besides portions of a human skeleton. Upon opening the urns, one was found to contain a beautifully chased vessel of gold, somewhat in the form of a chalice basin, inside of which were several gold coins in a high state of preservation. The other merely contained an urn of the same form as the outer, only of much finer quality. They were immediately handed over to the surveyor, who expressed his intention to present them to the British Museum.

[Liverpool Standard.]

Relics.—Among the relics at the Historical Society, at New Haven Ct., there is a cane, manufactured from the root of the tree on which the Salem witches were hung; the old oak chest, formerly in possession of the family of Aaron Burr, the arm chair of Roger Williams, the camp stool of the Rev. Colonel Elihu Williams, once President of Yale College; General Putnam's old tavern sign, with a portrait of General Wolfe painted thereon; a part of the keel of Captain Cook's old ship "Endeavor," that passed round the world, and finally ended her days at Newport, R. I.; the casket and glass found with Captain Nathan Hale, who was hung by the British, on Long Island, as a spy, during the Revolution, as a retaliation for the death of Andre; and last, but not least, the order book of a British Adjutant, containing the orders of the British army, on the day of the memorable battle of Bunker Hill, one sheet of which was stained and stamped, for eternal endurance, with a drop—a single drop of human blood.—Reveille.

An Elitir Killed.—We learn by the officers of the steamer Virginian, arrived yesterday morning from Cincinnati, that when passing Smithland, on Wednesday morning last, they were informed, that a man named Dr. Snyder, had shot Mr. McKibben, editor of the Smithland Bee, on the evening previous, in the street, and that Mr. McKibben expired almost immediately. We are unable to ascertain further particulars.—Reveille.

Sale of a Wife.—A man named Gen. Woodhead, of Hensworth, near Worcester, England, sold his wife in the public market, on the 10th ult., for five shillings!

Two Women Executed.—The London papers contain accounts of the execution of Catherine Bion and Bridget Lingin, at Roscommon, Ireland, for murder. Seven thousand persons were present, of whom about four thousand were women. The culprits did not appear to feel their awful situation. One of them laughed and chatted up to the very moment that the drop fell.

Despatches from Mexico.—The New York Sun of the 29th ult., says. A special messenger goes with despatches from Mexico to England, in the Royal Mail steamer Acadia, which left on the 1st September. We have been permitted to "guess" that the Mexican Army will not march upon Texas until an answer to the despatches has been received from Quezaco's Cabinet.

Arrival of a Clipper.—The new steam ship, Marmora arrived here yesterday afternoon, from Bath, Maine. She came in forty-seven hours, and passed every vessel on the passage without the aid of steam. Her pilot, Mr. Barger, says that he was never on board a faster vessel. She has come here for the purpose of being fitted with Eriksen's propeller, and will sail, when completed, for Constantinople. It is our opinion that she will astonish the Turks.—[N. Y. Herald.]

Mr. Gun advertises his son in one of the papers as a thief. The son-of-a-gun ought to be published, says the Ledger.

Quar.—If Tom's father is Dick's father's son, what relation is Dick to Tom.

LAZY RICH GIRLS.—The editor of the Orion, says—"lazy rich girls make rich men poor, and industrious poor girls make poor men rich."—He does not mean by flattery to sacrifice truth.

CITY PROCEEDINGS.

On Monday the 16th, one of the police complained of O. P. Rockwell, for an assault upon several gentlemen; he confessed the same, and was fined $5.00 and cost.

Same day Mr. C. Smith was arraigned before his honor the Mayor, for an assault upon Mr. Arnold, one of the policemen, and after a full investigation, was fined $12.00 and costs. After the trial, Mr. A. Little committed an assault upon Esq. Dawson, of St. Louis, and was instantly fined five dollars and costs, and excluded from being a policeman.

GENERAL ORDERS.

THE officers of the Nauvoo Legion will meet at the meeting ground in this city, on Friday the 27th inst., at 10 o'clock A. M. for officer drill, arm and equipped as the law directs; by order of Lieut. Gen. Brigham Young.

CHARLES C. RICH, Maj. Gen. Nauvoo Legion.

TO ACCOMMODATE THE PEOPLE.

ON (UVOO) and adjacent country, the subscribers have opened a commission store, where they will sell or exchange any kind of property, such as: wagons, oxen, horses, cows, sheep, furniture, and in fact any thing that will ever made to sell or traffic on. We have also opened a land agency where we will take houses, lots, lands to sell or exchange so as to suit those who will be so kind as to patronize us; having been long in the business, we think to give entire satisfaction. Farmers having wheat or other grain in the country will do well to leave it at their store, on Parley street, one block east of Main.

Hancock C. C. v. John Taylor, plaintiff, vs. John Greenhow, defendant.

In Attachment.

NOTICE is hereby given to the said John Greenhow that a writ of attachment has been sued out of the clerk's office of the Circuit Court of Hancock County, dated the tenth day of September A. D. 1844, at the suit of the said John Taylor, against the estate of the said John Greenhow, for the sum of two hundred dollars and eighty cents, directed to the Sheriff of said County of Hancock to execute, which writ has been returned by the Sheriff aforesaid, levied upon certain property belonging to you the said John Greenhow. Now unless you the said John Greenhow shall personally be and appear before the Circuit Court of said County of Hancock, on the first day of the next term thereof to be holden at the Court House in Carthage on the third Monday of October next, and plead to the said plaintiff's action, judgement will be rendered against you in favor of said plaintiff; and the estate so attached will be sold to satisfy the same with costs.

Witness J. B. Backenstos clerk of our said Circuit Court and the L.S. seal thereof at Carthage this twelfth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand and eight hundred and forty four.

J. B. BACKENSTOS, Clerk.

D. E. HEAD, Depy.

GRAPHIC SKETCH.

Edith Barrett, the learned blacksmith of Rhode Island, was the author of the following sketch. It is extracted from one of his lectures on genius, and alludes to the Natural Bridge in Virginia.

The scene opens with a view of the great Natural Bridge in Virginia. There are three or four boys standing in the channel below, looking up with awe to that vast arch of unknown rocks, which the Almighty bridged over those everlasting abutments. "The morning stars sang together." The little piece of sky spanning those measureless piers, is full of stars, although it is mid-day. It is almost five hundred feet from where they stand, up three perpendicular bulwarks of limestone, to the key rock of that vast arch, which appears to them only of the size of a man's hand. The silence of death is rendered more impressive by the little stream that falls from rock to rock down the channel.

The sun is darkened, and the boys have unconsciously uncovered their heads, as if standing in the presence of a chamber of the Majesty of the whole earth. At last this feeling begins to wear away; they begin to look around them. They see the names of hundreds cut in the limestone abutments. A new feeling comes over their young hearts, and their knives are in hands in an instant. "What man has done, man can undo," is their watchword, while they drew themselves up and carved their names a foot above those of a hundred full-grown men who had been there before them.

They are all satisfied with this feat of physical exertion, except one; whose example illustrates perfectly the forgotten truth, that there is no royal road to intellectual eminence. This ambitious youth sees a name just above his reach, a name that will be given in the memory of the world, when those of Alexander, Caesar, and Napoleon shall rot in oblivion. He was the name of Washington. Before he marched with Bunker to the fatal field, he had been there, and left his name a foot above all his predecessors. It was a glorious thought of the boy, to write his name side by side with that of the great father of his country. He grasps his knife with a flinty hand, and clinging to a little jagged crag, he contemplates the limestone, about a foot above where he stands; he then reaches up and cuts another for his hands. (It is a dangerous adventure; but as he puts his feet and hands into those gorges, and draws himself up carefully to his full length, he finds himself a foot above every name chronicled in that mighty wall. While his companions are regarding him with concern and admiration, he cuts his name in rude capitals; large and deep, into that flinty album. His knife is still in his hand, and strength in his sinews, and a few created aspirations in his heart.)

Again he cuts another niche, and again he carves his name in large capitals. This is not enough. Heedless of the entreaties of his companions, he cuts and chisels again. The gradations of his ascending scale grow wider apart. He measures his length at every gain in cuts. The voices of his friends were weaker and weaker, till their words are finally lost in his ear. He now for the first time casts a look beneath him. Had that glance lasted a moment, that moment would have been his last. He clings with a convulsive shudder to his little niche in the rock. An awful abyss awaits his almost certain fall. He is faint with severe exertion, and trembling from the sudden view of the dreadful destruction to which he is exposed. His knife is worn half way to the hilt. He can hear voices, but not the words of his terror-stricken companions below. What a moment! What a narrow chance to escape destruction! There is no retreating step. It is impossible to put his hands into the same niche with his feet and retain his slender hold a moment. His companions instantly perceive this new and fearful dilemma, and await his fall with emotions that freeze their young blood. He is too high, too faint, to ask for his father and mother, his brothers and sisters, to come and witness or assist his destruction. But one of his companions anticipates his desire; swift as the wind he bounds down the channel, and the sensation of the lap of boy is told upon his father's bonnet.

Minutes of almost eternal length roll on, and there are hundreds standing in that rocky channel and hundreds on the bridge above, all holding their breath, and awaiting the fearful catastrophe. The poor boy hears the roar of new and numerous voices both above and below. He can just distinguish the tones of his father, who is shouting with all the energy of despair, "William! William! don't look down! your mother and Henry and Harriet are all here praying for you! don't look down! keep your eye towards the top!" The boy dares not look down. His eye was fixed like a flint towards heaven, and his young heart on him who rides there. He grasps again his knife. He cuts another niche, and another foot is added to the hundreds that remove him from the reach of human help below. How carefully he used his wasting blade! How anxiously he selects the softest places in that vast rock! How he avoids every flinty grain! How he economizes his physical powers—resting a moment at each gain—he cuts. How every motion is watched from below. There stands his father, mother, brother and sister, on the very spot where, if he falls, he will not fall alone.

The sun is now half way down the west. The lad has made fifty additional niches in that mighty wall, and now finds himself directly under the middle of that arch of rocks, earth and trees. He must cut his way in a new direction to get from under this overhanging mountain. The inspiration of hope is dying in his bosom; his vital heat is fed by the increased shouts of hundreds perched upon cliffs and trees, and others who stand with ropes in their hands on the bridge above, or with ladders below. Fifty gains more must be cut before the longest rope can reach him. His worst blade strikes again into the limestone. The boy is emerging painfully, foot by foot, from under that lofty arch. Splice ropes are ready in the hands of those who are leaning over the outer edge of the bridge. Two minutes more and all will be over. That blade is worn to the last half inch. The boy's head reels; his eyes are starting from their sockets. His last hope is dying in his heart; his life must hang upon the next gain he cuts. That niche is his last. At the last faint gasp he makes, his knife, his faithful knife, falls from his nerveless hand, and ringing along the precipice, falls at his mother's feet. An involuntary groan of despair runs like a death-knell through the channel below, all is still as the grave. At the height of nearly three hundred feet, the devoted boy lifts his hopeless heart and closing eyes to commend his soul to God. "But a moment—there!—one foot swings off!—he is reeling—trembling—toppling over into eternity! Hark! a shout falls on his ears from above! The man who is lying with half his length over the bridge, has caught a glimpse of the boy's head and shoulders. Quick as thought the noosed rope is within reach of the sinking youth. No one breathes. "With a faint, convulsive effort, too swooning boy drops his arms into the noose. Darkness comes over him, and with the words, "God! God! mother! mother!" his lips just loud enough to be heard in heaven, the tightening rope lifts him out of his last shallow niche. Not a lip moves while he is hanging over that fearful abyss; but when a sturdy Virginian reaches down and draws up the lad, and holds him up in his arms before the fearful, breathless multitude, such shouting, such cheering and weeping for joy, never greeted the eye of human being so recovered from the yawning gulf of eternity. E. B.

Gov. Dorr.—The Rhode Island Herald says (and we regret to hear it) that Gov. Dorr is suffering from severe illness, and that his friends applied for such relaxation of the severity of the discipline to which he is subjected, as is deemed necessary for the preservation of his health—which was refused. The Providence Daily Advertiser on the other hand, avers that his general health is good, and there is no foundation for the rumor of illness. One of the editors of the Albany Atlas says, a week since he called at the prison in which Dorr is placed, and enquired concerning his health. The keeper refused to answer such inquiries; they "knew no person by the name of Dorr; when a criminal was imprisoned there, he was only known by the number of his cell."

The number of the cell being ascertained, the keeper was asked if he would permit a pass to go to see the prisoner. This was refused; and these simple enquiries were evidently regarded as insulting and offensive. We cannot perceive the justice of the policy of this harsh treatment to Gov. Dorr, and think that a great reaction in public opinion will be brought about, by which those who "feed power and forget right" may lose their control in the State. We want no stronger proof, that he is not considered as a criminal, by those who oppose him than this single fact: "If Dorr," say they, "will abjure his political views in relation to the existing Government of the State, and will take the oath of allegiance to the Constitution, and request to be released, he will be released." This opinion or declaration has been made and expressed, and is not denied. It is a fatal admission for a conservative, proves that they do not consider Gov. Dorr as a criminal, but merely a person sentenced tyrannically to imprisonment for life for matters of opinion, and if he will renounce those opinions, they will open his prison doors. Dorr thus incarcerated cannot surrender his opinion to a trial by his liberty. They should at all events treat him as a prisoner of State, and with humanity.

Hellerberg's Letter.—On Tuesday, Sheriff Patterson left this city in a wagon, accompanied by Deputy Leonard, for the Hellerberg, to serve process on the tenants of the Manor of Rensselaerwyck. He was, we understand, refused admittance in the tavern and private houses on the road, and was forced to sleep that night in the barn of Mr. Van Laven, a tavern keeper of Berne. Attempts were made during the night to enter the place, but the Sheriff who was armed, threatened to punish the first man who should enter and so kept his castle safe till morning. In the morning he proceeded on his route, and about noon his horse was shot twice, once with small shot and again with bullets, by outlaws disguised as Indians. He subsequently, in the day, captured two of the persons engaged in the outrage, but they escaped. He returned to the city last night. One man with whom he had a conflict during the day, had the Sheriff arrested this morning for assault and battery.

The story of the capture of the Sheriff which was published in the Journal of last night, grew out of the imperfect rumor which reached this city of resistance offered to him and prolonged absence. — Albany Atlas.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

MR. FOSTER, is now prepared to take Likenesses, by the Daguerreotype process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or coloured, at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Ivins's Store. By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other method which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of optical instrument. Only two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotypes) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one, upon first beholding the effects of the art; and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature's own up in her every lineament and feature and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend.

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, and at the Nauvoo Mansion; Price only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case. Instructions in the Art, given upon reasonable terms, and Apparatus for sale.

TO THE FARMERS AROUND NAUVOO AND VICINITY.

THOSE brethren who want to exchange their grain, pork, beef, potatoes &c., for property, wearing apparel &c., would do well to give the Temple committee a call. They would be glad to exchange any kind of property in their hands for grain, inasmuch as provisions are most wanted to carry on the work.

A CERTAIN Cure for Bowel Complaints. (No cure no pay) prepared and sold on Main street by July 30-3m EPHRAIM S. GREEN.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

THESE celebrated Lozenges are now offered to the citizens of Nauvoo and the West, as the best preparations for the cure of the various diseases for which they are recommended; ever offered to the public. The proprietor, Dr. Sherman, is a regular graduate of Medicine, a member of the Medical Society of the city and county of New York, and these Lozenges are prepared from medical prescriptions which have been approved by the most celebrated physicians in that city; in addition to which they are prepared in so pleasant a manner that children eat them with avidity and cry for more. They consist of

COUGH LOZENGES.
Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.
The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.
For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, Lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after disipation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CAUTION.
The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.
These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.
This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents,) brings it within the reach of every person in the community. A large supply of these celebrated articles just received and for sale at this office.

OSPREY.

REGULAR WEEKLY PACKET, TO NAUVOO AND BLOOMINGTON, IOWA.

THE new light draught swift passenger steamer OSPREY, Anderson Master, will leave St. Louis every Friday at 4 o'clock p. m. for Nauvoo, and arriving at Bloomington every Sunday evening. On her downward trip she will leave Bloomington at 7 o'clock a. m. Monday morning and pass New Boston, Oquawka, Burlington and Fort Madison Sunday; Tuesday will leave Nauvoo at 8 1/2 o'clock a. m. precisely, and arrive in St. Louis Wednesday forenoon.

The accommodations and safety of the Osprey are unsurpassed by any boat in the Upper Mississippi trade, and from her being of very tight draught will be enabled to cross the rapids during the lowest stage of water. In attention to the interest of shippers and passengers no exertion will be spared by Captain Anderson and crew to render it pleasant to all who patronize her. She is supplied with Evans's Patent Safety Guard, to prevent explosion of her boilers, as also a Fire Engine and Hose attached in case of accident by fire. It is respectfully announced to shippers and passengers that in no case the Osprey can be detained beyond the hours advertised.

MY NATIVE STREAM.

My native stream, my native stream,
How oft I hear the moon's war-beam
I've seen thee thy flowery banks along,
And sight thy accents grows among.

Yea, whither, my heart, why is it that
In such pure scenes of happiness
That one young—singing—
Should find the quiet with a sigh?

'Tis that the cruel hand of time
Is blotting mine in its prime.
To you, ye powers of gloom and dell,
I give ye, so soon to bid farewell.

And will, thy not a minute turn
To gladden the day's sunbeams?
They may—but fount and leafless tree
Ere then may bid adieu to me!

'Tis that one late is there and mine,
That makes my heart within me pine—
And while the green leaves rustle by,
'Tis that which prompts the pensive sigh.

NIGHT.

O! night is beautiful! the sky
Which spreads its brilliant robe on high
The moon beams soft and clear, which Sleep

In dozing beauty on the steep!
Or should the air and foaming sea
In light and shadow, and in mystery,
Speak in whispering tones that night
Is fair and beautiful and bright!

O! night is terrible! the gloom—
The awful stillness of the tomb—
The restless breeze which sighs
The solemn brow of a mountain wood—
The light forms which float around
And fit and flit without a sound
All breathe in chilling whispering tone,
That night is terrible and lone!

HAPPINESS.

Is it in wealth? Go probe the breast
Of fortune's son, and you will find Ah, why does sorrow's woe infect,
And anguish canker there?

Is it in fame?—or empty breath,
Inconstant as the breeze,
Will blast upon the laurel wreath,
That life it found to please.

Is it in friendship, or in love?
Alas! they quick decay;
The tears of hapless sorrow prove,
How frail their boasted stay.

'Tis not in all that here excels;
'Tis not in folly's round;
But with luxuriant love it dwells;
And there alone is found.

JOE SMITH AND THE DEVIL.

A DIALOGUE.

[Enter Devil with a bundle of handbills, which he is in the act of posting.]

WANTED IMMEDIATELY.

All the liars, swindlers, thieves, robbers, incendiaries, murderers, cheats, adulterers, barbers, blackguards, drunkards, gamblers, bogus makers, idlers, busy bodies, pickpockets, vagabonds, filch persons, hireling clergy, and their followers, and all other infidels, and rebellious, disorderly persons, for a crusade against Joe Smith and the Mormons. Be quick, be quick, I say, or our cause will be ruined, and our kingdom overthrown by that damned fool of an impostor and his associates, for given now all earth and hell is in a stew.

[Joe Smith happens to be passing, and halts his Majesty.]

Good morning, Mr. Devil. How now you seem to be much engaged; what news have you got there?

Devil—(slipping his bills into his pocket with a low bow) O! good morning Mr. Smith; hope you are well, sir. Why—I was just out—out on a little business in my line, or, figuratively, to be candid, sir, I was contriving a fair and honorable warfare against you and your impostors, wherein piety is outraged, and religion, greatly hindered in its useful course.

For, to be bold, sir (and I despise anything underhand), I must tell you to your face that you have made me more trouble than all the ministers, or people of my whole dominion, have for ages past.

Smith—Trouble! what trouble have I caused your Majesty? I certainly have endeavored to treat you, and all other persons, in a friendly manner, even my worst enemies; and I always aim to fulfill the Mormon creed, and that is to mind my own business exclusively. Why should this trouble you, Mr. Devil?

Devil—Ah! your own business, indeed! I know not what you may consider your own business, it is so very complicated; but I know what you have done, and what you are aiming to do. You have disturbed the quiet of Christendom, overthrown churches and societies, you have dared to call in question the truth and usefulness of old and established creeds, which have stood the test of ages; and have even caused tens of thousands to come out in open rebellion, not only against wholesome creeds, established forms, and doctrines, well approved and orthodox, but against some of the most pious, learned, exemplary, and honorable clergy, whom both myself and all the world, love, honor, and esteem, and this is not all.

But you are causing many persons to think who never thought before, and you would fain put the whole world to thinking, and then where will true religion and piety be?

Alas! they will have no place among men, for if men keep such a terrible thinking and reasoning as they begin to do since you commenced your business, you will find they never will continue to uphold the good old way in which they have jogged along in peace for so many ages, and thus, Mr. Smith, you will overthrow my kingdom, and leave me not a foot of ground on earth, and this is the very thing you aim at. But I, sir, have the boldness to oppose you by every lawful means in my power.

Smith—Really, Mr. Devil, your Majesty has of late become very pious. I think some of your Christian brethren have greatly misrepresented you. It is generally reported by them that you are opposed to religion. But—

Devil—It is false; there is not a more religious and pious being in the world than myself, nor a being more liberal minded. I am decidedly in favor of all creeds, systems, and forms of Christianity of whatever name or nature; so long as they leave out that abominable doctrine which caused me so much trouble in former times, and which, after slowworm for ages, you have again revived; I mean the doctrine of direct communion with God, by new revelation. This is hateful, it is impious, it is directly opposed to the divisions and branches of the Christian Church. I never could bear it. And for this very cause I helped to bring to condign punishment all the prophets and apostles of old, for while they were suffered to live with this gift of revelation, they were always exposing and slandering me, and all other good pious men in exposing our deeds and purposes, which they called wicked, but which we considered the light of zeal and piety; and when we killed them for these crimes of denying prophecy, and vision seeing, they raised the cry of persecution, and so it is with you miserable deluded Mormons.

Smith—Then your most Christian Majesty is in favor of all other religions but this one, is he not?

Devil—Certainly. I am fond of praying, singing, church building, bell ringing, going to meetings, preaching, and withal I have quite a missionary zeal. I like a long face, long prayers, long robes, and learned sermons; nothing suits me better, than to see people who have been for a whole week expressing their neighbor, grinding the face of the poor, while with all their heart, I say suits me better, than to see these people go to meeting on Sundays with a long religious face on, and to see them pay a portion of their ill-gotten gains for the support of a priest, while he and his hearers pray with doleful groans and awful faces, saying, "Lord, we have left undone the things we ought to have done, and done the things we ought not; and then, when service is ended, see them turn again to their wickedness and pursue it greedily all the week, and the next Sabbath repeat the same things. Now be candid, Mr. Smith; do you not see that these and all others, who have a form and don't the power, are my good Christian children, and that their religion is a help to my cause?

Smith—Certainly, your reasoning is clear and obvious as to these hypocrites, but you would not be pleased with people getting converted either by compulsion or some where else, and then putting their trust in that conversion, and free grace to save them—would you not be opposed to this?

Devil—Why should I have any objection to that kind of religion, Mr. Smith? Leave not how much they get converted, nor much they cry, Lord, Lord, nor how much they trust to free grace to save them, so long as they do not do the works that their God has commanded them: I am sure of them at last, for you know all men are to be judged according to their deeds. What does their good old Bible say? Does it not say, "not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into my kingdom, but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven." No, no, Mr. Smith, I am not an enemy to religion, and especially to the modern forms of Christianity, so long as they deny the power, they are a help to my cause; so much disorder, division, hatred, envy, strife, lying, contentions, blindness, and even war and bloodshed has been produced as the effect of these very systems. By these means I gain millions to my dominion, while at the same time we enjoy the credit of being pious Christians; but you, Mr. Smith, you are my enemy, my open and avowed enemy, you have ever led in a spirit of our manner to teach, and from all these fine systems, and to commence an open attack upon my kingdom, and this even when I had almost a Christendom together with the clergy and gentlemen of the press, in my favor.

How dare you venture thus to commence a revolution without resources, and without aid or succor, and in the midst of innumerable hosts of my subjects?

Smith—Why, sir, in the first place, I know that I had the truth on my side, and that your systems and forms of Christianity were so manifestly corrupt, that one and only to lift the veil from your fooleries on one side, and to present plain and sensible truth on the other, and the eyes of the people could at once distinguish the difference so clearly that, except they chose darkness rather than light, they would leave your ranks and come over to truth. For instance, what is easier than to show from the history of the past, that a religion of direct revelation was the only system ever instituted by the Lord, and the only one calculated to benefit mankind? What is easier than to show that this system saved the church from flood, famine, flames, war, division, bondage, doubt, and darkness many times, and that it is the legitimate way and manner of God's government of his own peculiar people in all ages and dispensations.

Devil—To be candid with you, Mr. Smith, I must own that what you have now said, neither myself nor my most able ministers have been able to gainst by any argument or fact. But, then, you must collect that tradition and custom, together with fashion and popular clamor, have all ages had more effect than plain fact and sound reason. Hence, you see, we have yet so long as we continue the way from press and pulpit, and in Sunday schools, that all these things are no longer needed. In this way, though God may think they will not hear; angels may minister, and they will not be enlightened; prophets may lift their voice, and their warnings pass unheeded; so you see, we still have them at safe as we had the people in olden time. God can communicate no message to them which will be examined or heard with any degree of credence or candor. So for all they get from God, all communication being cut off, they must as well be without a God. You see I have full influence and control of the multitude by a means far more effectual than argument or reason, and I even teach them that it is a sin to reason, think, or investigate; as if it would diminish the tenor of their pious brotherly and devout grins and responses. Smith you must be extremely ignorant of human nature, as well as of the history of the past, to presume that reason and truth would have much effect with this multitude. Why, sir, look how effectually we warred of the truth of Ephesus when Paul attempted to address them in the theatre. Strange that with all these examples before you, you should venture to rise the hue and cry which has been so oft defeated, and this with no better weapons on your side than reason and truth. Indeed, you may think my Christian spirit and forbearance that you have escaped so far without a grid iron; but take care of the future, I may not always be so mild.

Smith—But why is your Majesty so highly excited against me and my plans of operation, seeing that you consider that you have the multitude perfectly satisfied, and why so enraged and so fearful of the consequences of my course, and the effect of my weapons, while at the same time you profess to despise them as weak and powerless. Alas, it is too true that you have the multitude safe to all appearance at present, and that truth can seldom reach them; why, then, do you content and leave me to pursue my calling in peace? I can hardly hope to win to the cause of truth any but the few who think, and these have ever been rough-some to your cause.

Devil—True but when you are, in spite of all my efforts, and that of my fellows, daily thinning our ranks by adding to the number of those who think, and such a thinking is kept up that we are often exposed in some of our most prominent plans, and are placed in an awkward predicament, and who knows what defeat, disgrace, and dishonor may befall this pious cause if you are suffered to continue your rebellious cause.

Smith—But, Mr. Devil, why, with all these advantages on your side, do you resort to such mean, weak, and silly fabrications as the Spaulding Story. You profess to be a gentleman, a Christian, and a clergyman, and you ought for your own sake, and for the sake of your cause, to keep up outward appearances of honor and fairness. And now, Mr. Devil, all the truth for once; you know perfectly well that your Spaulding Story, in which you represent me as an impostor, in connection with Sidney Rigdon, and that we were engaged in palming off Solomon Spaulding's romance upon the world as the Book of Mormon, is a lie; a base fabrication, without a shadow of truth, and you know that I found the Original Records of the Nephites, and translated and published the Book of Mormon from them, without ever having heard of the existence of Spaulding, or his romance, or of Sidney Rigdon either. Now, Mr. Devil, this was a mean, disgraceful, and underhanded trick in you, and one of which even you have reason to be ashamed.

Devil—Mr. Smith, to be candid, I acknowledge that what you say is true, and that it was not the most honorable course in the world. But it was you who commenced the war, by publishing that terrible book which we readily recognized as a complete expose of all our false and corrupt Christianity, not even keeping back the fact that we had contrived during the dark ages, to rob the scriptures of their plain sense, and we feel the utmost alarm and excitement, and without much reflection, in the height of passion, we called a half council of the clergy and laity, and other persons in Painesville, Ohio, and, thinking that almost any means was lawful in war, we invented the Spaulding story, and fished it upon the multitude as greedily as a young robin swallows a worm when it is dropped into his mouth, which is stretched at full width, with its eyes are closed. So you see, Mr. Smith, that without meaning any particular harm to you, I have my fun, and am besides so ungovernably fortunate as to retain great advantage from circumstances which I had neither expected or calculated. So I hope you will at least bear my folly, nor set down ought in my tale, where no malice was intended.

You know we devils are poor miserable creatures at best, and were it not for our fun, and our gambling, and our religious exercises, we should have nothing to kill time.

Smith—Well, well. I see plainly you will have a creep out some how or other, rather than bear the disgrace and stigma which your conduct would seem to deserve. But forgetting the past, let me enquire what course you intend to pursue in future, and whether this warfare between you and me, will still be prosecuted? And if so, what course you intend to pursue hereafter? You know my course; I have long since taken the lead at the head of a mere handful of brave patriots, who are true as the pole stars and firm as the rocks of Gibraltar. They laugh at and despise your silly stories, and with nothing but a few plain simple weapons of truth and reason, aided by revelation, we boldly make war upon your whole dominion, and will never quit the field, dead or alive, till we win the battle, and deprive you of every foot of ground you possess. This is our purpose, and although your enemy, I am bold and generous enough to declare it. So you see, I am not for taking any unwary advantage, notwithstanding all your pious tricks upon us and the public.

Devil—I am too much of the gentleman not to admire your generous frankness and your boldness, and too much of a Christian not to appreciate your honesty; but as you commenced this war, and I only acted at first on the defensive, with the pure motive of defending my kingdom, I think this ought in some degree at least to excuse the means I have made use of. And that you may have no reason to complain in future, I will now frankly open to you the plan of my future campaign. Here (pulling out his bundle of handbills) is what I was doing this morning, when by chance we met; and by the reading of which, you will see my course. Heretofore I have endeavored to throw contempt upon your course, in hopes to smother it and to keep it under, as something beneath the notice of us well-informed Christians. For this cause I have generally caused it to be represented, that you was a very ignorant silly man; and that your followers were made up of the unthinking, and vulgar, and not worthy of notice. But the fact is, you have made such rapid strides, and have poured forth such a torrent of intelligence, and gathered such a host of talented and thinking men around you, that I can no longer conceal, these facts under a bushel of burning lies, and therefore I now change my purpose, and manner of attack. I shall endeavor to magnify you and your success from this time forward, and to make you appear as much larger than the reality, as you have heretofore fallen short. If my former course has excited contempt and caused you to be despised, and thus kept you out of notice, my future course will be to excite jealousy, fear and alarm in all the world, ready to arise and oppose you, as if you were a region of Samson, commanded by Bonaparte. Thus I shall be more successful in putting you down, than the ignoble course I have heretofore taken—so prepare for the worst.

Smith—I care as little for your magnifying powers, as I have heretofore done for your contempt; in fact I will endeavor to go ahead to that degree, that what you will say in regard to my great influence and power, though intended by you for falsehood, shall prove to be true, and by so doing I shall be prepared to receive those whom you may excite against me, and to give them so warm a reception, that they will never discover your intended falsehood, but will find all your representations of my greatness to be a reality—so do your worst, I defy you.

Devil—Well, time will determine whether the earth is to be governed by a prophet, and under the sway of truth, or whether myself and my Christian friends will still prevail. But remember, Smith, remember, I beseech you for your own good, beware what you are doing. I have the priests and editors, with a few exceptions, under my control, together with wealth, popularity and honor. Count with the cost before you plunge again into this warfare. Good bye Mr. Smith, I must away to raise my recruits and prepare for a campaign.

Devil—(Recollecting himself and suddenly turning back) O! say Mr. Smith, one word more, if you please. (In a low and confidential tone, with his mouth close to his ear)—after all, what is the use of parting as enemies? the fact is, you go in for the wheat, and I for the tares. Both must be harvested; are not we fellow laborers? I can make no use of the wheat, nor you of the tares, even if we had them; we each claim our own, I for the wheat and you for the tares. Come, then, give the poor old Devil his due, and let's be friends.

Smith—Agreed! I neither want yours, nor you mine—a man free from prejudice will give the devil his due. Come here is the right hand of fellowship, you to the tares, and I to the wheat—(they shake hands cordially.)

Devil—Well Mr. Smith we have talked a long while, and are agreed at last—you are a noble and generous fellow, and would not bring a rail accusation against even a poor old Devil, nor cheat him of one cent. Come it's a warm day, and I feel as though it was my treat. Let us go down to mammie Brewster's cellar and take something to drink.

Smith—Agreed! Mr. Devil, you appear very generous now.

(They enter the cellar together.)

Devil—Good morning Mrs. Brewster, I make you acquainted with my good friend Mr. Smith the prophet. (The landlady, smiling and looking a little surprised, why, Mr. Devil, is that you; sit down, you're tired; but you don't say this is Mr. Smith, your greatest enemy? I am quite surprised. What will you have gentlemen, for if you can drink together, I think all the world ought to be friends.)

Devil—As we are both temperance men, and ministers, I think perhaps a glass of spruce beer a piece will be all right; what say you Mr. Smith.

Smith—As you please, your majesty. (They now take the beer.)

Devil—(Holding up his glass) Come, Mr. Smith, your good health, I propose we each offer a toast.

Smith—Well, proceed.

Devil—Here's to my good friend Joe Smith; may all sorts of ill-luck befall him, and may he never be suffered to enter my kingdom, either in time or eternity, for he would almost make me forget that I am a devil, and make a gentleman of me, while he gently overthrows my government, at the same time that he wins my friendship.

Smith—Here's to his Satanic Majesty; may he be driven from the earth, and be forced to put to sea in a stone canoe, and an iron paddle, and may the canoe sink, and a shark swallow the canoe and its Royal freight, and an alligator swallow the shark; and may the rigger be bound in the north west corner of hell, and the door be locked, and the key lost, and a blind man hunting for it.

(Exit Devil, Prophet, and all.)

"Well cuff," said Judge Paine one day, "did you know the devil was dead?" "No, massa, but I heard he was in pain."

True religion is a refuge inaccessible to either fraud or the violence of men; happy are they who know it to be their shelter in the day of their trouble.

Advertisements.—Some years ago, the courts of justice in Dublin were adjoining to a range of dull, heavy buildings, called Hell, no doubt from the obscurity of the place. The following advertisement appeared in one of the newspapers:

"To be let, a suit of apartments in Hell, ready furnished."

"N. B.—They will be found very convenient for a lawyer."

to keep up outward appearances of honor and fairness. So you see, Mr. Smith, that without meaning any particular harm to you, I have my fun, and am besides so ungovernably fortunate as to retain great advantage from circumstances which I had neither expected or calculated. So I hope you will at least bear my folly, nor set down ought in my tale, where no malice was intended.

You know we devils are poor miserable creatures at best, and were it not for our fun, and our gambling, and our religious exercises, we should have nothing to kill time.

Smith—Well, well. I see plainly you will have a creep out some how or other, rather than bear the disgrace and stigma which your conduct would seem to deserve. But forgetting the past, let me enquire what course you intend to pursue in future, and whether this warfare between you and me, will still be prosecuted? And if so, what course you intend to pursue hereafter? You know my course; I have long since taken the lead at the head of a mere handful of brave patriots, who are true as the pole stars and firm as the rocks of Gibraltar. They laugh at and despise your silly stories, and with nothing but a few plain simple weapons of truth and reason, aided by revelation, we boldly make war upon your whole dominion, and will never quit the field, dead or alive, till we win the battle, and deprive you of every foot of ground you possess. This is our purpose, and although your enemy, I am bold and generous enough to declare it. So you see, I am not for taking any unwary advantage, notwithstanding all your pious tricks upon us and the public.

Devil—I am too much of the gentleman not to admire your generous frankness and your boldness, and too much of a Christian not to appreciate your honesty; but as you commenced this war, and I only acted at first on the defensive, with the pure motive of defending my kingdom, I think this ought in some degree at least to excuse the means I have made use of. And that you may have no reason to complain in future, I will now frankly open to you the plan of my future campaign. Here (pulling out his bundle of handbills) is what I was doing this morning, when by chance we met; and by the reading of which, you will see my course. Heretofore I have endeavored to throw contempt upon your course, in hopes to smother it and to keep it under, as something beneath the notice of us well-informed Christians. For this cause I have generally caused it to be represented, that you was a very ignorant silly man; and that your followers were made up of the unthinking, and vulgar, and not worthy of notice. But the fact is, you have made such rapid strides, and have poured forth such a torrent of intelligence, and gathered such a host of talented and thinking men around you, that I can no longer conceal, these facts under a bushel of burning lies, and therefore I now change my purpose, and manner of attack. I shall endeavor to magnify you and your success from this time forward, and to make you appear as much larger than the reality, as you have heretofore fallen short. If my former course has excited contempt and caused you to be despised, and thus kept you out of notice, my future course will be to excite jealousy, fear and alarm in all the world, ready to arise and oppose you, as if you were a region of Samson, commanded by Bonaparte. Thus I shall be more successful in putting you down, than the ignoble course I have heretofore taken—so prepare for the worst.

Smith—I care as little for your magnifying powers, as I have heretofore done for your contempt; in fact I will endeavor to go ahead to that degree, that what you will say in regard to my great influence and power, though intended by you for falsehood, shall prove to be true, and by so doing I shall be prepared to receive those whom you may excite against me, and to give them so warm a reception, that they will never discover your intended falsehood, but will find all your representations of my greatness to be a reality—so do your worst, I defy you.

Devil—Well, time will determine whether the earth is to be governed by a prophet, and under the sway of truth, or whether myself and my Christian friends will still prevail. But remember, Smith, remember, I beseech you for your own good, beware what you are doing. I have the priests and editors, with a few exceptions, under my control, together with wealth, popularity and honor. Count with the cost before you plunge again into this warfare. Good bye Mr. Smith, I must away to raise my recruits and prepare for a campaign.

Devil—(Recollecting himself and suddenly turning back) O! say Mr. Smith, one word more, if you please. (In a low and confidential tone, with his mouth close to his ear)—after all, what is the use of parting as enemies? the fact is, you go in for the wheat, and I for the tares. Both must be harvested; are not we fellow laborers? I can make no use of the wheat, nor you of the tares, even if we had them; we each claim our own, I for the wheat and you for the tares. Come, then, give the poor old Devil his due, and let's be friends.

Smith—Agreed! I neither want yours, nor you mine—a man free from prejudice will give the devil his due. Come here is the right hand of fellowship, you to the tares, and I to the wheat—(they shake hands cordially.)

Devil—Well Mr. Smith we have talked a long while, and are agreed at last—you are a noble and generous fellow, and would not bring a rail accusation against even a poor old Devil, nor cheat him of one cent. Come it's a warm day, and I feel as though it was my treat. Let us go down to mammie Brewster's cellar and take something to drink.

Smith—Agreed! Mr. Devil, you appear very generous now.

(They enter the cellar together.)

Devil—Good morning Mrs. Brewster, I make you acquainted with my good friend Mr. Smith the prophet. (The landlady, smiling and looking a little surprised, why, Mr. Devil, is that you; sit down, you're tired; but you don't say this is Mr. Smith, your greatest enemy? I am quite surprised. What will you have gentlemen, for if you can drink together, I think all the world ought to be friends.)

Devil—As we are both temperance men, and ministers, I think perhaps a glass of spruce beer a piece will be all right; what say you Mr. Smith.

Smith—As you please, your majesty. (They now take the beer.)

Devil—(Holding up his glass) Come, Mr. Smith, your good health, I propose we each offer a toast.

Smith—Well, proceed.

Devil—Here's to my good friend Joe Smith; may all sorts of ill-luck befall him, and may he never be suffered to enter my kingdom, either in time or eternity, for he would almost make me forget that I am a devil, and make a gentleman of me, while he gently overthrows my government, at the same time that he wins my friendship.

Smith—Here's to his Satanic Majesty; may he be driven from the earth, and be forced to put to sea in a stone canoe, and an iron paddle, and may the canoe sink, and a shark swallow the canoe and its Royal freight, and an alligator swallow the shark; and may the rigger be bound in the north west corner of hell, and the door be locked, and the key lost, and a blind man hunting for it.

(Exit Devil, Prophet, and all.)

"Well cuff," said Judge Paine one day, "did you know the devil was dead?" "No, massa, but I heard he was in pain."

True religion is a refuge inaccessible to either fraud or the violence of men; happy are they who know it to be their shelter in the day of their trouble.

Advertisements.—Some years ago, the courts of justice in Dublin were adjoining to a range of dull, heavy buildings, called Hell, no doubt from the obscurity of the place. The following advertisement appeared in one of the newspapers:

"To be let, a suit of apartments in Hell, ready furnished."

"N. B.—They will be found very convenient for a lawyer."

No one, my friend, is now heard speak of crisis, of a want of hard money

(and this want is absolute) of the duty of our products, of complaints against the Congress, or the public authority. On what importance are all these political topics to us now! all are absorbed in the last misfortune that has prostrated us, the new deluge that has submerged and devastated San Fernando.

San Fernando may now be said not to exist. The river began to rise in May last, and continued until it covered the entire surface of the land, and in spite of our most efficient, active and constant efforts to save ourselves, by opposing barriers and dykes to the force of the waters, the Agave has at last reached the height of two yards above the general level of the land, and has inundated the entire community. The houses have also been flooded in all parts, and notwithstanding we exerted our individual endeavors to oppose the advance of the waters by new entrenchments, they have been filled to the height of two, four and six feet; some have washed away and fallen, while those that remain, although they still resist the dashing of the waters, must eventually submit to the their power and fall.

The streets are so many rivers in which the rapid current is scouring and penetrating deeper and deeper; already deep wells and ditches are formed, which, after the waters have retired to the bed of the river, will require much earth, much time, and many thousands of dollars to obliterate and level.

Some families have formed under their roofs large hammocks, in which they thought to remain in safety during the violent tempest; others gathered themselves in the highest places that remained above the water, judging that the deluge would last but a few days. The rise of the waters, however, continued and every thing has been covered for some weeks, excepting only a few houses which were defended by high dykes and parapets; at last, the population, en masse, resigned the city to its fate, and resolved to emigrate.

The Municipal Council met, in conjunction with the principal inhabitants, at 8 o'clock in the evening of the 16th of July, and then determined to remove the families to San Juan de Payara; they put in requisition all the barges and small vessels, and the day following began the movement. San Juan and Carimagua have been filled with the emigrants from our deserted city, and there now remain but very few families, and these are enduring a thousand sufferings and privations; some of them have taken refuge in anchored barges.

It is frightful to see the few that yet stop in their houses, surrounded as in a siege; they appear at their windows contemplating the waves of the river as they roll impetuously more than a yard in height over the saturated land on which they had been accustomed to walk. But what do I see? there is now no such river as Agave; it embraces in its course the Potuguez, the Guarico, the Payara and the Aranca; it stretches 24 leagues in width, reaching from Banco Largo, in the Province of Caracas, to beyond the Orinoco in the Apure. And in this ocean of fresh water there are only to be seen some small islands on which men and beasts, cattle and dogs, wild beasts and reptiles closely press, flying from the fatal element which threatens to devour them. We caught two tigers in the very centre of the population, and have also killed many snakes; a catman was encountered and killed in that which was one of the principal streets of the city.

There are now no houses, no estates, no settlements; all has been leveled and destroyed by the fury of the inundation. Nor have we even a place in which to bury the dead. Should the flood continue a month longer, we shall see the dead bodies of men, women and children, with those of the wild beasts of the mountains and domestic animals, all floating together upon the devastating waters.

The inhabitants of this province have applied to the Executive power for aid to alleviate their necessities. We hope that the Government will come promptly and generously to the rescue. We have suffered more than Barinas and Maturin, who were both succored by Congress. Barinas and Maturin suffered by fire; they lost their houses, but we have lost our houses, our fields, a great number of animals, and that which is still worse, an entire year of labor, our crops and our hopes.

We have nothing to add; our losses are inexpressible; we have arrived at the climax of misfortune and calamity. We beg you to give place in your valuable journal to this pallid description of our conflicts and our miseries; may Providence look on us with eyes of mercy, and may the Government of our country not suffer to perish the last remains of a province that has afforded such important services in the disastrous war of Independence! Sincerely yours,

From the Louisiana State Register.

We learn that his Excellency Gov. Ford, has called out 2500 of the Militia of the State, in consequence of the reception of information here, that the anti-Mormon party of Hancock county, had issued handbills, for the assembly of a military meeting at Warsaw, on the 27th of this month. We learn also that this handbill requests the presence of the people of Missouri on that day, armed, &c. We trust no good citizen of Missouri will enter this State, with any hostile purpose towards any of its citizens; and we trust no citizen of our own State will violate the laws, by an armed attack upon the constituted authorities; such hostile attack is TREASON, by the general laws of the country, and conviction under the laws, subjects the guilty to the punishment of death.

Under the circumstances we feel confident the militia of the State will promptly respond to the call of the Executive, for the preservation of the public peace, and to prevent the violation of the constitution and laws of the State. We live in a land where the laws must be supported by the people themselves; for they are enacted only by their consent and approbation. The great experiment, whether man can govern himself, without the intervention of a King, it is the duty of every patriot to sustain; and we feel confident no American freeman will stand idle, in such an emergency, when called upon by the legally constituted authorities, to take part on the side of the laws and institutions of his country.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Great Western brought four regular files of English and Scotch papers. We extract the following:

Hardships of the "Captivity."—The handsome dungeon in which the conspirators are immured has had such a marvellous effect upon the ring-leader of them, that with fish and flesh—strawberries and clotted cream—champagne and claret—gunpowder tea and Bulstrope cakes—sleeping on nights on feather beds, and sporting o'days at the gymnasium, he is absolutely renewing his youth and beauty. Mr. Reilly, who, "about an hour previously had the honor" of measuring him for a gymnastic jacket and found him stouter in the girth by a couple of inches, is our author: "he had just," he said, "quitted the prison for the purpose of coming down to the Association, and had left Mr. O'Connell practicing gymnastics (laughter) so that when the period of his incarceration was expired, his strength of body would be not only considerably increased, but the grace of his attitude would be improved considerably, and the ladies when attending the first meeting at the Conciliation Hall, immediately after the termination of the captivity, would find the great leader of the Irish people looking more handsome, and decidedly more active than ever."—What a pity this excellent recipe for recruiting the health of a seigneurial agitator was not thought of years ago. His own constitution might have been much the better for it; and that of the country nothing worse. But we must be thankful—better late than never. [Dublin E. Mail.]

The June Fishery.—Owing to the heavy rains, and the consequent heavy "freshes" which have enabled "clean" salmon to ascend the river, large quantities of this delicious fish have been taken within the last few days. On Wednesday gillie, or morris, as they are locally termed, sold in our market at 5s., and full grown salmon at 6d. per pound. [Lancas. Guard.]

Sir Robert Peel—is reported to have said in the House of Commons on Wednesday, in answer to a question from Sir C. Napier:—"As to the arrest of Mr. Pritchard by the French authorities of Tahiti, presuming on the accuracy of which, I do not hesitate to say that a gross outrage, accompanied by a gross indignity has been committed upon this country in the person of its officer. (Hear hear) These accounts only reached us last Monday, but her majesty's government took immediate measures for vindicating the honor of the country, and this since been ascertained that this outrage was committed by persons in temporary authority at Tahiti. (Hear hear) Having ascertained this fact upon the authority of the French government, I must presume that immediate steps will be taken by that government to make that ample reparation which this country is entitled to demand. (Loud cheers.)"

In the House of Lords, on Thursday evening, the Earl of Aberdeen, in answer to a question from the Marquis of Lansdowne, very similar to that made by Sir Robt. Peel, and in answer to a further question from the Earl of Minto, the Earl of Haddington said that the "Indictment" had gone out to replace the "Collingwood" and that the "Collingwood" was just about to sail for the station, with the flag of Admiral Sir George Seymour, so that it would seem the government are quite alive to their duty in the matter. [Courier.]

American Hay.—We recently noticed an announcement, owing to the partial failure of our hay harvest, large importations of hay from Ireland, but what is still more rare, we see advertised for sale a quantity of "American hay," that was arrived per "Patrick Henry," from New York. We may really now exclaim "what next?"—for if unusual importations continue to arrive as rapidly hereafter as they have latterly poured in from America, Jonathan will consider crossing the Atlantic nothing more than going to market. [Ibid.]

Manslaughter of a Woman by her Husband.—Yesterday a man named Joseph Farrell, a cutter to fusian sheers, living in Sackville street was brought before Mr. Alderman Walker, at the borough court, charged with beating his wife and thereby causing her death. [Ibid.]

The jury also brought in a verdict of manslaughter. Another jury brought in a verdict of natural death, of persons that were starved to death.

CHURCH AND SLAVERY.

At the Methodist general conference for 1844, held in New York, the subject of slavery was brought up. The first object of investigation was F. A. Hardin, of Baltimore, a member of the conference, who had become a slaveholder by marrying a woman who owned a lot of slaves. The north and south were made a question of it; the north voted to suspend Mr. Hardin, and the south, surprised at the severity of the case, voted against it; both parties thought they acted according to the "Discipline."

A strong committee of six, three north and three south, were appointed, but as they could not agree, they were discharged; and in their own language, "then came the struggle in the case of Bishop Andrew. The committee on Episcopacy, under the special instruction of the conference, reported a statement of the facts, from which it appears beyond controversy that he was connected with slavery, and was in fact a slaveholder. A resolution was first introduced asking him to resign; but this was subsequently superseded by another declaring it to be the sense of the conference that he should cease to exercise the functions of his office until the impediment of his connection with slavery should no longer exist. The debate on this resolution lasted about a fortnight, the south occupying the largest share of the time. The north, with but few exceptions, contended that the resolution was the very last which could preserve the church here from destruction, while the south declared, without a dissenting voice, that its passage would bring disaster and ruin upon her. The former affirmed the lawfulness of the measure, while the latter strenuously maintained that it was extra-judicial and utterly subversive of the Discipline. The excitement was intense, and all hope of a compromise was apparently at an end. In these circumstances, the bishops interposed and endeavored to persuade the parties to postpone all action on the question until the next general conference, to be held in 1848. This proposition satisfied neither party, and was therefore dropped by general consent. Then came the final struggle—the resolution was put to vote and adopted by a large majority, nearly the whole north voting in its favor.

The south united in a strong protest against the proceeding, written by Dr. Bascom, of Kentucky, which was placed on the journal and referred to a committee of three on their part of the majority. This committee, of which Dr. Durbin was chairman, on the 1st day of the session submitted a reply to the protest which was also entered on the journal.

The lines having been thus distinctly drawn between the parties, the next step taken was to rescind the resolution of 1840, declaring it expedient to permit colored persons to give testimony in church trial, in all cases where such testimony is not allowed by the civil courts. This resolution had been a source of great trouble at the north, and it was repealed by a strong vote, without much discussion.

Thus defeated on every issue, the southern delegates united in a formal declaration that the further jurisdiction of the general conference over the conferences at the south would be inconsistent with the success of the ministry in this part of the country. This declaration was referred to a committee of nine, who were instructed, in case they could not succeed in making an amicable adjustment of the difficulty, to devise, if possible, a plan for a constitutional division of the church. The committee made their report on Friday, the 7th inst. They proposed to submit a proposition to the annual conferences for such an alteration of the restrictive articles of the Discipline as would permit the next general conference, in case the South should find it necessary to withdraw and form a new ecclesiastical organization, to make an amicable division of all the church property. This proposition was adopted by a nearly unanimous vote, and if sanctioned by the annual conferences, as it probably will be, the south will be free to secede from the church if she choose to do so. Whether she will do this or not, time only can determine.

This sudden ecclesiastical opposition to slavery, bolstered up by national prejudice, will eventually be the overthrow of the Methodist and American union, slavery and peace, unless each party gives up their rights.

Highly Important News from the Oregon Emigrants.—The "Independence" (Jackson co.) Expositor, of the 7th inst., furnishes us the following news:

Five men arrived in our town this week, direct from Fort Laramie. They bring news from the Oregon emigrants up to the 3d of August. They inform us that the last of the emigrants left Fort Laramie for Oregon Territory, on that day. From this to Fort Laramie is about 800 miles. The emigrants expected to reach their place of destination about the 1st of October. Our informant states that the emigrants were badly off for flour and bread stuffs, having nothing like a supply to carry them through. They could not get a supply at Fort Laramie, although there was a large quantity in Fort—the price being $40 per barrel, and could only be bought with cash.

The emigrants were well supplied with bacon—having a surplus on hand. It sold at the Fort at five cents per pound, and was rather dull than otherwise at that price. Their stock was generally in low order, and their teams were weak. This it was supposed was caused by the floods of rain which fell during the early part of their journey. It rained on them incessantly for the first two months of their trip, and nearly every water course they passed was swimming. They state that the water courses generally, from here to Big Platte, were unusually high the present season, which accounts for the great rise we had in the Missouri river this year. From the Big Platte on, the water courses have been quite low, and the weather generally dry.

The emigrants complained greatly of the hardships and fatigues of the trip, but their health was unusually good—no deaths having occurred during the entire route, with the exception of one said to have taken place in Gen. Gilliam's company.

The emigrants had divided, and formed themselves into several parties. This was owing to divisions which had taken place in the company. Fears were entertained that the emigrants would be harassed on their route by the Sioux Indians—their chief having dispatched a large war party for the purpose of attacking them on their way. A loss of stock was the only danger apprehended.

It was thought that the emigrants would reach Buffalo in about five or six days after leaving Fort Laramie, where they expected to lay in a sufficient supply of provisions to last them to their place of destination. The emigrants when they left Fort Laramie, were quite scarce of sugar and coffee. Maj. Harris was still acting as pilot, and gave universal satisfaction.

Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly.—Captain Grover received the following letter on Saturday evening:—

"I write this letter in the house of Naveb Sane Khan, the chief of the artillery and the arsenal of his Majesty the King of Bokhara, a sincere and excellent friend of the British nation, but in the presence also of his majesty the Ameer's mahram, (private chamberlain,) and I write this letter officially, by order of the King of Bokhara, to whom I gave a translation of the letter, and therefore confine myself only to the most necessary topics, without any observation.

"1st. On the 29th of April the King stated to me, by medium of the above named Naveb, and in the presence of Mullah Kasem, the King's mahram, (private chamberlain) that he had put to death, in the month of Sarrahan, 1250 (July 1842) Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly. The first had been put to death, firstly on account of his having treated royalty with the greatest disrespect on different occasions; secondly, that he had turned Mussulman, and then returned to the Christian's faith; thirdly, that he had promised to get letters from England in four months, by which he would be acknowledged ambassador from England, and fourteen months had elapsed without receiving any answer, though the King had erected jupar khums, or his account. And, with regard to Conolly, that he had been put to death for having induced the Khans of Kiwa and Kokan to wage war against the King of Bokhara, &c.

His Majesty has given me permission to leave Bokhara on the 9th of May, i. e. on Friday next. From Mesched I shall write every thing more fully. I am, &c. (signed) "JOSEPH WOLFF."

For the Neighbor.

To my brethren of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Inasmuch as it has been understood by them that I have fallen in with the views of president Rigdon; that at this time my mind is fully opened to understand by the organization of the church and the revelations given through the Prophet Joseph that the keys of the kingdom and the power of the priesthood remains with the church and cannot be divided nor taken away by any one man so as to divide the common interest of the body of Christ. And inasmuch as I have in the least deviated from this course I retract with a full determination to go with the church, live as they live, and am willing to suffer with them, and I trust and hope that the saints will forgive me and be willing that I should share with them in their blessings.

THE NORMONS AND THEIR ADVERSARIES.

On our first page will be found a lengthy and elaborate communication from the country of the Normons, to which we give an insertion, not because we are at all inclined to approve or endorse the views therein set forth, but because it is evidently written by a man who, from his contiguity to the scenes of the late tragical events—from his personal familiarity with both parties, and his possession of strong feelings on the subject, is just such a man as is well calculated to present the opinions of one party, and the one who really most wants an advocate—under the most favorable aspect. Although sundry lame, discursive, and skulking attempts have been from time to time made to palliate the atrocious massacre of the Mormon leaders, it is not within our recollection that another such a bold attempt as that of our correspondent has yet been made to outrage common sense, and common decency, by a gratuitous justification of cold-blooded murder.

If these, however, were merely the opinion of an individual, they might be left to that obscurity which is their most legitimate sphere. Were they to be looked upon as the expression of the feeling of an injured man, we could afford to look over the one and pity the other; but since there is good reason to believe that they are those of a fiction, whose mouth-piece our correspondent is—since there is good ground for concluding that however extravagant, fallacious, and absurd are his pleas in justification of the acts alluded to they find an echo amongst the Mormon persecutors in Illinois; they are not altogether unworthy of a moment's confutation. One would think, indeed that the public press had spoken in terms too plain in condemnation of persecution under any pretext, to permit of any attempt to give it a favorable, yet false coloring; but it seems that those who are bold and reckless enough to mock at law, and condemn the properly constituted authorities, have not yet had that lucid interval in their madness, which at times affords the diseased mind the capacity to look dispassionately on the true state of the case. It is truly a lamentable feature in society in that part of the country, that men, who, though not making the decent profession of respect for the powers that be, and the reverence due to justice, are quite ready and adroit enough to appeal to us as they imagine it can be made subservient to promote their designs. The twaddle of our correspondent is worthy of the famous Justice Shallow himself. Were we disposed to argue with such an expert disputant, we could well afford to grant all his premises. Wherever he may think to the contrary, the facts of Joe Smith's persecution in New York, in Ohio, in Illinois—of his being a deluded fanatic, and, if he please, a man of licentious conduct—all these have little to do with the case. It would be of much more utility to his cause, to show that these precedents for persecution were sound, reasonable, and defensible. It would be a much more legitimate task, and one to which it is obvious our learned correspondent has not yet devoted his attention—to ascertain whether an appeal to violence is excusable in any case, even in order to punish the heterodoxy of a false prophet. But judging from the length of his letter, he must be more partial to writing than to reading; for, had his information been at all better than those who act up to the spirit of the saying that "history is an old almanac," he would have been able to recall not a few occurrences similar to that of the sacrifice of the Smiths, cases in which the principal actors were no less certain, that because they made the love of God, and the love of truth their pretext, they did his service in consigning their fellow creatures to the Moloch of persecution, to the rack, to the gibbet, to the dungeon and to the flame, "heated seven times hotter than it was wont to be heated," and all that because they dared to use their inalienable right of private judgment; because, according to their consciences, they departed from the path trodden by the multitude. What was the pretext for putting Daniel in the lion's den, for consigning John Hess and Jerome of Prague to the flames? Why were the faggots for Servetus the reformer, and that by the hands of his associates; or what kind of fires of Smithfield, and even in more modern times burned the witches of Salem and the good Philadelphia Churches in conflagration? One agency did all this—one thing alone—the demon of religious fanaticism.

Well may the philanthropist grieve for the slow and intermittent progress of the world and the degeneration of his race, when he finds crimes that must make the afflicting angel blush as he hands them in as the progeny of the nineteenth century. Well may the philosopher be puzzled with the co-existence of the mild, the rational, the sublime, but simple doctrines of Christianity, and the atrocious and insatiable relic of barbarous ages, which of old sought to appease the gods by blood and murder.

But our correspondent makes false representations. Joe Smith, he says, refused to submit to a legal decision. What a short memory he must have. Where was the victim to a mobocracy when he fell covered with wounds? Who constituted his body-guard on that occasion? Why, he was a voluntary prisoner in the common jail, he was in the hands of the officers of justice. Yes, this man of violence; this advocate of carnal strife (as rumor says,) at a moment when he was capable of making a desperate and perhaps not an unsuccessful resistance, dismissed his followers, disarmed his legion, and took the alternative of appealing to the law and to the testimony rather than saturate his holy city with blood. We are not—we do not wish to be—the defenders of the follies, the faults, or the crimes—if such there be—of the Mormon Prophet; but we will no more join in the hue and cry against the unfortunate dead. We know too well the truth of the saying, that "the evil men do live after them; the good is oft interred with their bones"—to view with any degree of approval, or even indifference, the base attempt of a lawless band to cover their retreat from the scene of their sanguinary misdeeds, by a cloud of vituperation and defamation of the dead. We might well wonder, truly, at the pertinacity in malice, which prompts men to kill their victim, and follow it up by writing his epitaph in the dark characters of slander, did we not know that the assassins of the Smiths have method in their madness, and a motive for their guilty indecency. They are beginning to suspect that the law may yet assert its majesty; and a diversion in public opinion—frequently too powerful—might be made a very convenient ally in the season of retributive visitation. No wonder then they seek to place on trial the memory of the departed, instead of themselves. But it is a little too late in the day for that; they are already tried, weighed, and found wanting; and they may yet find that even the redoubtable County of Hancock, in the State of Illinois, is not beyond the pale of punishment, although it may be of salvation.

Snow in August.—Snow fell in Butler, Pennsylvania, on the 26th ult., according to the Pittsburgh American. On the Friday before, the thermometer stood there at 94 in the shade.

We learn from the Pittsburgh Gazette, of the 3d inst., that a large detachment of German emigrants passed through this city, on the previous day, on their way to Texas. They belonged to a company consisting of one thousand families who are on their way to Texas.

Violent Hail Storm in Medway Mass.—We have been favored with the following extract of a letter received in this city dated this morning:

Yesterday, about one o'clock, we experienced the most severe and destructive hail storm, accompanied with wind and rain, that was ever known here by the oldest person living, destroying and cutting down vegetation as effectually as would the mower with his scythe. The window glass which was exposed to the fury of the storm was but very little obstructed in the course of the hailstones. Some which I measured were six inches in circumference, and that too half an hour after they had fallen. Some were measured by other persons which were nine inches. The quantity of rain which fell during the storm, in the space of thirty minutes, was 1.78 inch. The hail storm did not last more than fifteen minutes. —Boston Trans.

Orange Outing.—A large and beautiful specimen of this half-human race, is to be exhibited at the American Museum this week. We doubt not this will be the wonder of the town. She is remarkably intelligent, can use a gimlet, saw, thread a needle, and sew capably. The manager has also engaged a splendid Chinese War Temple, Queen Victoria's State Robe, Gen. Tom Thumb's Court suit, and several other novelties. These, with the grand performances every afternoon and evening, cannot fail to draw crowded houses. Infant Sisters, Kentucky Minstrels, Gypsies, Queen, &c. are on the bill. —N. Y. Times.

Chalk.—A specimen of chalk or white clay was left at our office yesterday, taken from a bank lately discovered in Alexander county, about 40 miles above the mouth of the Ohio. So far as we are able to judge, we suppose the discovery must prove a valuable one, as it is apparently free from foreign substance, and we are informed is found in a large bed. Those who know the value of such deposits, would do well to examine this specimen. —Rep.

Pearls.—Pearls are the morbid secretions of an oyster. Several species of bivalved shell fish produce them; but the greater number, the finest and the laciest are procured from the Malesagria, a marvellous Lamia, a native of the sand and of various coasts. The pearls are situated either in the body of the oyster, or they lie loose between it and the shell, or finally, they are fixed to the latter by a kind of neck; and it is said they do not appear until the animal has reached its fourth year. Ceylon continues to be, as it was in the time of the Romans, the most productive of these ornaments. In the last century several of great size were found in the rivers of the counties of Tyrone and Donegal, in Ireland.

Rail Road to Mount Sinai.—The first steamer from Europe brings information that the important Rail road from the Red Sea to the Nile, is to be immediately prosecuted to completion. The line from the Nile to Cairo to Suez, or the Red Sea, has been surveyed by Mr. Galloway. There is not the least difficulty on the whole route. The distance is eighty-four miles—of these, sixty-seven is a straight line to the point it curves south to Suez. The soil presents remarkable facilities for the cheap construction of the road bed, being composed of gravel and pebbles. For the first ten miles, being the valley of the Nile, the ascent is 570 feet above the water of that river. The line of the road is then very level; the summit, 54 miles from the Nile, is 900 feet above the Red Sea. (Reverie.)

The craftiest wiles are too short and ragged a cloak to cover a bad heart.

How they do things on Rock River.—Not long since, a young man reached a settlement on Monday, surveyed his land on Tuesday, built a house on Wednesday, "went a courting" on Thursday, "got married" on Friday, moved home on Saturday, and, with his wife like the rest of the settlers, went to church on Sunday.

A Lady's Advice.—A woman never appears so truly amiable as in retirement where her virtues shine with double lustre. Do not idly imagine that my running to public places you will have better chance of marrying. If a woman is ever so beautiful, being seen too often makes her cheap in the eyes of men. She who is but rarely seen, men covet most to see, and her chance of being happily married is much greater.

Cuff, you see dem two ladies o' color cross de street dare? Yes, I see de dear angels, Pompey. Well, don't dey look amazing like one anoder? Dat a fact, Pompey, I give you credit for your nice penumtation, dey do amazing zemble one anoder, pecially de one dis side.

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES.

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPBELL LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after disipation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.

This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast, or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents,) brings it within the reach of every person in the community. A large supply of these celebrated articles just received and for sale at this office.

OSPREY:

REGULAR WEEKLY PACKET TO NAUVOO AND BLOOMINGTON, IOWA. THE new and elegant swift passenger steamer OSPREY, Anderson Master, will leave St. Louis every Friday at 4 o'clock p. m. for Nauvoo, and arriving at Bloomington every Sunday evening. On her downward trip she will leave Bloomington at 7 o'clock a. m. Monday morning and pass New Boston, Oquaka, Burlington and Fort Madison. Sunday; Tuesday will leave Nauvoo at 8 1/2 o'clock a. m. precisely, and arrive in St. Louis Wednesday 9 a. m.

The accommodations and safety of the Osprey are unsurpassed by any boat in the Upper Mississippi trade, and from her being of very light draught will be enabled to cross the rapids during the lowest stage of water. In attention to the interest of shippers and passengers no exertion will be spared by Captain Anderson and crew to render it pleasant to all who patronize her. She is supplied with Evans' Patent Safety Guard, to prevent explosion of her boilers, as also a Fire Engine and Hose attached in case of accident by fire. It is respectfully announced to shippers and passengers that in no case the Osprey can be detained beyond the hours advertised.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

L. R. FOSTER, is now prepared to take Likenesses, by the Daguerre type process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or coloured; at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Ivins's Store.

By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other method which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of an optical instrument. Only two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotype) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one upon first beholding the effects of the art, and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature shown up in her every lineament and feature and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend.

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, and at the Nauvoo Mansion;

Price only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case.

Instructions in the Art, given upon reasonable terms, and Apparatus for sale.

POETRY.

The following is one of the unnamed specimens of genius sent us for publication. It is to be hoped, hereafter, that the blossoming of the Western world, will take a hint and form their own shrubbery.

For the Neighbor:

WILD POETRY.

I knew a man so great a poet,
That when he moved he'd surely show it;
And then like men,
His head was o'er his heels,
When he swallowed down his meals,
He was such a curious fellow,
His heart was always low;
And he would say:
Every thing brags ideas
From Rachel's grace,
To bleary-eyed Leah's.
The King, the Ace,
Spots, diamonds, hearts;
The Queen, the deuce,
And Satan's acts,
Were just the sort,
For man resort.

Exalted mind, like yonder sky,
That shines with heavenly candles,
Are filled with majesty,
And hate the man that handles
Sacred things for foolish ends,
And turns a traitor to his friends.
What is better than an honest man—
That never flinched, or dipped his hands
In blood? Wrath and grim-tongued the wretch Who sells his word and honor, ought To be sent to death by lions, and then Go into outer darkness, where the light
Of one star would be as great
A miracle, as it would be for God
To fellowship sin, on his Celestial throne!

'Tis lovely and sweet
For saints to meet,
And one another greet,
With a joyful countenance;
'Tis sweeter still to see them die,
With hope and faith, just eye to eye,
That they'll have "flesh" as formerly:
As if they'd only slept in trance.

Oh,
Tough,
B. George
I hate death,
Because His jaws
'S a force
That stops breath!

Like snow-flakes on the water,
Or like the dew before the sun,
Old death takes all for laughter:
We come, we live, we die, we're done!

LETTER OF SIDNEY RIGDON.

ESQ.

Dear Sir,—Being in this city on my return from Nauvoo to Pittsburgh (the place of my residence) I feel myself called upon to satisfy the public enquiry in relation to myself and a portion of the citizens of Nauvoo. It is pretty generally known that I left Nauvoo in June last, with my family, with the design of making my future residence in the city of Pittsburgh. On hearing of the murder of the two Smiths, I returned to Nauvoo, without any intention, however, of making Nauvoo my place of residence. During my stay in Nauvoo, a number of persons expressed a desire to go with me to Pittsburgh and reside some where in that region of country, where they could enjoy my society, as well as I theirs. This determination gave great offence to some of the citizens of Nauvoo. We had held several meetings in relation to the matter—not in the least doubting our right to do so if we chose—when, to our surprise, a great excitement was got up—meetings were appointed in different parts of the town, and were addressed by Brigham Young, Orson Hyde, Parley P. Pratt, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, Erastus Snow, and others. Indemnity speeches were made, and a general excitement was created. We were traduced as mobocrats, as murderers, conspirators; and many other epithets of like character were applied to us. We were charged with conspiring against the lives of the before-mentioned persons;—and all this for the sin of desiring to go to Pennsylvania to live with our families.

Orson Hyde (who is now in St. Louis) and who is calculating to preach to the good people of this city on Sunday next, in a public meeting, used language calculated to excite an ignorant populace to commit violence on my person. His expressions were, (speaking of myself),—

"I will not ride him on a rail—no, I will not do it; but ought not a man to reap what he sows? If he gets up a mob, ought he not to be mobbed? This was said in the presence of a large assembly of people; and my great crime, was, (for which I ought to be rode on a rail, or otherwise mobbed,) that a number of gentlemen of high respectability desired, if they could so arrange their business, to go with their families to Pittsburgh and there reside, and I had agreed to aid them all I could, and use my influence for their comfort and future prosperity.

On last Sunday, a conference was called of all the citizens of Nauvoo, to take our case under due consideration. Here, if I have been properly informed, my own character was assailed in a most shameful manner. I, with many others were cut off from the church;—all for the crime of wishing to go to Pittsburgh and live.

So great was the excitement, that some of my friends thought it unsafe for me to be out of doors in the night season.

Now sir, this unheard of excitement grew out of the simple fact of myself and others wishing to go and settle some where in Pennsylvania; and for this crime, the said Orson Hyde (who on next Sunday is to preach righteousness to the people of St. Louis), actually desired to raise a mob to commit violence on my person—or else there is no meaning in language; and he is actually, after such shameful and unpardonable abuse, been on board the steamboat May Flower, where I am writing this communication, and ordered me not to write certain things, in order to save himself from the shame or odium which must attach itself to him; or else he is destitute of all sense of shame.

I presume, sir, a parallel to this case cannot be found in the history of the civilized world. A whole community of people excited till they actually called a peaceable number of citizens, murderers, and every other evil epithet that malice could invent, because, forsooth, they were guilty of the awful crime of daring to leave Nauvoo, without the permission of certain individuals—such as the before named. It is such mortals as the above named, who would claim the right to dictate religion to the world. When I conversed with Orson Hyde this day on the subject, he had the effrontery to tell me he did it from a sense of duty. I ask, whose life is safe, when men act from a sense of duty in such flagrant violation of the most sacred rights of others? I do know, sir, that some of those persons who were calculating to take their families to Pennsylvania, were put in such fear as to fear to make their design known, for fear of abuse; and all this, says Orson Hyde, "we do from a sense of duty." What a sense of duty may lead such men to do, God only knows. For my own part, "I have not so learned Christ," nor ever expect so to learn him;—nor did any other man so learn him. From what Hyde said to me to-day, on the steamboat, I was satisfied that he feared disclosures would be made that might affect him during future life.

I did not leave Nauvoo because I feared it; but because I stayed beyond the time I calculated to stay when I left home, and because I had received a letter requesting my return home. As to any attack they can make upon my character, I fear them not. I feel myself called upon to satisfy the public enquiry in relation to myself and a portion of the citizens of Nauvoo. It is pretty generally known that I left Nauvoo in June last, with my family, with the design of making my future residence in the city of Pittsburgh. On hearing of the murder of the two Smiths, I returned to Nauvoo, without any intention, however, of making Nauvoo my place of residence. LETTER FROM ORSON HYDE ESQ.

Mr. Editor:—I observed, in your paper of this morning, a letter written by Sidney Rigdon, Esq., in which my name was called in question quite unceremoniously. I would say, however, that the most of his statements are untrue, which I am prepared to prove; and others are deeply shaded with misrepresentation. The statements that he, with some others, was cut off from the Church, is true; but not for the crime of going to Pittsburgh to live, as Mr. Rigdon very well knows. He has not touched on a single point on which the difficulty with him arose. But as the minutes of the Conference before which his case was investigated on Sunday, (a week ago) will appear in the "Neighbor" and the "Times and Seasons," it will be unnecessary for me to trouble you, at this time, with their recital.

I am at Mr. Rigdon's defiance to prove that I ever used the language attributed to me in relation to riding him upon a rail; for I never used it. Neither did I try to inspire the people with a disposition to commit violence upon his person;—and whatever advice his pretended friends might have given him, or whatever fears they might have entertained for his personal safety, it is plain and clear to me that their own guilt was the origin of their fears. Mr. Rigdon was as secure from harm in Nauvoo as the tender in fast in its mother's arms. His own statement proves this. He says: "I did not leave Nauvoo because I feared them; but because I had stayed beyond the time I calculated to stay when I left home."

But, to show the misrepresentation concerning the riding upon a rail, I will state the facts. In a private conversation with Mr. Rigdon and some others, Mr. R. observed that the people of Pittsburgh were willing that he should preach his religion there, but that if he attempted to gather together the people in that place, they would ride him out on a rail, and he should not attempt to do it; but that those who united and went with him would settle around in the country some thirty or forty miles from the city. This conversation I related in a public address to some of the citizens of Nauvoo, and then asked them, if a man was worthy or capable to lead his Church who would be turned out of his course because some rowdies threatened to ride him on a rail? Shouts of No! No! No! roared through the congregation with some spirit and emphasis. So much, then, for my mobbing him, or riding him, or not riding him on a rail. Yes—I am the very man that "preached righteousness to the good people of St. Louis" on yesterday!! And a liberal turn out we had.

It is true that I went to see Mr. Rigdon on board the steamer "May Flower," and took him aside as a friend, and told him that I considered his case a critical one, yet I indulged the hope that he would see the error into which he had fallen, and ere long retrace his steps. Now, said I to him, be careful how you put pen to paper in this time of your excitement, but wait a few months and they see how you will feel—should you write in the present state of your feelings, you may commit yourself and lay the foundation for a more bitter repentance a year hence. He said that his course was marked out before him, and that he should pursue it. I replied, I have come to you, Mr. Rigdon, in a spirit of friendship and good will, because I feel it my duty so to do, and drop you this word of caution—but if your course is marked out, and you are resolved to pursue it, you certainly are of age and must act for yourself, and I shall not try to prevent you.—Thus were my most kind and friendly feelings toward him transformed in his dark imagination into a disposition on my part to conceal my own scheme.

With regard to any exposure, which Mr. R. fancied I dreaded, I would say that I have a conscience void of offence before God and man, and I am willing to be weighed in the balance with Mr. R. whenever it shall please Almighty God to summon us to appear at His tribunal.

Some of the real causes of Mr. Rigdon's expulsion from the Church will appear in the Nauvoo Neighbor. But if Mr. R. felt that his cause was just one, and that his only "crime" was in wishing to go to Pittsburgh to live, why did he not appear on the public stand and plead his own defence, when he was invited so to do? He could have sounded his defence in the ears of more than six thousand people, in the very place, where his grievances should have been redressed. Is he not a man of sense? Does he not possess a flow of language and eloquence not often surpassed? Yes, he does. I he regarded the truth, why did he send word by Elder Marks to the stand, on Sunday morning, that he was sick and unable to appear for his defence?—when I can prove by his own party that very early on Sunday morning they met together in council and agreed that Mr. Rigdon should make no defence, and that his health was quite as good as usual.

After the case was laid open to the Conference, and the charges very clearly proved, he was publicly invited to come forward again and plead his own defence; or if any friend or attorney of his would come forward and speak for him, the stand was at his service. If Elder Rigdon's crime was only for desiring to live in Pittsburgh, what child could not have successfully pleaded his defence? Mr. Rigdon well knows, that on the Sabbath previous to the Conference, an expression of the people was taken in relation to his going to Pittsburgh in peace, and it was their unanimous expression that he should go in peace. Now he says that he was cut off from the Church for the crime of wishing to go to Pittsburgh to live. Mr. Rigdon knows this statement to be utterly false, as well as he knows he has a head on his body.

Respectfully, I am your ob't serv't

ORSON HYDE.

St. Louis, Sept. 16th, 1841.

PRESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

George Washington was born in 1732, elected President in 1789; installed in 1790; 57 years old when installed, served 8 years, retired from public life in 1797, when he was sixty-five years of age. John Adams was born in 1735; elected in 1796; installed in 1797; 62 years of age when installed, served 4 years; retired in 1801; at the age of 66 years.

Thomas Jefferson was born in 1743; elected in 1800; installed in 1801, at the age of 58 years; served 8 years, retired from office in 1809, at the age of 66.

James Madison was born in 1751; elected in 1808; installed in 1809, at 58 years of age, served 8 years; retired in 1817, when he was 66 years of age.

James Monroe was born in 1758; elected in 1816; installed the following year, when he was 58 years of age, served 8 years, retired from office in 1825, being then 66 years of age.

John Quincy Adams was born in 1765; elected in 1824; installed 1825, being 60 years of age; served four years, went out of office in 1829, at the age of 64 years.

Andrew Jackson was born in 1757; elected in 1828; and went into office in 1829, at the age of 62, served 8 years; retired to the Hermitage in 1837, at the age of 70.

Martin Van Buren was born in 1782; elected in 1836; installed in 1837, at the age of 55; served 4 years; retired from office in 1841, at the age of 59.

William Henry Harrison was born in 1773; elected in 1840; installed in 1841, at the age of 68 years, and died in the first month of his term.

John Tyler, the present incumbent, was born in 1790; elected Vice President in 1840; installed as President in 1841, at the age of 51, and will retire in 1845, having served three years and eleven months, at the age of 55 nearly.

Of these 10 Presidents 3 were military chieftains, and the remaining 7 members of the bar, as were also 2 of the former.

Two were natives of Massachusetts, 5 of Virginia, 1 of South Carolina, 1 of N. York, and 1 of North Carolina.

Five were elected to and served out a second term.

The term of 10 Presidents embraces a period of 58 years. Eight years of this period were filled by Washington, 12 by incumbents elected by the Federal and Whig parties, and 38 years by the Democratic Republican Presidents.

INDIAN OUTRAGES.

The following letter furnishes an authentic account of outrages committed by a band of Sioux Indians, on a party of American citizens—of which we had some particulars a few days since.—Ms. Rep.

Traverse des Sioux, Aug. 26, 1841.

Dear Sir:—It becomes my duty to inform you that on Saturday evening I was sent for by Sleepy-Eyes, a Dacotah chief, whose camp is now at Swan Lake, about twenty miles distant from this place, to see an American who had come to them in distressed circumstances. I found the young man reduced to the shadow of a man by famine, and brought him home with me this morning. His name, he says, is Nottley Bennett. Some eight weeks, or more, he says, he and two other young men started with a Mr. Turner, of Glasgow, Missouri, to assist in bringing a drove of 104 cattle to the grazing, of which you have the command. He says they crossed the St. Peters river, between this and Petit Rochelle, thinking it to be Turkey river, and pursued a north-west course until three days ago, when they were met by a party of Dacotah Indians, who it seems, were out on a war expedition, from Lake Traverse. The result of this meeting was, that they took from them their horses, guns, money and clothing, to shirt and drawers; vest and hat; killed one and beat the remainder. They killed also a number of the cattle—Bennett thinks about—the remainder were scattered abroad. Indians then mounted the horses of their prisoners and slain, and taking one of the young men, went to bring back the cattle, but they did not succeed—the young man being permitted to make his escape. They then sent the said Bennett and Turner, on horseback, after the cattle, who soon left their horses unable to travel, and made their escape by the way which they had gone. Bennett says he traveled with Turner four days, when they came to a stream which was too deep to wade; they were both then weak, having had nothing to eat for three days; Turner could not swim—Bennett attempted to swim with him on his back, but could not succeed, and Turner the owner of the cattle was drowned—Bennett came out alive. Two evenings before this, he had seen the cattle not far from the trail made when going, evidently coming this way. This was two days after they made their escape from the Indians. Turner was drowned four days after this event. After he left Turner, Bennett traveled five or six days, and then came in sight of the Indian lodges of Sleepy-Eyes and others. He hesitated whether to go to them or not, but concluded it was only death if he went not—he must shortly die of famine; and if he went, he supposed they would kill him. He chose the latter. But they received and treated him after the manner of the good Samari-

an of the great teacher. They did not what was their duty to do; but good medals have been lately given by the Queen of England, in circumstances where they were not more deserved than in the present.

But what will the United States Government do with Indians who commit such outrages? They say they thought they were Red river people. But they could not have had any conviction of that kind. Bennett says they were with them probably as much as three hours before they killed the man. In the mean time they were told by signs and a map of the country, where they were from, and where they had wished to go.

It seems to me that the Garrison, which is kept up at no small expense to government, ought to be able to do something in this case, which will have a tendency to protect life and property in future. As it regards the cattle, your connection with them is only a pecuniary affair, and perhaps, none at all. I think, however, that they will be within fifty miles of this place in a few days, and might, in that case, be secured with a little trouble.

Yours, truly,
We learn that instructions were sent from here on the 5th inst., for the dragoons from Fort Atkinson, and the Infantry from Fort Snelling, to march into the country of the Sioux, to apprehend the murderers.

Trade of New York.—The large importations of the present season, together with the great quantity of British goods sent out on consignment, are producing the natural effect of falling prices and anxiety to sell. This is the case with nearly every description of English goods excepting certain desirable articles and styles of which the supply happens to be small. The auction sales show a gradual decline in prices, and some articles are forced off at a large loss on the import cost. There is an active trade doing, as any one may see who has occasion to navigate Pearl street. The sidewalks are encumbered with boxes and barrels, directed to all quarters of the Union, and the streets are almost impassable from the crowd of drays. Still the jobbers, although selling large quantities of goods, have not relieved the stocks of the importers and English agents as we expected, and the finding the season passing away, leaving their warehouses full of goods, are gradually submitting to lower prices, and filling the auction rooms in order to effect sales. The importers have been deceived in the estimates of the amount of goods required for the fall trade, and now exhibit more anxiety to sell, than we have witnessed since 1836. This anxiety leads them into the very imprudent practice of lung credits, and less circumspection as to the buyers' solvency; and we fear that the result will be heavy losses, by the failure of those whom this facility of obtaining credit will have led beyond their depth. Many of the importers are now giving twelve months' credit, adding interest after eight and jobbers are doing the same thing with interest after six months.

The fall trade is now in full blast. A very large number of buyers from North and South Carolina, Georgia, and from beyond the Alleghanies, as well as from this State, are in the city, and buying, we fear, too many goods. The jobbers have large and well assorted stocks, and merchants can do better in this city, both in regard to price and selection, than in any other city of the Union. Linens are very cheap this fall—30 per cent. below last year—and stuff goods generally, Alpaca, merinos, &c. are also lower than last year. Linens upon which 37 1/2 to 40 cents have been advanced, have sold under the hammer at 24 to 30 cents. Hosiery and gloves keep up. The fine cotton goods, muslins, jaconets, &c. &c. are lower. Coarse woollens advanced in the early part of the season, about 25 per cent. but have now gone back 10 per cent. Fine cloths hold their own. Brown shirtings and sheetings are not much lower than they have been, say 1 1/2 cent per yard, but cotton goods generally, including drills, prints, pantaloons, checks, fustians, &c. &c., are gradually declining, as might be expected, the raw material having fallen three to four cents per lb. since January. French goods, although the stocks are large, are more firm; the French importers evincing much less anxiety to sell than the English.

Some goods sent out here from England for sale have been re-shipped, and many orders have been countermanded. If this re-shipment goes on to any considerable extent, stocks here will be reduced sufficiently to give firmness to prices. The packets now arriving bring a large proportion of bulky articles of freight, such as coal and iron, the shipments of valuable goods having been materially checked. We are glad that such is the case.—[New York Tribune.]

cepted the resignation of their Bishop on Friday the 16th instant, and then hastily adjourned, without appointing his successor or taking any action in relation thereto, thus presenting the anomaly of an Episcopal Church without a Bishop. The Rev. Prelate has been forced to resign in consequence of slanderous reports circulated against him relative to the use of brandy and water, and his approaches to a Quaker lady with whom he was riding in the railroad cars one day.

The Bishop acknowledges that he used brandy and water, but positively states that they were the only medicine which could be of any service to him in his illness. The affair with the Quaker lady in the railroad car appears to have consisted in sitting too near her and placing his hand upon her, but as the Rev. gentleman has had no opportunity to defend himself we cannot of course judge of the truth of this latter charge. It is hard to say how the lady accidentally, he may have fallen asleep in the car and jolted against her, or it may be that he had taken an extra dose of his favorite medicine. At all events, we must acknowledge that the charge of a Rev. Bishop placing his hand in a lewd, licentious, and indecent manner upon the person of Esther Ridgeway in the presence of her husband (both members of the Society of Friends), and in a public railroad car, as sworn to by A. T. McCallum, in Philadelphia, is novel, unprecedented and extraordinary. It is enough to startle the most credulous.

The case will come before the Bishops of the Church in regular course, when the charge and the defence will be presented to the public. Until then we must remain ignorant of the merits of the case. The House of Bishops will meet about the 1st of October, prox.

A Curious Relic.—The Prussian Gazette states, that a young woman of Kaiserslautern, who was travelling with her master's family, found on the road to Butzen a ring set in rubies, which had an one side a representation in relief of Christ on the Cross, and on the other the instruments of punishment.—The ring bears this inscription:—Martin Luther, Catharina V. Boreen, die 31 October 1525. The ring which is well preserved, is a perfect model of art.

The Largest Church in the World.—In a late letter from the Rev. Mr. Coon, of Hilo, Hawaii, Sandwich Islands, is the following graphic account of a communion scene of the largest church in the world, comprising more than seven thousand members:

"Once in three months the whole church meets at the station to eat the Lord's Supper. Our last communion was on the first Sabbath in April. Perhaps five thousand were present, and for want of a convenient house for the occasion, we met in a grove of cocoa nut trees, on the sea shore. The assembly was immense, and the scene overwhelming. Before us was the wide Pacific, heaving its broad breast to the breath of heaven. Behind us were the everlasting mountains, rearing their snowy summits above the clouds and forming an eternal rampart against the western sky. Beneath us was a little spot of earth, once ignited by volcanic fires, rocked by a thousand earthquakes, and more than once submerged with a flood. Above us was the vaulted sky, with its glorious mirror, that molten looking glass, spread out and made strong by the hand of Omnipotence. Around us was a landscape of imitable beauty, clothed with verdure, teeming with life and smiling with loveliness. The softer and sweeter features in nature, blended with the grand, the bold, the sublime, conspired to render the scene enchanting."

Exploration of Ancient Nineveh.—Our late foreign papers contain an extract of a letter received from Mosul on the Tigris giving various details relative to the expedition undertaken by Mr. Botta, the French consul at that place, and a Mr. Flaudin, an artist, to explore the ruins of the ancient Nineveh. The account says: "The works are going on actively at Khorsabad (a modern village built on the side of the old capital) and sculptures continue to present the same characteristic traits—very thing warlike, and nothing appertaining to religion. We cannot yet form any idea of the plan of these buildings, although we have laid bare two halls, 108 feet in length, and a number of smaller rooms. Khorsabad is built over one corner of an immense quadrangular enclosure, formed of walls built of bricks, bearing inscriptions, with towers at regular distances. The whole military and civil life of the Assyrians could be made from the buildings and inscriptions, which remain here. We have hitherto not experienced any opposition from the authorities; though they in their ignorance imagine that to find treasure must be our object. We have a quantity of objects to send home as soon as our ambassador at Constantinople furnishes us with means of transmitting by the Tigris."

Foreign News

By the last Packet Steamer from Liverpool, and by an extra exertion among Post Master Wickliffe's deputies, we have received our regular files of London, Liverpool, Manchester, Edinburgh, and other papers, in the astonishing quick passage of 25 days, from which we extract the following highly important war news, and other matters:—

FRANCE, MOROCCO, AND ALGERIERS.

The French journals of Saturday contained the following despatch from General Bugeaud:—

"Buenos Aires, 14th. Having marched upon the Morocco army, which became daily more strong and menacing to Algeria, I came up with it at two leagues in front of its camp. It assumed the offensive with 20,000 horse at the moment the heads of our columns were crossing the Isly. We were surrounded on all sides.

"We gained a most complete victory. Our infantry, which stood most firmly, and a little lot of our cavalry fought with the utmost bravery. They successively captured all the camps, which covered a space of upwards of a league in extent.

"Eleven pieces of artillery, 16 stand of colors, 1000 to 1200 tents, among which was that of the Emperor's son, his parasol, the insignia of his command, all his personal baggage, a considerable quantity of warlike stores, and an immense booty, remained in our power.

"The enemy left about 900 killed on the field of battle. Our losses, although severe, are light when we consider the importance of the battle, which we will call the battle of Isly."

Accounts from Gibraltar announce that a heavy cannonading was heard on the coast of Africa on the 12th, which was supposed to be the Prince de Joinville bombarding Azilah; and more cannonading was heard at Cadix, in the same direction, on the 14th.

According to the Mutril Herald of the 19th instant, the Moors were busily engaged in repairing the fortifications of Tangiers, which were said to be defended by fifteen hundred infantry, while there were four thousand cavalry around the town. The English Consul had returned from Gibraltar and resumed his official duties.

The Messenger of Monday evening publishes the following copy of another telegraphic despatch received by the French Government:—

"Mogador, the 17th. The Prince of Joinville to the Minister of the Marine.

"On the 15th we attacked Mogador. After having reduced to ruins (except the town and its batteries, we took possession of the island and of the port.

"Seventy men, of whom seven are officers, were killed and wounded. I am employed in establishing the garrison of the island. I have placed the port in a state of blockade.

"Conformable to copy. The Vice-Admiral Peer of France, the Minister of Marine and Colonies.

BARON DE MACRAU.

At Tortoni's, immediately after the publication of the above telegraphic despatch, the price of the French Three per cents. fell to 80¢. 55¢, the price at the close of the Bourse having been 80¢. 70¢.

On this the Morning Chronicle of Wednesday observes:—The tidings brought by the above express are indeed important. Another port of Morocco bombarded, and an island occupied and garrisoned. Here is the casus belli so recently and vauntingly demanded by our ministerial conemporary. Here is a considerable endangerment of our convenience. Here is occupation? It may be said that the occupation is but of an island, only two miles in circumference, and at least a quarter of a mile from the shore. This island forms the port of Mogador, and since the defenses of the town are destroyed, it of course commands town, port, and bay, and is to all intents and purposes an occupation of all three. Yet it evades, rather than directly contravenes the wish of the English Government that France should not occupy.

It is but a quasi-occupation, and Admiral de Joinville and his sire may laugh in their sleeves at what they no doubt consider a mystification of Lord Aberdeen.

Mr. J. L. Cowell, agent to Lloyd's at Gibraltar, in a letter dated the 18th instant, mentions the bombardment and occupation of Mogador, and says in a postscript:—"The Moors are reported to have fought with great bravery, and that they opened fire from the batteries, when they found the three lines-of-battle ships were about to take up positions at two o'clock, p. m., on the 15th inst. The cannonade lasted till next sunset, when the steamers towed off the large ships to the regular anchorage ground. At night there was firing between the contending parties till ten o'clock, when the Hecla departed, and at eleven o'clock at a distance firing was still heard. This firing was between the shore and the steamers with small French sailing vessels of war. The French had not attacked any other port on the west coast."

This firing was between the shore and the steamers with small French sailing vessels of war. The French had not attacked any other port on the west coast."

At Tortoni's, immediately after the publication of the above telegraphic despatch, the price of the French Three per cents. fell to 80¢. 55¢, the price at the close of the Bourse having been 80¢. 70¢.

On this the Morning Chronicle of Wednesday observes:—The tidings brought by the above express are indeed important. Another port of Morocco bombarded, and an island occupied and garrisoned. Here is the casus belli so recently and vauntingly demanded by our ministerial conemporary. Here is a considerable endangerment of our convenience. Here is occupation? It may be said that the occupation is but of an island, only two miles in circumference, and at least a quarter of a mile from the shore. This island forms the port of Mogador, and since the defenses of the town are destroyed, it of course commands town, port, and bay, and is to all intents and purposes an occupation of all three. Yet it evades, rather than directly contravenes the wish of the English Government that France should not occupy.

It is but a quasi-occupation, and Admiral de Joinville and his sire may laugh in their sleeves at what they no doubt consider a mystification of Lord Aberdeen.

Mr. J. L. Cowell, agent to Lloyd's at Gibraltar, in a letter dated the 18th instant, mentions the bombardment and occupation of Mogador, and says in a postscript:—"The Moors are reported to have fought with great bravery, and that they opened fire from the batteries, when they found the three lines-of-battle ships were about to take up positions at two o'clock, p. m., on the 15th inst. The cannonade lasted till next sunset, when the steamers towed off the large ships to the regular anchorage ground. At night there was firing between the contending parties till ten o'clock, when the Hecla departed, and at eleven o'clock at a distance firing was still heard. This firing was between the shore and the steamers with small French sailing vessels of war. The French had not attacked any other port on the west coast."

formidable English critics at hand, to pronounce upon their valorous exhibition on this occasion. This sweeping destruction of a feeble antagonist appears to have been an act of excess, if not of cruelty. The Moorish forts might have been placed hors de combat without crushing the town, which, as a centre of European civilization, all nations had an interest in preserving. It is probable that we shall soon hear in like manner of the destruction of Saltee and Lariche; and since this uncompromising system has been commenced, it may fairly be presumed that Tunker owed its escape from similar destruction to the courage of its defenders, and that the Prince de Joinville intends to return in force, and attempt its capture a second time.

EGYPT.

It appears that Mehemed Ali is already tired of his abdication, and postponed his pilgrimage to Mecca, sine die. The following announcement is dated:—

"Alexandria, Aug. 7th. After some days of irresolution, the Viceroy has renounced his journey to Mecca. He has resumed the conduct of affairs, and his return to Alexandria is announced."

ITALY.

Letters from Leghorn state that Austria is so well aware of the dangerous position to which the evils of pontifical misgovernment have brought the Papal States, that it has opened negotiations with the Holy See, with a view to the secularization, as far as possible, of that Government. The Court of Rome resists, and will continue to do so, and it is said that the Austrian Government, foreseeing that circumstance, has addressed the French Cabinet, to invite it to join with Austria, Naples, and Tuscany to oblige the Pope to make such reforms as the safety of Italy may demand. The King of Sardinia is not included in the negotiation, from which it is supposed that he is opposed to it.

SPAIN.

Letters from Barcelona state that the military authorities in that city have taken a very effective way of securing a majority in favor of the Government at the approaching election. Every person known to entertain 'Progressist' principles, and who is supposed bold enough to assert them, will carry in possession of a passport which will put him in foreign parts, with a hint that it may be an act of prudence on his part not to lose the opportunity which the emergency of the Government provides for him of escaping danger. Several of these forced emigrations have taken place within the last few days. Among those sent away is M. Santa Maria, a rich landed proprietor. The Phare de Pyrenees admits that these arbitrary measures have been adopted by the Captain-General with a view to the elections. [Liverpool Mercury.]

IRELAND.

O'Connell in his prison rules Ireland well. His countrymen never were so quiet, so orderly, so moral, so united. The seizures have just terminated, and the calendar has been the lightest in man's remembrance. He is the true Lord Lieutenant, though Lord Heytesbury is so in name. The nobleman has arrived in Dublin, and received a very civil, if not a very cordial reception. He may thank the Liberator for making a seizure of his office. No decision has yet been announced regarding the writ of error. It is expected that the judges will be in London about the 23d of August, and that judgment in the case of the traversers will be given in the 25th or 30th of the month. [Victoria Herald.]

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dutch Hay.—A small quantity of Dutch hay has been recently imported into Hull. It is said the article can be purchased in Holland at L. 4 per ton.

Isle of Man.—The harbors of the Isle of Man may now be entered, either for trade or refuge, by all classes of vessels, free of harbor dues.

Royal and Rational Recreation.—A small printing-office has just been established at the Tuilleries for the amusement of the Count de Paris.

The Small Pox.—This dreadful malady is at present very prevalent in the metropolis, and the north of England.

Eton.—The number of boys now in the college list is 751, being 98 more than at the election last year; and showing an increase since 1835, when the school numbered 446, of upwards of 300.

Cotton Statistics.—In England there are 1075 cotton factories employing 183,243 hands; in Scotland, 159 factories and 4011 hands.

The Wesleyan Body.—At the late Wesleyan Conference, held at Birmingham, it was announced that there had been an increase of members, during the past year, to the amount of 10,000.

Prize Bull.—The beautiful Devon bull, with which Mr. George Turner of Barton won the first prize at the Great Show at Southampton, was afterward sold by him to Lord Aylesford at the high price of L. 180.

Machinery vs. Hands.—Mr. Melrose of Hawick, Roxburghshire, has invented a piecing machine, to be used in wollen manufactures, by means of which two children will be able to do the work which at present requires ten.

Oh! Gemini, Cancer!—At a London and American shell-fish establishment, two monster lobsters, which together weighed 47 lbs., have been exhibited within the last few days. They were imported from America. [Edinburgh Review.]

Curious Repeating Watch.—In the Academy of Sciences, at St. Petersburg, in Russia, is a repeating watch about the size of an egg. Within it represents the Redeemer's tomb, with the three angels at the entrance, and the sentinels; and, while the spectator is admiring this curious piece of mechanism, the stone is suddenly removed, the sentinels drop down, the angels appear, the women enter the sepulchre, and the same chant is heard which is performed in the Greek church on Easter Eve.

The war of desperadoes in Shelby county, Texas, on the borders of the River, is growing to be a terrible affair. According to the Caddo Gazette, the parties have respectively fortified themselves, and vowed against each other total extermination or expulsion from the country. One of the leaders of the regulators, Davidson, has been killed. On the occasion on which he received his death wound, the two parties singled out man to man; Davidson shot his adversary through the lower jaw-bone, (who it is thought will not survive), and who, after he had received the wound, killed Davidson. Boulware, who in connection with Davidson, has for some time been at the head of a party, and who is a very determined man, has declared that one party or the other shall conquer before it is done with, and that the conquered must leave the country. One of our informants states that at the time he left Harrison county, fifty men were in readiness to proceed immediately to the assistance of the regulators.

The regulators have proved victorious until Friday week when in a pitched battle they were beaten. It is stated that at least 80 men have been killed in all. Application has been made by the neutrals to President Houston to quell the insurrection, but he replies to them that they must fight their own battles, and settle their own difficulties. These 'Regulators,' if we recollect right, are men who slip into the shoes of the law and pass sentence on suspicious and guilty people. In other words they are practitioners of the code Lynch. [Mobile Herald 5th.]

Peter Gun and Mr. O'Trotter.—A ludicrous Transatlantic story. The following amusing story is told by Mr. Livingston, in his admirable answer to Mr. Jefferson's defence of his conduct to Mr. L., for ousting him from the possession of the famous bottle at New Orleans purchased by Mr. Livingston from Gravie. It is intended to show how, by translations and retractions, a troublesome word may be made, to mean anything. An unfortunate Scotchman, whose name was Ferguson, was obliged, in pursuit of fortune to settle among some Germans in the Western part of New York. They translated him literally into German, and called him Founstern. On his return to an English neighborhood, his new acquaintances discovered that Founstern in German meant Flint in English. They retraced his end of restoring him his name, and the descendants of Ferguson go by the name of Flint to this day. I ought, however, to except one of his grandsons, who settled at the Aeneas coast, on the Mississippi, whose name underwent the fate of the rest of the family; he was called, by a literal translation into French, 'Pierre a fusil,' and his eldest son returning to the family clan underwent another change, and was called Peter Gun!

The case of the worthy Irishman Mr. O'Trotter, is not so remarkable, but it is sufficiently ludicrous. He started on upon his travels as Mr. O'Trotter. In Scotland he was called Mr. McTrotter. In Fennell he was accented as Mr. Trottington. Arriving at Paris, he was saluted as Mr. Trottington, and in another part of France, Mr. Trottingville. He went to Italy, where he was addressed as Trotting; thence to Holland, where he became Van Trotten; subsequently, in Germany, he was designated, Von Trotten; in Poland, it was Trotinski; in Russia, Trottingoff; and when at length he reached the Celestial Empire, the Chinese immediately transformed his plastic name into Trottington!

Another instance of the curious changes to which names are incident in their passage from the language to another is that of Campbell, delivered from the French Sauvage, through the Italian Campobello. So Duponceau is in English, Bridgewater.

Dreadful Inundations in Poland.—The accounts received from Poland give most deplorable descriptions of the damage done by the inundations of the Vistula and other rivers. There had been incessant rain for more than six weeks, and the damage already done was immense. The Prussian Gazette gives fearful accounts from Schwetz, of Kilm. &c. From Schwetz, on the 30th of July it is said:—"Our town, situated at the junction of the Schwarzwasser on the Vistula, generally suffers every year from high water in the spring and a midsummer, when the snow and ice in the Carpathian is melted; at these seasons we have sometimes inundations of the lower grounds which cause much loss and distress, but we have never witnessed such scenes as yesterday and today. The water is rushing in torrents through the streets, and in most parts of the town only the roofs of the houses are visible, from which the inmates are vainly calling for help. The rain is pouring down in torrents, and our town is a river. In the neighboring villages the inhabitants, on the roofs of their houses, are anxiously looking for assistance, which we cannot give them."

8 A.M. JULY 31.—Most of the houses have been unable to withstand the elements which undermined them. The chimneys fall, the walls burst, and every side are cries of distress, and the crash of falling houses, the inmates of which are difficult to save. Thousands are in imminent danger; but the common distress excites the humane to do every thing possible to relieve it. The want of provisions is severely felt. The baker's ovens and the shops of the tradespeople are all under water.

10 P.M. JULY 31.—The water does not rise higher, but a furious storm rages which drives the water in vast waves against the houses (the foundations of which are already shaken,) and threaten the whole town with destruction. One third part of it is already laid waste, and lies in ruins beneath the waves.

Accounts from Kirlin say that the Vistula had risen to a greater extent than at any time during the last hundred years. It is impossible to say how many thousand villages may be inundated by the mighty river, in its long course from Cracow to Danzig. Above and below Calce, a hundred towns and villages are as in a sea, and the inhabitants have been forced to take refuge on the roofs, in trees, or on some neighbouring hills. THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 2, 1844.

AFFAIRS AT NAUVOO.

On the 25th ult. two Independent Companies from Quincy arrived in this City as directed by the Governor. They were well received, and acted very respectably.

On the 27th Governor Ford and Staff, Gen. J. J. Hardin and Staff, and between 1 and 500 men arrived. They were all cordially received and showed a decorum highly praiseworthy. The 28th, being the Nauvoo Legion muster, the Governor and General Hardin reviewed the body, and the Governor's troops being in the city too, gave Nauvoo quite a martial appearance. In the evening at the camp, about two miles from the city, one of the soldiers, was mortally wounded in a false alarm, and died before morning. The troops left for Warsaw on Sunday morning the 29th.

TO MECHANICS.

It is proposed to give a course of lectures, on the all important subject of producing, or manufacturing articles for exportation. There is scarcely an article needed for consumption in this country, but we have mechanics in this city that can produce it. Workmen in wood, brass, iron, steel, stone, silver, gold, precious stones, wool, cotton, silk, and every other commodity that blissifies or happiness life, are waiting patiently for the angel to purify the waters for their benefit, and all we have to say is: Now is the time; show your skill by your curious work.

GRAND CONCERT.

There will be a "grand concert" of vocal and instrumental music, in this city on Monday the 7th inst. at 8 p. m., at the Masonic Hall. From an overture on the and, to "O God save Nauvoo," there will be performed 26 various pieces, with an et cetera. Admittance 12 1/2 cents. Music hath charms.

"Answer a fool according to his folly."—The St. Louis New Era, has an article entitled, "Honey Fugling the Mormons." Now, if this is not a supercilious, dogmatic, and unbecomingly ignorant of the President's English, then let Phaz ma tap Ramsay for the shallows.

Civil List.—It has been suggested by some leading men, that if the Nauvoo Legion was disbanded there could be no reason for complaint against the Mormons. This logic cannot be endorsed as good, unless the Legislature will disband the Militia of the whole state, and exalt all the people to the civil list at once.

Hon. Silas Wright and Addison Gardner have received a nomination by the Democrats of the State of New York, as candidates for Governor and Lieut. Governor of said state.

Beware of Petticoat Power!—The Steamer Admiral was sunk last week, at the foot of Petticoat Island, 60 miles below Wheeling, on the Ohio river.

Close Vote.—From all accounts, as published in the Whig and Democratic papers, Polk and Clay will both be elected by a majority of 7577 Votes! This is a very close vote, but as each party has bet about $50,000, and every body says it will be so, with good news paper security, who can doubt it? Huzza for both sides! "What is truth?"

Boston Notions.—The Boston Daily Atlas, of Sept. 6th, contains eight hundred and fifteen advertisements, besides nine columns, (double Atlas size,) of reading matter. First rate! He that reads a newspaper, is a Socrates; he that advertises in a newspaper, is a Solomon; and he that pays for a newspaper, and advertises, (especially in advance) is a Shakespeare, a Bonaparte, a Washington, in the eye of a printer. Glory! If every body would take the papers and advertise, every body would soon know every body, &c. and the "and so forth," is all the beauty of it.

EDUCATION.

"The education for the common mind, 'Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined.'"

No subject connected with the happiness of man, is of so much importance as education. It is said that intelligence is the life of liberty, and we may add that "knowledge is the key of salvation." If parents and guardians would take ten times the pains they have heretofore taken for the instruction of children, our country would have less reason to mourn the depravity of men. Since the American cities have been filled with the illiterate of foreign nations, crime, corruption, and vagabondism, have "grown with the growth, and strengthened with the strength" of our beloved country. This should be checked, and a sample of better principles taught. The following item embraces one step towards such a system.

BOSTON FARM SCHOOL.

This Institution is located on Thompson's Island, in the harbor of Boston. By an extract from a report of the Directors, which we find in the Mercantile Journal of Friday, it appears that its inmates consist of truant boys from the public schools, and idlers in the streets and on the wharves, where they pass a large part of their time in vagrancy. Some of them are orphans, in whom little interest is felt by the poor and miserable connections, on whom they hang as a heavy burden. Some are children of widows, whose time is so filled with labor to procure a mere subsistence, that their sons, still more than their daughters, are unavoidably neglected, and at an early age become unmanageable. Some having lost their mothers, are left to the care of fathers, whose means and opportunities for domestic control are yet less effectual than those of widows. Some have in temperate or profligate parents, and suffer of course from the disorder and misery to which they were born. And some are children of the ignorant, inefficient and helpless, who seem almost from nature incapable of fulfilling discreetly the most common duties of life. But all of them, from these and other causes, are daily and hourly exposed to the contagion of vice, and growing up in idleness and pernicious habits, from which perhaps a few may, by fortunate circumstances, be reclaimed before they arrive at manhood; while by far the greater part will be hurried to an early death, the victims of intemperance and want, or live only to prey upon the community, fill our almshouses and prisons, and increase the burthens and crimes of the State.

"A large brick edifice" says the Journal, "has been erected on the highest part of the island, which serves as a hall for the boys, for the Superintendent, Matron, and Instructor of the School. It is designed and arranged in a manner admirably calculated to promote the health and comfort of the inmates, and commands a magnificent prospect of the whole harbor of Boston, and of the beautiful villages and country on the Southern shore. The location is, in every point of view, a most eligible one—the main object of the institution being the education and reformation of boys who, from the loss of their parents, or other causes, are exposed to extraordinary temptations, and are in danger of becoming vicious and dangerous, or useless members of society. The pupils are received at an early age, and are regularly and carefully instructed in their moral and religious duties, and in the elementary knowledge usually communicated in our common town schools;—they are employed in a regular course of labor suited to their ages and strength, and instructed in gardening, agriculture, or such useful arts as contribute to their health and support, and tend at the same time to form in them habits of industry and order, and prepare them to earn their own livelihood."

The Editor of the Journal, having been present at a recent examination of this institution, thus describes the scene:—"When we reached the island, the visitors proceeded up the gravel-walk to the institution, and found the boys all seated in the school-room, awaiting the arrival of the visitors. They numbered sixty-seven, all told, and were a fine, healthy looking set of little fellows as one will meet with anywhere on a summer's day. Their costume was remarkably neat and appropriate—their countenances were intelligent—and they looked contented and happy. They were examined by the Superintendent, Mr. Morrison, a gentleman admirably qualified for the responsible situation, and Deacon Grant, who has taken a deep and constant interest in this institution ever since it was established, in reading, spelling, geography, writing, &c., and the result was highly satisfactory. Indeed, the education they receive at this institution, and the habits of industry they acquire, and the moral precepts which are continually inculcated on their youthful minds, qualify them when they leave this peaceful and comfortable abode and mingle in the busy world, to become useful citizens, reflecting honor on themselves and the country which gave them birth."

"As a school of reform, this institution is deserving of the favor of the public—indeed, similar institutions should be established in all our large towns and cities. It would be well for the city, and for the happiness of many individuals, if instead of sixty-seven or some hundreds of boys, growing up in idleness, and becoming early inducted into all the mysteries of vice, could be accommodated and taken care of at the Farm School on Thompson's Island."

CIVIL MATTERS.

Before the Troop arrived in this city, Murray McConnell, Esq. agent for the Governor, came into Hancock county and instituted proceedings against some of the perpetrators of the Carthage murder. T. C. Sharp, one of the number, when legally called upon, refused submission to the laws of the land, according to his own words, as follows:

"Just as our paper was going to press this morning, a man came into our office, and said that he had a writ for me."

"Well sir, let me see it." He produced the paper which proved to be a writ for the murder of Joe and Hyrum Smith, issued by Aaron Johnson, Justice of the Peace in Nauvoo. After reading, I told Mr. Officer, that if my friends said "no," I would go—if not, I would stand fast. Accordingly I went out and conversed with the citizens, and unanimously they said, "don't go." I then told the officer, that he could return and report progress, but I could not go with him, for I had no security for my safety, and moreover, I was not to be singled out as the sole object of Mormon vengeance."

Now gentle reader, I did not help to kill Joe Smith, for I did not go to the jail with those who killed him. If my influence helped to produce the state of feeling that resulted in his death, why I am in common with some hundred others, guilty of no murder, but of an extra judicial execution. I have the most serious factory phobia, that Joe Smith threatened my life and sought to take it if I had therefore killed him, I should only acted in self defence."

The writ included only Col. Williams, and myself—thus it will appear that it is not the guilty, but those most obnoxious to the Latter Day Brethren, who are to be selected as victims. The officer, who is deputy Sheriff, says, that his orders are to arrest and return the prisoners to the Sheriff in Carthage; from thence I suppose I am to be taken to Nauvoo. But I will not go to Nauvoo unless my fellow citizens say so.

I did not resist the officer; but my friends advised me not to go, and the officer did not call on any of the citizens to aid him in taking me. After I told him I would not go, he troubled me no further.

Fellow citizens, shall we submit.

THOMAS C. SHARP.

The officer in charge of the writs reported that the criminals had fled from the State, whereupon the Governor issued the following document:

A PROCLAMATION.

By the Governor of the State of Illinois: Whereas Levi Williams, Thomas C. Sharp and Joseph St. Jackson, have been legally charged with having committed the crime of murder, and have fled from his State;

I do therefore offer a reward of two hundred dollars for the apprehension of each one of the said persons, to be paid upon the certificate of the Sheriff of Hancock county, that they, or any of them, have been delivered to him.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the Seal of said State, this 27th day of September, A. D. 1844.

By the Governor,

THOMAS FORD,

Thompson Campbell, Secretary of State.

"This proclamation was not circulated, however, in order to give the Sheriff a further chance to take the fugitives from justice, in their 'exile and entanglements,' from Warsaw to Churchill, &c."

The Governor and his force entered Warsaw on Sunday afternoon, and demanded the State arms; and they returned two pieces of Cannon and about sixty stands of arms.

On Monday night about 10 o'clock a messenger arrived from Warsaw, with a letter from the Governor; from which the following is an extract:

"War-saw, Sept. 30, 1844.

Sir,—I write to inform you that Williams and Sharpe have surrendered, and will be sent to Quincy for trial. Jackson has not come over, and is so very sick that we could do nothing with him if we had him. It will be necessary to get all the witnesses down as soon as possible."

Thus far the proceedings show a desire to retrieve the broken faith and laws of the State, as well as a firm determination to put a "veto" on mobbing, whether it comes creeping among the people, as a "grand encampment" for a holy hunt, or springs up, backed as our negroes for cold blooded murder.

Our voice is, and ever has been, magnify the law and make it honorable.

National Folly.—The following article from the N. Y. Tribune, shows the folly which gave them birth.

Agricultural.

From the Western Shepherd.

The Horse gives to man his labor, cattle and swine supply him with meat. The Silk-worm furnishes a fine fabric, rather adapted to luxury than utility. Sheep, alone, of all the domestic animals, yield both food and raiment; a clothing of universal use, necessary, comfortable, and luxurious; equally adapted to the rich and the poor, worn by people of all nations, and adapted to every climate.

Wool is an article of intrinsic worth, from its universal use and durable properties. In this it somewhat resembles the precious metals, and often supplies their place. King Richard's ransom was much of it; paid in wool. Ripin says, "In the year of our Lord, 1193, Richard I., on his return from the Crusade, being made prisoner by the Duke of Austria, towards paying his ransom, one year's Wool was borrowed of the Cistercian Order, and of the religious houses of the Order of Sempringham."

"This," says the author of the Memoirs on Wool, "is the first mention made of wool in Ripin's History; so little as this subject had the notice of the English Historians. And yet, by this circumstance of the Kings ransom, we may perceive that it has been, for some time, the best merchantable commodity of the kingdom, and was now the next of all other things to ready money." All through English history; it will be seen that many payments and subsidies have been made in wool. During the late French war the subsidies made by England to Russia and Austria were made in Woolen cloths. The old historian goes on to say, "The antiquity of wool within this kingdom, hath been beyond the memory of man, so highly respected for those many benefits therein, that a customary use has always been observed to make it the seat of our wise and learned Judges, in sight of our noble Peers, to imprint the memory of this worthy commodity within their minds."

Wool has enriched every people that have grown it; and the nations that have established and protected the manufacture of wool, have increased in wealth and power, beyond all others. In 1331 the art of weaving woolen cloth was brought from Flanders into England, by John Kemp, to whom the King (Edward) gave his protection, and at the same time invited over Fullers and Dyers. The great and brilliant victories, so conspicuous in the reign of the third Edward, achieved by an enormous sacrifice of human life, and waste of national treasure, and applauded by shouts of glory, were productive of trifling results compared with those which followed the introduction of the woolen manufacture by a small number of humble Flemings. This single art, wisely fostered by the Government, has carried Great Britain to the highest pitch of wealth and power. The woolen fabrics are the great staples of her commerce, which she exchanges, to such great advantage, for the raw materials of other countries.—By the perfection and extent of this art alone, she places all nations under tribute. The French have acquired great wealth by the growth and manufacture of wool. Genoa and Venice were long enriched by its manufacture. The expenses of the Royal family of Spain were long sustained by the revenue afforded by their fine woolled flocks. Shall this certain and almost universal source of wealth be longer neglected by us? What are our capacities for the growth of wool? What our situation for its manufacture? The peculiar wealth of Illinois is found in her Prairie Lands—full fifteen millions of acres, is already cleared of timber and covered with rich and succulent grass. Every acre of this land would, if timbered, cost at least ten dollars to clear it. This grand expanse, which, in timbered states, must be purchased at the cost of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars worth of labor, is, with us, by nature prepared for tillage and clothed with grass, inviting flocks and herds. A great portion of these Prairies are dry and undulating, well suited for sheep. On the eastern and western side of the State the prairies are smaller than those in the center. Even in those great expanses far from timber, wool is almost the only article that could be immediately and profitably raised. Eastern men have large investments in this land, let them add a little more to it, and place a good flock thereon, it would give it a value. All along the banks of the Ohio, from Leavenworth and Fredonia, in Indiana, and continuing along the banks of the river on the coast of Illinois to Cairo, is a district of country called the Knobs. They are high and rather precipitous hills, intersected by narrow valleys. This country is covered with timber, but the soil takes grass well, and the whole district is admirably adapted to sheep. These hills, laid down in Blue grass, would exhibit a second Vermont, but with a short winter and a mild climate. The agricultural productions of Vermont give a larger amount, per head, in proportion to her inhabitants, than any other State in the Union. Vermont grows more wool than any other State.

In the September number of Kent's Merchant's Magazine, is a table, furnished for publication in that journal, by the Secretary of State, showing the amount, in quantity, of the Agricultural products of the Union. This table does not include Kentucky, North Carolina, Michigan, Wisconsin, or Florida. Kentucky and middle Florida has not sent in their return, and the aggregate from the Southern States has not been made up.

With the aid of this table, we have made an estimate of the money value of the several products, and have placed in the result side by side, with the population of the States respectively, to show the yield, per head, in round numbers.

COMPARATIVE TABLE:

Showing the money value of the Agricultural Industry of the several States of the Union.

State	Population	Value of Agricultural Products
Maine	324,720,000	$51,763,000
New Hampshire	257,703,000	$24,744,000
Vermont	257,703,000	$21,948,000
Massachusetts	289,959,000	$37,699,000
Rhode Island	3,715,800	$108,100
Connecticut	22,945,000	$309,948,000
New York	238,800,000	$1,428,800,000

It will be seen by the foregoing statement that only four States produce more than one hundred dollars to each head of the population, viz: Vermont, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Louisiana. Of these Vermont takes the lead, and must certainly be considered the most enterprising, industrious, and thrifty Agricultural State in the Union. Massachusetts is the lowest, but that State is engaged extensively in commerce and manufactures. The average production per capita, is seventy dollars and fifty cents. Fourteen members of the Union rise above the average, the remaining ten below it.—[Niles' Register, Oct. 2d, 1841.]

Our climate is genial to sheep. The quantity of land now yielding summer pasture, and easily made ready for winter pasture, is greater than any other State. Corn, hay, and oats, may be purchased lower than elsewhere, and grown in abundance; and, after a twenty year's test, a pure blooded flock of fine quality exists, from which to propagate the race; these are our capabilities for its growth. The drawback, as I before stated is the wolf. He ought to be destroyed by the State. If half the depredations and losses, occasioned by the wolf, were perpetrated by wolves in human form, our indignation would be aroused, the country would arise and exterminate them. I am afraid it is not constitutional for the people, in their legislative capacities to kill wolves. All powers not surrendered by the people remain in them: (so runs the logic.) There is no express provision in our constitution to kill wolves: ergo the Legislature must not law against wolves. Then we have the large black wolf and the little Prairie wolf; the political sage may decide that it may be constitutional to kill the one and not the other. 'Tis a vexation, I'll quit it, and add a huntsman and a pack of hounds to the Prairie flock, and that will make all safe.

The geographical position of Illinois is most favorable for the establishment of manufactures. Every day we hear an increasing complaint that the West is getting too far from the East. Notwithstanding the improved modes of conveyance, detrimental delays occur in getting goods from the East to the West. The Canal communications from New York and Philadelphia are frozen until the middle of April, and the goods destined for the Spring sales, in the West cannot arrive until midsummer. If Manufactories were here, this inconvenience would be avoided, and an increasing market would be found in the States that are springing up, yet further from the East than we are. The State owns great water powers on Rock river, Illinois river, and at the rapids of the great Wabash, besides others upon streams of secondary size. Would it not be a wise policy to perfect these powers, and lease them out on easy terms to invite the establishment of Woolen Manufactories? A living may be got by Agriculture, but no nation can be wealthy that always purchases the manufactured article and exports the raw material. So long as this injudicious policy continues, with regret, I say that my farm in Illinois pays, annually, a renter tax to Great Britain than to the United States. From the establishment of the Woolen manufacture alone, an increasing stream of prosperity would flow for many generations; Illinois would then stand pre-eminent, for industry and wealth, amongst her sister States, as Britain does now among the nations of the world. But we must first grow the raw material. As a State and a nation we are in the infancy of our existence; and have but taken the first step in the long avenue of time. The savage tribes have passed away. The hunt-men and the shepherds will soon over-reach the verdant plains. Their independent life equally removed from the luxury of wealth and the dependence of want must, in its turn give place to a denser population and a more laborious people, tillers of the soil.—Individual wealth and national power will then attain its height. The ranks of man will divide, the rich from the poor. Power and poverty will walk in their accustomed paths of violence and deception. The numbers of the human race will decrease, the fertility of the earth will diminish, until the few remaining herds, savage and debased from destitution, lead a vagrant life over sands and barren rocks, on the very spots now teeming with the luxuriance of vegetable life.—Earth will leave no trace, and time, no record of the past. The mighty change, though distant many ages is now in progress. Every shower that falls, deepening each rut & gully, sweeps a portion of the fertile earth through creeks and rivers to the ocean, there to be remodelled upon the vast foundation now preparing by the little insects building up the coral rock now emerging in the great South sea.

Happy the era of our present existence—the opening of the new pastoral age—a life envied and renowned—chronicled in all history, and sung by the Poets of every age.

"Thrice happy life that's from ambition free, Removed from crowns and courts how cheerful!"

A quiet contented mortal spends his time, In hearty health, his soul unsullied by crime."

RAMEY'S GENTLE SHEPHERD.

A Pleasant Bedfellow.—I was awakened, last night at midnight, by a violent storm of thunder and lightning, and wind and rain. Hard dreaming as I was, I had sense enough left to feel something moving in the bed, and by the light from a flash of lightning, to my unspeakable horror I saw crawling over the mattress, a cobra de capello. He reared his head when he came to my body, and slowly crawled on my legs; and as there was nothing over me but a thin cotton sheet, I could distinctly see the cold, clammy body of the venomous reptile through the sheet. The heat of my body seemed agreeable to the monster, as he coiled himself up there. I lay dead still; I knew my life depended upon my remaining motionless; for, had I moved a leg or an arm, he would instantly have bitten me, after which I could not have lived many minutes. A cold sweat ran in a stream down my back; I was in an agony of terror. Home and friends, and all that was dear to me, rushed to memory; my whole life passed in review before me. I saw no way of escape, and I considered my doom sealed; every flash of lightning showed me my new bedfellow, in all his outshininess. Well, then the reptile lay, but how long heaven knows; to me the time appeared interminable. When I had laid in one position about three hours, my legs became sore and stiff, from having been kept so long motionless; and, at this time, I gave an involuntary shudder, which attracted the notice of the reptile. He raised his head about a foot high, thrust out his forked tongue, and looked around him, as if for some living object to prey upon. I now thought it was all over with me. I prayed mentally (for I dared not move my lips for fear of attracting notice) for the forgiveness of my sins, when—heaven be praised!—the reptile unfolded his coils, and crawled slowly away from off my limbs, on to the bed, down by the bed post to the floor, and left me. It has been said, that poverty makes a man acquainted with strange bed fellows; it might be added, so does wandering in foreign climes.—[Journal of a Wanderer.]

MEDICATED LOZENGES.

COUGH LOZENGES.

Which are the safest and most effectual remedy for Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Whooping Cough, Asthma, &c., ever offered to the public. They operate by promoting expectoration, allaying the irritation of coughing, and removing the cause of the disease.

WORM LOZENGES

The only infallible Worm medicine ever discovered. In over 400,000 cases they have never been known to fail. Many diseases arise from worms and occasion long and intense suffering and even death without their ever being suspected; grown persons are very often afflicted with them, and are doctored for various complaints, without any benefit, when one dose of these Lozenges would speedily cure them.

CAMPHOR LOZENGES.

For Nervous or Sick Head Ache, Palpitations of the Heart, lassitude and nervous affections generally. Persons traveling or attending large parties, will find the Lozenges really reviving, and imparting the buoyancy of youth—used after dispensation, they will restore the tone of the system generally, and remove all the unpleasant symptoms arising from too free living.

CATHARTIC LOZENGES.

The best Cathartic medicine for removing bile from the system and preventing attacks of the bilious and intermittent fever of this section of country.

FEVER AND AGUE LOZENGES.

These Lozenges have been tested by a celebrated physician in a practice of twenty years, and have never been known to fail in removing the distressing disease. In addition to which, if the directions be followed, the disease will not return.

A cure in all cases guaranteed or the money refunded.

SHERMAN'S POOR MAN'S PLASTER.
This Plaster, of which over 1,000,000 are sold yearly, is believed to be the best Plaster for rheumatism, lumbago, pain in the back, side, breast or any other part of the body, ever prepared, and its price (only 12 1/2 cents), brings it within the reach of every person in the community.

A large supply of these celebrated articles just received and for sale at this office.

OSPREY:

REGULAR WEEKLY PACKET, TO NAUVOO AND BLOOMINGTON, IOWA.

THE new light draught swift passenger steamer OSPREY, Asa Benson Master, will leave St. Louis every Friday at 4 o'clock p. m. for Nauvoo, and arriving at Bloomington every Sunday evening. On her downward trip she will leave Bloomington at 7 o'clock a. m. Monday morning and pass New Boston, Oquaka, Burlington and Fort Madison Sunday; Tuesday will leave Nauvoo at 8 1/2 o'clock a. m. prettily, and arrive in St. Louis Wednesday 9 a. m.

The accommodations and safety of the Osprey are unsurpassed by any boat in the Upper Mississippi trade, and from her being of very light draught will be enabled to cross the rapids during the lowest stage of water. In attention to the interest of shippers and passengers no exertion will be spared by Captain Anderson and crew to render it pleasant to all who patronize her. She is supplied with Evans' Patent Safety Guard, to prevent explosion of her boilers, as also a Fire Engine and Hose attached in case of accident by fire. It is respectfully announced to shippers and passengers that in no case the Osprey can be detained beyond the hours advertised.

MINIATURE LIKENESSES.

R. FOSTER, is now prepared to take Likenesses, by the Daguerreotype process, in the most beautiful style of the art, either plain or coloured, at his Daguerreotype Rooms, on Main Street, a few rods above Ivins's Store.

By this wonderful process, which is a combination of nature and art, a more correct and beautiful likeness can be obtained, than by any other method which has been known to man. An image of the person, as exact as that formed by a mirror, is transferred to, and permanently fixed upon a highly polished silver plate, through the agency of an optical instrument. Only two or three minutes are required for the operation. The discovery was made by a Frenchman named Daguerre, (hence the name Daguerreotype) and has excited the wonder, admiration and surprise of every one, upon first beholding the effects of the art; and such is the beauty of the work, and so perfectly to the life is nature shown up in her every lineament and feature and expression, that each succeeding specimen serves only to increase but not to satiate these emotions of the mind. How valuable or rather invaluable, would be such a likeness of an absent or departed friend.

Specimens may be seen at the Rooms, and at the Nauvoo Mansion;

Price only three dollars, including a handsome morocco case.

Instructions in the Art, given upon reasonable terms, and Apparatus for sale.

POETRY.

For the Net. Moor.

GOD SAVE NAUVOO.

When you pray for all blessings to equally flow;

For the gathering and kingdom of Christ here

below;

For the good of all people: the Mormon and

Jew;

For a more perfect union: then pray without ceasing,

O God save Nauvoo!

When you pray for old Israel, now scattered afar;

For the nations and kingdoms, degraded by war;

For the world in its blindness, through wickedness, too;

For redemption as promised; then pray without doubting,

O God save Nauvoo!

When you pray for your foes, both without and within;

For the captive in prison, the exile in sin;

When you enter your closet, as Christ bid

you to;

And ye ask of the Father: then pray in the spirit,

O God save Nauvoo!

From the Boston Transcript.

Permit a laughter-loving girl

To fill a corner of your paper—

You would, if you could see the curl

Of her dark hair, and waist so taper!

I have seen half a dozen beauties,

For ever in my pathway sighing;

Each one looks like a faded rose—

Poor things, you'd think they were all dying.

But there is one, so full of mirth,

That all I can do won't move him!

The happiest fellow on the earth—

He swears we girls cannot but love him!

It vexes me to see him laugh;

I tell him he has no feeling;

I've tried one season and a half

To bring him to my presence kneeling;

I know he loves me—as he swears

But he swears he will not be down-hearted;

I've tried my best with frowns and tears,

And once or twice have well nigh parted.

But all in vain—he will not kneel—

He will not sigh—I must surrender!

He tells me that he's of steel,

But well I know his heart is tender.

Another thought just strikes me now—

(It shall take place next October!)

I'll marry him—I will, I vow!

And that I guess will make him sober.

NEW ENGLAND.

Land of the forest and the rock,

Of dark blue lake, and mighty river,

Of mountains reared aloft to mock

The storm's career, the lightning's shock;

My own green land for ever!

Land of the beautiful and brave,

The freeman's hope, the martyr's grave;

The nursery of great men

Whose deeds have linked with every glen,

And every hill and every stream,

The romance of some warrior dream!

Oh never may a son of thine,

Whither his wandering steps incline,

Forget the sky which bent above

His childhood like a dream of love.

SONG OF THE POTATOE.

Somebody says the potatoe is a thing more exquisite than the following, was ever written by Moore. Our readers may decide.

I'm a careless potatoe, and heed not a pin

How into existence I came;

If they planted me drill-ways, or dibbled me in,

To me 'tis exactly the same.

The peas and beans may more loftily tower,

But why should I bend me to them?

Defiance I not, with my beautiful flower,

When the earth is hoed up to my stem.

LETTER FROM OREGON.

Linnton, Oregon, July 25th 1844.

I am in our new town, which we have named as above, in respect for Dr. Linn's services for this Territory. Gen. M. M.

McCarver and myself have laid out the town together. He is a gentleman from Iowa Territory, and laid off Burlington

the seat of Government. He is an enterprising man. Our place is 10 miles from Vancouver, on the West bank of the Wallamette river, at the head of Ship navigation, and 3 or 4 miles above the mouth of the Wallamette, and 25 miles below the Wallamette Falls. I have no doubt but that this place will be the great Commercial town in the Territory. We are selling lots at $50 each, and sell them fast at that. At the Falls there is quite a town already. I own two lots in Oregon city, (the town at the Falls.) They are said to be worth $200 each. I got them of Dr. McLaughlin, for 2 lots here in Linnton. I was six weeks at Vancouver, where myself and family were most hos-pitally entertained by Dr. McLaughlin, free of all charge. He has been a great friend to me, and has done much for this emigration generally. I find provisions high: pork, 10 cents; beef, 6 cents; potatoes, 40 cents; flour, $4.00 per hundred.

But I find it costs me as little, even less to live here than in Western. I paid for wood the last year I lived in Western, $74.

For corn and fodder, $50, all of which is saved here. We use much less pork here than in Missouri. The Salmon are running now, and will continue to run until October next. They generally commence running the last of February, and end in

Oct. I have had several messes of fresh Salmon. At this point we purchase of the Indians, Ducks, Geese, Swans, Salmon, potatoes, feathers, and venison, for little or nothing. Ducks, 4 loads; Geese,

8 loads; Swans, 10 loads; Salmon, 4 loads of powder and shot each. Feathers cost about 12 1/2 cents per lb. There are more ducks here than you ever saw;

also, Phalaropes, in great numbers. They remain here all the winter. I have hunted very little, being too busy. We find it more profitable to get of the Indians, to whom we trade old shirts, pantaloons, vests, and all sorts of clothing. They are more anxious to purchase clothes than any people you ever saw. You can sell any thing here that ever was sold.

Stocking Carv Ploughs, $5 each. We have an excellent blacksmith living in our place, who makes first rate Carv Ploughs, at 31 1/4 cents per lb., he finding all.

I have seen enough of the country to give you a fair description of it. You have already some knowledge of its geography. The first and second regions differ

most materially in almost every thing

I shall only speak of this: the first region, lying along the sea coast. As you come down the Columbia river, from the Ca-cade, where the first region terminates, you see high mountains on each side of the river, running close to its banks and covered to the very summits, with heavy bodies of Pine and Fir. There are some narrow bottoms along the river, which are covered with grass, but which overflow in the summer. You see many beautiful waterfalls, some of them 400 feet perpendicular. Mill privileges are plenty. When you get about 15 miles above

Vancouver, the mountains become lower on both sides, and gently decline into wide valleys, covered with fir timber, a species of pine. The neck of land between the Wallamette and Columbia; about 5 miles across, is a sick bottom, but overflows

every summer by the rise in the Columbia, which rises just like the Missouri, highest in June and July. The Walla-mette has a high, but single ridge of mountains on the West bank, and on the East bank, for several miles, this wide valley is covered with fir and cedar. When you come along the river, you will therefore see nothing inviting except beautiful streams and most splendid timber. When you get to Linnton, you take through an immense body of most beautiful fir, cedar, and other timber, 10 miles to the Fallay Plains, (Prairies,) which are certainly the most beautiful you ever saw.

They consist of a succession of small

Prairies about 3 miles long, and from one to two miles wide. These plains as they are called, bear away to the S. W., until they connect with the wide and beautiful country upon the Yam Hill river, which runs into the Wallamette above the Falls, some 20 miles and heads inwards the Sea. This Yam Hill Valley runs within

15 miles of the sea. The Fallay Plains are almost surrounded by ridges of mountains, in the shape of a horse shoe, the open end towards the Yam Hill country.

These plains lie as handsomely as you would have them, just rolling enough to carry off the water, are rich and have no gravel or stone. The soil is black on a clay foundation. The timber comes up to the very edge of the Prairie, so that in 5 steps you can be out on the prairie and in the thickest, tallest, most beautiful timber you ever saw. The trees are mostly fir, from very small saplings to 1

1/2 feet diameter at the foot of 100 to 150 feet high, and as straight as pine timber generally is. Along the little branches that run from the Prairie, is plenty of Ash and White-oak timber, which makes excellent fire wood &c. These plains are covered with green grass, which is green all winter. You break up prairie here with one yoke of oxen, or two horses. The hills and mountains upon the border of the prairies in this country are covered with grass, as fine range as could be imagined, and which can never be exhausted. The whole

Wallamette valley, 300 miles long, and from 50 to 100 miles wide, is about such a country as I have described to you, and most of it is yet unoccupied by any one.

Farming is perhaps the most profitable of all business done in this country. It is so easy to open a farm here, as you have such fine timber for all purposes. You plough all winter and all summer if you choose. In fact you can plough all the year. They actually sow wheat here from 15th October, to the 15th May, and make as much per acre as in Missouri.

Irish potatoes grow here finer than any where in the world perhaps. I saw five acres of land sown in wheat in May last which produced 110 bushels. If you sow late, you put in the more seed. Corn can be raised, but not so well as wheat. You can raise enough for all purposes, as you need none except for bread.

As to the climate, it is the finest you ever saw. Winter commences in December and ends in February. This has been about as wet a season as they have

EXTRACTING NEWS, WIT, FUN, AND NONSENSE.

Affairs in California—Singular Determination.—A correspondent of one of the New York papers, writing from California in June last, gives an account of some singular proceedings at Monterey on the reception of despatches from the Mexican government, informing the governor of the intended annexation of Texas to the United States, and the probability of a war, that he should place Monterey and the other ports of California in a state of defence. This Governor, Don Manuel Micheltoreno, who, when he heard of the taking of Monterey, a year or two ago, by Com. Jones, wished he was a "thunderbolt," to crush the audacious American, called a meeting of his officers immediately upon the reception of the despatches. The meeting, came to the conclusion that instead of protecting the place, it would be better for him to abandon Monterey and surrender to the first enemy's flag that should appear, on account of the want of guns and ammunition. The guns were actually put into wagons and transported, and thus the capital of the country was abandoned before there was any certainty of war. A brave thunderbolt is Gen. Micheltoreno.

Tremendous Gale.—A tremendous gale occurred at Apalachicola, Fla., on the 9th inst., accompanied by a great loss of property. About thirty houses were unroofed, or lost their upper stories, while others were entirely demolished.

Shanties, stables, out houses, fences and trees, in innumerable quantities were lying about in every direction. Fortunately no lives were lost, and very little bodily injury sustained, though several had very narrow escapes. The loss is estimated at about $200,000.

The sugar crop of Louisiana.—The New Orleans Tropic of a late date, says: "We understand that the cane is in the most flourishing condition in all parts of the sugar districts. A friend of ours who has lately returned from a tour in the adjacent parishes, informs us that he has never seen the cane so abundant and so luxuriant. In the parish of Plaquemine he has seen cane 10 feet high, and voluminous in the extreme. Mr. Pierre Rapp, a well-known planter there, has intimated his intention to commence cutting from the 3d to the 5th of the ensuing month."

Vegetable Phenomenon.—In the garden of W. Grimstone, Esq., of the Hibernia, Highbury, is now to be seen a pea plant in full bearing, which is remarkably illustrative of the great length of time the germinating property can continue in seeds. This plant was produced from one of three peas presented to the above gentleman by J. T. Pettigrew, Esq., surgeon, of Saville Row, having been taken by the latter and the authorities of the British Museum from one of the vases recently extracted from an Egyptian sarcophagus, and where, according to computation, the vases, with their contents, must have remained for no less a period than 2344 years. The vases contained a large quantity of dust, supposed to be the decomposition of a number of grains of wheat, vetch, and other peas. Some of the grains of wheat have been sown, and found to be productive, but the vetch peas have not germinated; the other peas, resembling the British culinary peas, has in the above instance been tried effectually. The three peas were placed by Mr. Grimstone's gardener in a hot bed, and watched with great care. After some time one only was found to sprout at the end of each pod are three singular fangs. Each flower was of bell shape, something like a convolvulus, but not so large, from the centre of which the pods have shot forth, and are now nineteen in number and fit to gather, and they are in the stage something between our marrow and scarlet peas.

They have, of course not been tried, but it is believed they are suitable for culinary purposes, judging from blisters something water. Mr. Pettigrew and several eminent botanists, scientific and other gentlemen, have seen this vegetable phenomenon, and are taking great interest in it. —London paper.

A man seized by Ants.—The Apalachicola Advertiser, of the 9th ult., says a young man in that vicinity, while hunting, laid down upon his blanket, in the shade of a tree, to rest, and on waking found himself twenty yards from the tree, the inhabitants of an ant hill having seized upon him for winter stores, and were actually carrying him off to their dwelling. Their bill was nearly eight feet high. The insects were a size larger than the lion ant.

True.—If the best man's faults were written on his forehead, it would make him pull his hat down over his eyes. Singular Dog.—There is a dog at Flushing, N. Y., who has a predilection for rattlesnakes. He batters the holes of his tail and thrusts it into the holes of such vermin, and catches them when they make their appearance to nibble his appendage. It is a most remarkable dog, indeed. The wonder is that the owner can be induced to sell him.

Two cases of yellow fever were reported in Mobile, on Saturday, the 14th ult. On Sunday there was no case reported.

The New Orleans Pigayune of the 13th says that there were two deaths from yellow fever in the Charity Hospital on the day previous.

Destructive Fire.—We learn from New Jersey that a destructive fire is raging in the Pine woods, between New Egypt and Toms river, Monmouth county, accidentally kindled by the charcoal makers belonging to the Iron Works in that vicinity. The conflagration has spread over several hundred acres, and was raging on Saturday with great fury.

The Drought and the Factories.—In consequence of the severe drought, the factories at Amesbury and Salisbury, Mass., have been compelled to suspend operations altogether. We have heard that such is the case in several other places in that section.

Election Item.—Mr. Desobry, which has been elected to the senate of Louisiana, by a majority of 76 votes to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Morse, democrat, recently elected to congress.

Gulph powder explosion and loss of life.—We learn from the Bangor (Me.) Courier, that on Thursday, one of the workmen engaged on the Fort at Bucksport Narrows was engaged in regaling himself by smoking a cigar while sitting upon a keg of powder. Several persons remonstrated with him for thus exposing himself, when in a sort of daring bravado, he declared there was no danger, and applying the end of his cigar to a few grains of loose powder, the whole ignited, and in an instant he was blown to a great distance and instantly killed. Seven or eight persons were injured, some of them seriously.

Extraordinary Rent.—The Orleans Ball Room, with the bar and saloon attached, which was last year leased for $5000 dollars, was a few days since adjudicated at public auction for one year for the extraordinary sum of $791 dollars.

One Mrs. Mary McCue was arrested in New Orleans on the 12th ult., for whipping her husband!

The population of Buffalo is now 25,503. In 1840 it was but 13,234, an exhibit a gratifying increase.

Professor Morse has arrived in London, and is making preparations to exhibit his magnetic Telegraph.

The New York Tribune says:—We understand about $30,000 have already been paid back to importers at this port under the recent decision of Secretary Bibb. The amount of claims is very much larger.

The Ant Army.—This destructive insect, the plagues of the planters, has made its appearance in terrible quantities throughout the State. A gentleman just from the "Opelousa country," informs us that the caterpillar has made its appearance in that region three weeks since. Within the past six days it has passed over the broad fields of Corcoran, leaving them as if a withering frost had blasted them. One-third of the crop in this region at least has been destroyed, how much more, time will determine. With the overflow, and now the army worm, the planter has but a slender prospect of being remunerated for his labor. —Corcoran (La.) Recorder.

Begonia.—A woman named Mary Moses, was arrested and committed to prison in New York, charged by her husband, James Moses, with the crime of bigamy. It appears that her maiden name was York, that she intermarried with Moses in England in 1839, and soon after came to this country, where Moses left for the interior, and during his absence, she again intermarried, in Sept. 1843, with Mr. James Oliver, of Davison street, pretending that her husband, who was absent, was dead, and that she was a widow. Her husband, a short time since having returned, prefers the complaint, as well as Mr. Oliver, who considers himself an aggrieved man.

Breach of Promise.—Miss Eliza Higginson has received a verdict of 1000 dollars damages against John Ware, for breach of promise of marriage—they are both of Athens, Somerset county, Me., and the trial occupied three days.

It is truly astonishing to see the Ouzing Outing at the Masonic Hall, herself to tea or coffee, use a gamble with all the industry of a pains taking mechanic, thread a needle and sew with all the patience of a poor old seamstress, and in fact imitate everything she sees with so grave a demeanor, it is almost impossible to dismiss from your mind the idea that she is a human being.

Perhaps she is! Who knows? Queen Victoria is rearing some of the little animals that produce Alpaca wool. She is determined to live by the "hook" of her people, or by "crook" with the Alpaca.

Extraordinary Circumstance.—A daughter of Mr. Ephraim B. Irish, of Newport (R. I.) aged about 12 years, who has been subject for the last 18 months to spasmodic complaints, has had within a few days, ten pins and needles taken out at different times from one of her heels, and it is supposed she must have swallowed them while unconscious of the act.

A Queer Incident.—The Boston Post tells of a woman in that city who, forsaken by her husband, had followed him from shop to shop, but in vain. On Sunday she went to the place where he was at work on the top of a house, and, with her infant in her arms deliberately mounted a ladder to the fourth story, where, depositing her infant on the staging in the presence of its unfeeling father, she deliberately descended again, leaving him involved in a whirlpool of amazement, anger and responsibility. He refused at first to take any notice of it, until his fellow workmen threatened him with the law when the little one was provided for.

Drought.—The protracted drought under which the country is suffering has dried the streams that the oil is at Paterson, have not for the last few weeks, run at more than half speed, and one or two had to stop entirely for want of water. The Paterson Intelligencer states that the quantity of water in the Passaic is less at present than it has been since 1819. Not a drop has passed over the falls for some time. Little or no business is done on the Morris Canal, for want of water. —[Newark Daily Advertiser.]

More Emigrants.—The fine ship Goethe arrived in our harbor yesterday evening from Bremen, bringing one hundred and eighty-seven passengers, hearty and hale looking men, women and children. Their baggage was discharged yesterday afternoon, and we presume that most of them will be off for their destination in the west, within a day or two. —[Balt. Sun.]

From the Sandwich Islands.—Information has been received of the safe arrival out of the brig Globe, Doane, from Boston, with several missionaries on board. The Rev. Mr. Gary, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Mission in Oregon, and his lady, arrived at the Sandwich Islands on the 24th of April in the ship Lusanne, in good health. A ship was at the Islands bound to Columbia river, on board of which Mr. and Mrs. Gary embarked, and they probably arrived at the mission station in Oregon about the close of May.

A minority of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, sympathizing with the Free Church of Scotland, have resolved to abandon their connection with the "Stated Church" as by law established, and claim the right to retain their property.

A destructive fire occurred in Georgetown, D. C., on Sunday morning last. The extensive flour and grist mill of Col. Bonifant was discovered to be in flames, and although the alarm was speedily given and the several fire companies were quickly on the spot to render assistance, the entire building, with its machinery and valuable contents, were eventually destroyed. There were 10,000 bushels of wheat, 200 barrels of flour, with a safe containing $2,000 and many valuable papers, destroyed. The original cost of the mill was $4,000. The mill was insured to the amount of $1,000, which is feared will not cover more than half the loss. Serious damage was done to the surrounding houses, and a frame house was totally destroyed. Also the sidewalk at one end of the building, and the market house at the other, caught fire. It is supposed the fire was the result of negligence—the watchmen in the mill having fallen asleep, the rubbers caught fire by friction.

Washington city is becoming the scene of incendiarism and firemen's fights. On Saturday night, an untenanted frame house was set on fire and burnt to ashes. On Sunday morning, two of the fire companies had a set-to in front of the President's House, in which stones, fence-rails &c., were used very freely.

On Friday morning, a fire broke out in an old building on Eighth st. below Chesnut, Philadelphia, which destroyed the interior of the same, and a brick house in the rear, occupied by Schomacher & Co. as a piano manufactory. The premises belonged to J. H. Brodsky, whose loss is from $6 to $8,000, on which there is about $3,000 insurance. Schomacher & Co.'s loss is between $500 and $1000. It was the work of an incendiarist.

The dwelling of Mrs. Cochran, near the State Department, Washington, was riddled by some villain, who, succeeding in opening, by means of a false key, a locked drawer, from which they stole a bag containing $250, in bank notes, gold and silver.

Fire in Guadalupe.—A letter from Antigua, under date of the 31st of August, says:—We hasten to announce that Yasset's Guadalupe, was nearly destroyed by fire on the forenoon of the 26th inst.; damage $1,000,000. Lumber especially, and also provisions, must be wanted. The port will no doubt be opened.

Love and Vitriol.—Recently, in Cincinnati, a mulatto woman, becoming jealous of a female companion, attacked her in the street with a bottle of Vitriol, only, however, ruining her clothes. Not satisfied, she watched an opportunity when her rival slept, climbed to her window, and emptied the terrible fluid over her head. The amount of injury done to the girl is not stated; the bed suffered some.

Santa Fe.—The Independence Journal has the following extract from a letter received at that place, from Col. S. Owens, who took out the first Santa Fe company. It is dated September 9th, 1844, at the Cucho, on the Big Arkansas river.

"I have not met with any accident as yet; wagons all sound, and every thing in fine condition, except sickness of the hands. I have been made driver, ox driver, and every thing else, from Council Grove to this place. My dearborn has been useful in hauling the sick, though at present, all appear to be on the recovery. I think in a few days all will be well. Sickness has detained us at least ten days. I will cross the river on to tomorrow, which is about four hundred miles from Independence; and in twenty days will be in Santa Fe. So, you see, I will make the trip in fifty days. It ought to be done in forty, and can be with ease, and no mistake."

LABOR.

Labor is the manufacturer of wealth. It was ordained of God, as the medium to be used by man to obtain his living; hence it is the universal condition of this great bond to life. But say one, I do not like the condition, because 'two thirds of mankind live without work; or in other words, one third of the world carries the balance on their backs. Well, admit the position, does that destroy the principle that labor is the only way appointed of God to obtain an honest living? Not it only goes to show that some men, through craft, cunning, deception, and corruption, are lording it over God's heritage. To use the language of a writer on the subject:

"And who can wonder that it is so when such incentives are held out to idleness? Labor is degraded. In one half of our Union it is a disgrace for a white man to work. To get an honest living he must place himself on a par with the despised slave. And the same influence is crushing down the working man here and every where. He is not considered as respectable as the Vampire who sponges his living from the fruits of unrequited toil. The embrowned face and hard hands of labor do not enter the parlors of the idle rich, unless in the capacity of servants.

Labor is also shunned, because it is falsely organized, if indeed it be organized at all. It is made monotonous. People work forever at one thing—making the head of a pin perhaps. No change, no variety. Labor is also unsocial. A life-time is spent in solitary toil or in the company of those for whom we have no fellow feeling. The law of the group is not respected. A majority of laborers are hired. They feel no interest in their work. It is half their object to kill time and save their strength. The industrious minority likewise toil three times as long as nature will bear. They are dying of overwork. The business of life is not adapted to the taste or capacity of the operator. Half the world never finds out what they are best able to do. Circumstances determine the occupation. In Lowell girls choose to stand fourteen hours in a factory, because they can find nothing else to do. In Boston they may stitch, stitch, stitch eternally, upon a pin in a garret, or like a nun withdraw from society to enjoy the solitude of an underground kitchen. The most brilliant minds, the richest affections, nature's nobles, poets, and artists, are buried alive. Fulton is measuring off tape in your shops. Reuben is grinding clay in your brickyards. Michael Angelo is the scavenger of your streets, while Dogberry is your dispenser of justice, and Sancho Panza your chief magistrate. The world is out of joint. There is no adaptation of industry to genius. No wonder that labor is repugnant, and that all avoid it who can."

So far so good, or so evil, as you please to feel on the subject; but this is not all: God never meant to bemean his creation, especially his own image, because they had to labor; no; never; God himself according to the good old book labored on this world, six days; and when Adam was animated from clay to life, by his spirit's making use of him for a dwelling, we read that God put him into the garden to dress it. Therefore, in connection with the sowing of all holy men, we are bound to honor the laboring man, and despise the idler. The old proverb, that "he that will not work, shall not eat," is a just one; and although the "rich" who govern the world too much, are esteemed as the front rank of the world, in point of fashion, fame, honor, honesty and talent, yet, the day is passing and now is, when they must be weighed in the balance and found wanting. Solomon, the wise man said:—

"There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men: A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honor, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease."

The great fault is, "riches" curse the man who has them, unless he makes them a blessing to others. No matter how much a man enjoys life, if he makes others as happy in proportion as he is.

The rich, the learned, the wise and the noble, in the true parlance of the world now, have laid heavy burthens upon the shoulders of the poor; and truly one-third of the world of mankind, has to carry the rest upon their backs, and be spurred and whipped at that. But there is a great change at hand for the saints; let them labor like men, prepare for that august hour, when Babylon and all her worldly wisdom; her various delicacies; and delusive fashions, shall fall with her to rise and trouble the earth no more! What a glorious prospect, to think that drunken Babylon, the great city of sin, will soon cease, and the kingdom of God rise in holy splendor, upon her ashes, and the people serve God in a perpetual union! The merchants and great men of the earth must prepare to mourn: Alas, alas! that great city!

O saints, as inasmuch as the almighty has displayed, and will display his "hand-work" for the glory and benefit of his saints, his covenant people, will you not arise, and shake your garments, cleansing them from the dust, and spots of corruption, idleness and folly, and show your faith by your works. God will soon make a man more precious than fine gold. Do you know it? Let the world traffic, we must make men better by wisdom, virtue, and industry.

THE TRADES.

On Tuesday evening the 15th inst., Committees from several of the trades in this city, met at the Masonic Hall, according to last week's notice, and after they had been addressed on the best method of carrying on business for the benefit of the whole without creating monopolies, (by the general committee, and others,) the following reports from several of the chairmen of trades' committees were made.

James Carroll, from the weavers, reports that about ten weavers were ready to enter upon business; and that after looms were provided, they could weave shirting, sheeting, janes, sattin, cassinets, ladies' shawls, and gingham, and several calico printers were ready to manufacture that article. Arrangements were made to send for wool, cotton and cotton yarn.

T. Turley, Chairman of the Committee on blacksmithing being sick did not make a report, though it was understood from others that edge tools of every description, and other articles, could be afforded cheaper than to import them.

Messrs Adams & Rust, Reported upon shoe manufacturing, giving a list of prices highly satisfactory, showing the great benefit of supporting home made work; proving that the west can easily compete with the east.

J. Smith represented the carpenters: They had not entered upon any plan as yet, but thought if beech timber could be got, they could begin to make tools.

M. Phelps and Mr. Harrison, spoke upon iron moulding, and said that business might be carried on at Mr. Kimball's Furnace with a small capital to procure the iron and coal before navigation closes. Cutlers, coach lace weavers, jewelers, tailors, cabinet makers and other trades were not represented, but enough was manifested to ensure the practicability of the plan of making Nauvoo a great manufacturing depot.

Meeting adjourned till next Monday evening (21st inst.) at early candle light, at the same place. It is hoped that all the trades in the city will be represented by Committees.

JOHN TAYLOR, Chairman.
W. W. Phelps, Secretary.
Nauvoo, Oct. 15, 1844.

ECONOMY.

A great deal of the sufferings of mankind, and especially among the saints, arise more from the want of economy, than for the want of property. If a person has ever so much money and spends it lavishly for every thing, or buys conveniences, when necessities are wanted, it is ten to one, but that person will scratch a poor man's head, and his children, if he has any, will cry for bread. Well may it be said 'economy is wealth,' for so it is: some of the richest men in America, have become so by prudence, careful management, and care. "It is an old saying, that 'a penny saved is as good as a penny earned.' Perhaps it is better, for a 'bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.' you have not seen a man run the risk of collecting a penny in hand, as you save it; and should you, as the Savior said, always count the cost before launching into any bargain, you would ever be the gainer.

Extravagance is the opponent of economy. Let me tell a story of the wasteful dandy. A certain elder was once helped to go and preach the gospel: his family being poor, he promised that if the Lord prospered him on his mission, he would occasionally remit such as he could for their support. He had never been in reduced to 'economy,' and when a donation replenished his pocket, being among characters in high life, for a brief space, instead of sending five dollars to his needy family, he bought himself a pair of 'silk drawers.' So, gentle reader, you can save a penny or throw away a dollar; lay up a dime or lose an eagle; and hereafter, whenever you read about the 'country maid and her milk pail,' don't forget to think about a saint in silk drawers.

Matches!—It is a pity but some of our warm hearted friends, seeing that matches are so common in all classes, would put in motion a 'match factory.' A little light on the subject might show a great fire.

Navigation.—Without material variation, we have had seven months of good navigation for steamboats on the Mississippi, so far this year.

Beef and Pork.—With a little exertion Nauvoo might be made an excellent point to pack pork and beef. The hides could be tanned in this city, and save transportation.

Wood!—A few thousand cords of wood, floated or rafted into the city during the 'Indian summer,' might find a good many warm friends during the winter.

A Sly Fellow.—Early on the evening of the 10th inst., almost every citizen was more or less annoyed: something seemed to be sily creeping into the gardens; passing the streets; searching the cracks and broken panes of glass, for an entrance into houses, passing the rooms and creeping over the beds, even where the most delicate ladies were resting their precious bodies;—all was conjecture; the police, vigilant as the are, could not get a glimpse at the sheer monster;—they thought it was an enemy, for the very air seemed to be chilled as they slowly and cautiously pried into the doings of the night. Nothing could be discovered; all was still; yet the whole city trembled; they knew something was the matter! Some stranger, or friend had been playing his pranks in Nauvoo. As the light began to dawn in the morning, the police, and many others, by the help of daylight saw—yes, beloved reader, they saw that old night monger, Jack Frost, putting a veto on the beauty of summer.

TWO PREACHERS ARRESTED FOR STEALING, COUNTERFEITING, &c.

It always pains us to note wickedness in professed ministers of the Gospel. It seems almost impossible that there are men so base as to profess to love the Lord, and teach his word, when at the same time they are only wearing the sheep's clothing to cover the wolf, occupying their holy garb in covering up all manner of iniquity instead of truth and goodness. A few weeks since two preachers were arrested in Kentucky, about seven miles from Mt. Sterling. There was a camp meeting at which a man named Jefferson Coffee was holding forth, while on the crowd sat his daughter, listening. The officer came and Mr. Coffee was made prisoner while speaking, charged with having concealed stolen goods, some of the articles being recognized as forming the dress of his daughter, then present! Coffee was required to give bail in $500 to answer at Court. Subsequently he was required to add $1000 bail, making in all $1500, a disclosure having been made implicating him deeply with a set of villains who infest that country, and live in the caves, &c., so numerous in those parts. On the day following the arrest of Coffee the Rev. Mr. White was also taken from the pulpit at the same place charged with counterfeiting money. A large amount of counterfeit money was found upon him. This is an extraordinary case, and is not given with a view of deteriorating from the ministerial character, but as a warning to others who may be so weak and forgetful as to fall by the tempter. —[Bulletin.]

It hardly seems worth while to make a remark upon such sinful conduct; and had the editor of the Cincinnati Bulletin called it by its right name, we would have remained silent. The sectarian Priests, however, occupy such a conspicuous niche in the Pyramid of our country's disgrace, now erecting, that whether it be called 'seduction,' 'burnt brandy,' 'stealing or counterfeiting,' it is all the same; it is priestcraft.

BE YE READY.

End of the World.—We saw and conversed yesterday with a gentleman named Williamson, just from New York, who is on a mission to the West to inform the people that the end of the World!!! is at hand! Now, there is no joke about this matter. The gentleman told us distinctly that he knew the day; that it had just been discovered by the Second Advent men in the East, and that he had left post haste to give the note of alarm for a general preparation. The time, as stated to us, when all these sublimity things are to pass away, the day, and hour, will come on the 10th day after the moon changes, which event occurs on the 11th day of October. So at the furthest, according to these gentlemen we cannot exist after the 21st of October, in the year 1844, now very close at hand. This is an important business to the community at large, take it any way. If it be true the world comes to an end at the above time, and there are some folksish or wise enough to believe it, it would be advisable for us as men, women and children, to be prepared. If it be false, and the propagator of such news is an impostor, then is it important as showing what happens in our day and generation. Here in Cincinnati do we see a man who boldly asserts, as Mr. Williamson did at the Tabernacle on Sunday evening last, also to us personally, that he knew when this world would be destroyed, and then went on to name the exact time! This is a wonderful truth or a most outrageous imposition and falsehood, and direct insult to the understanding of the people. If any person should feel inclined to doubt the facts of the preaching as above stated, and we could not blame them for doubting, they will please visit the Tabernacle and hear for themselves. We note this only as faithful chroniclers of the times. Please send in your advertisements, gentlemen, so as to do as merry a business as possible while before the close. —Cin. Com. Bulletin.

Really this is too much: "End of the world!" why, after the Savior comes and reigns on earth a thousand years, there will be a "little season," of several hundred years, to gather up the hosts of hell for the great battle of Gog and Magog! Good heavens, and here comes Yankee nineties, crying "read of the world!" They ought to go to the Rhode Island school boy, who said, Adams fell brought his father from Rhode Island to Connecticut, but he and his mother staid because they wasn't afraid of "spooks."

From the Investigator.

MOSES ECLIPSED.

Mr. Editor.—"Know thyself" is an excellent maxim; well would it be were it more generally followed among us. Whether I know myself enough now, to avoid scurrility and blackguardism, the reader should you publish what follows, will probably be better able to judge than myself. Should you discover anything lurking in it which you think savors of the tone of the other, I wish you either to expunge it or suppress the article entirely, as I have no wish to offend.

The object of this communication is, to state my surprise, and at the same time my gratification, at an admission made by the Editor of "The Magnet," (a magazine devoted to Mesmerism, and formerly edited by Rev. Le Roy Sunderland, in New York,) in an article in the August number, relative to the procession of the equinoxes—what is in common parlance called the first motion of the Earth—this Globe. He admits that it takes twenty-six thousand years (26,000) to perform one full revolution, and then says, after some further reasoning on the subject "consequently, the Earth's orbit must have changed its aphelion a number of times!" This is an admission which I did not expect, because, judging from the general tenor of the Magnet, the Editor is a religious enthusiast, and any one would have concluded that he was a thorough believer in the Bible and the Mosiac account of the Creation, &c.

If the Earth has "changed its aphelion a number of times," say only twice, which is 52,000 years!—what becomes of the Mosiac account, which allows only 6000? It appears to me that it is knocked into a "cocked hat!"

This Editor has, perhaps unknown to himself, corroborated and sustained Professor Mackay, of Norwich, (England,) who advanced the very same views thirty or forty years since, and who, if now living, is upwards of ninety years of age. Let the believers in the Mosiac account of creation make the most of it. I suspect it will not add to their equanimity, nor fix them much.

CORRECTOR.

The Deists, or infidels as they are called, are, as we have before said, fastidious. But why not wallop the Rev. Le Roy Sunderland for blasphemy?—Talk about the Earth's changing its orbit!—His Sunderland, that has changed! He has changed a number of times, and will change a number of times more, and then will not know any more about the real science of Astronomy and the heavenly bodies of this world; and the laws by which it is governed in its annual, daily, or any other round, than Shakspeare's dog Jowler. If Mosians have any greater assiduity than Sunderland, be still, for God's kingdom, by anything he could do would not suffer enough of reputation, in 10,000 years to balance a rye straw's ashes!

TO THE FRIENDS OF THE TEMPLE.

We wish to offer a word of information to those who donate money and property for the building of the temple of God in Nauvoo; inasmuch as a wrong impression has prevailed relative to the order of giving credit for subscription.

All tithings, contributions, donations, and offerings presented for the building of the temple are recorded in a book kept for that purpose in the form of a history, wherein is recorded the names of the donors, the kind of property donated, and the price of the same, or if in money, the amount, all under the respective dates when the same is deposited in the hands of the Trustees in Trust. Except in cases where an authorized agent has collected funds and given receipts to those who donated,—Wherever receipts are given for property, we do not enter it in the general record until those receipts are presented at the recording office. Consequently we are under the necessity of making a separate list of all properties received where receipts have been given, and keeping that list until the receipts are presented for record.

Now inasmuch as the books will be kept as evidence of our faithfulness in the day of the Lord and not "the receipts," we would advise all to bring their receipts only as possible and have them duly recorded, that their names may be found among the number of the faithful in that book which will bear testimony to our faithfulness in attending to the law of tithing and consecration.

Some have supposed that we entered all things on the record where receipts were given or not, but this is a mistake, because that would actually be giving credit twice over for the same property. Bring on your receipts, brethren and sisters, and if you cannot bring them, send by some one whom you can trust, that all your contributions may be recorded in proper order. It is necessary that there should be order in this business as well as all others, inasmuch as the house of God is a house of order and not of confusion.

The temple is progressing finely, and the brethren and sisters (for they are not the last in regard to diligence and perseverance to build the temple) use all due diligence to roll on the work. The blessing of God is with our efforts and after having suffered a little more tribulation and toil, we shall behold the "top stone" carried up and put in its place with joy and gladness, and then we will receive those blessings and endowments which are held in reserve to be put upon the faithful, when the house of God is completed.

Let us increase our efforts and live up to the law of tithing and consecration and at the same time not forget to keep all the commandments of God, lest it be said to us, "these ought ye to have done and not have left the other undone."

In haste I have the honor to be your faithful and devoted servant, and brother in the church of Jesus Christ of latter-day Saints.

WM. CLAYTON,
Nauvoo, Oct. 13, 1844. Temple Recorder.

RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.

There is at this time a singular and exciting movement among the Jews of Europe in relation to their restoration. Great divisions have taken place in Frankfurt and other cities, among congregations, on the subject of reforms, repudiating great portions of the laws of the Rabbis and Talmudists, and conforming in a measure to the spirit of the times and the march of improvement; and the same time, the severe oppressions of Russia towards this ancient people, carried out through the influence of that power in several of the German principalities, seem to precede some important advent, which at this moment keeps them in great excitement. Those who have means, and are instigated by pious zeal, believe the period at hand, when they are to return to Zion, and, wending their way down the Danube and Danube, towards Jerusalem and the arrival at the Holy City are so numerous that accommodations are difficult to be obtained, and a large caravan, we understand, is in the progress of organization, to accommodate several hundred. Many are residing at Buxton, Jaffa, Hibernia, and the surrounding villages; the Jewish population of Jerusalem, not generally exceeding 5000, it is supposed has increased to 40,000, at the present time. The persecutions of Russia have induced the Divine to extend every protection and facility to the Jews, who number 100,000 at Constantinople, and the Sultan, by this stroke of policy, has drawn round him many of the powerful bankers of that nation. A sub-dominion of the learned men of the nation, it is said, will be held at Jerusalem, to discuss all the proposed reforms in the religion which do not trench any of the cardinal principles, but the more ceremonial of that faith. The Jews have another great friend in Ibrahim Pacha, the new Viceroy of Egypt, who was their great protector while in command of Syria. Great results in the fulfillment of the prophecies, are shadowed forth in these movements, in the mean time the European Jews are becoming hard students, and striking out boldly in the paths of science, cultivating literature and the arts, and preparing themselves in many respects, to acquire a claim on the good feelings and protecting influence of the Christian powers. The Jewish periodical press is constantly receiving additions to its number, among which we notice, "The Chronicle Israelite," at Brighton, "The first fruits of the West," at Jamaica, "The Sydney Voice of Jacob," at Australia, and upwards of twenty periodicals devoted to the literature and religion of the Jews. They are also cultivating the arts to a considerable extent. In the "Exposition de L'Industrie," at Paris, we find a long list of Jewish artisans, including several successfully productions, for which they have received medals. Among them we notice annuqueters, hydrometers, and horological tools, locks, oil cloths, bronzed pen, fine cloths, carpets, and hangings, fire arms, Morocco leathers, cashmires, goldsmith's work, scaplines, printing ink, sealing wax, &c., &c.

At Frankfurt, accepting bills of exchange on the Sabbath was always dispensed with, but the Senate have under consideration a new code of regulations, very oppressive, one of which is to compel them to accept bills on that day. The Rabbis are moving strongly against all these severe enactments, and have come forward boldly and liberally in behalf of their brethren. The Baroness J. De Rothschild, at Paris, has introduced the subject of the Russian persecutions in her salons, and a lively interest was manifested by Mons. Guizot and the British Minister, who were guests, and assurances were given of an early interference in favor of the repeal. It is a singular fact, and may be deemed a sign of the times, that Spain, a Catholic country, has actually declared war against Morocco for putting to death the Spanish consul, M. Darnen, who was a Jew, and claimed to be a subject of Morocco. The Spanish government have expended 450,000 francs to establish two schools for Jewish children, and it has been rumored at Frankfurt to admit all the Christian servants of Jewish families into the household, and as regular recipients of Jewish charities; and Mr. Treilway, M. P., has given notice of a motion in the House of Commons for the removal of Jewish disabilities.

Not among the least interesting of all these signs, is the attempt to revive the agricultural pursuits of the Jews in Palestine, and several important reports have been made on the fertility of the soil at Acre, Zafed, and the villages surrounding Jerusalem, and a supply of oxen and agricultural tools have been obtained. In all this we see a better and more happy destiny reserved for the Jewish people, through a proper estimate of the principles and duties of Christianity. In this country they are greatly on the increase, and it is supposed that the Bremen, Hamburg, and English vessels will bring out twenty thousand emigrants during the current year. On the subject of the restoration of the Jews, we are to have a stirring speech from M. M. Noah, Esq., next month, at the tabernacle. No one has studied the subject with greater attention than he has done, and we look for an interesting discourse from him. He is strongly of opinion that the movement to be made from this the only country in which the Jews have all their rights, and relies much on the 18th of Isaiah, in reference to the United States, in connection with the restoration.

THE RECENT DISCOVERIES IN ARABIA.

We have before us a letter from Bishop Doane giving a further interesting account of the remarkable inscriptions found on some ancient monuments near Adon, on the coast of Hadramaut, and first deciphered by Rev. C. Foster, of England. These records, it is said restore to the world its earliest written language, and carry us back to the time of Jacob, and within 500 years of the flood.

The inscriptions are in three parts. The longest is of ten lines, engraved on a smooth piece of rock forming one side of the terrace at Hisn Ghorab. Then there are three short lines, found on a small rock on the summit of the hill. There are also two lines found near the long inscriptions, lower down the terrace. They all relate to one transaction, an incident in Adite history. The tribe of Ad, according to Mr. Sale, were descended from Ad, the son of Awa, or Uz, the son of Aram, the son of Shem, the son of Noah. The event recorded in the route and entire destruction of the sons of Ad, and Arab tribe, by the Awa or tribe of Ad, whom they invaded. In Mr. Foster's book fac-similes are given of the inscription; the Adite and the Hamyaritic alphabets; and a glossary containing every word in them, its derivation and its explanation; with notes of copious illustration upon every point which they involve. The first inscription of ten lines is thus translated:

We dwelt, living long luxuriously, in the zenanas of this spacious mansion; our condition exempt from misfortune and adversity. Rolled in through our channel

The sea, swelling against our castle with angry surge; our fountains flowed with murmuring fall, above the lofty palms; whose keepers planted dry dates, in our valley date grounds; they sowed the arid rice. We hunted the young mountain-goats and the young hares, with gins and snares; beguiling we drew for the fishes.

We walked with slow, proud gate, in needle-worked, many colored silk vestments, in whole silks, in grass green chequered robes.

Over us presided kings, far removed from baseness, and stern chastisers of reprobate and wicked men. They noted down for us, according to the doctrine of Heber.

Good judgments, written in books to be kept; and we proclaimed our belief in miracles, in the resurrection, in the return into the nostrils of the breath of life.

Mad as mad robbers, and would do us violence; we rode forth, we and our generous youth, with staff and sharp-pointed spears; rushing onward.

Proud champions of our families and wives; fighting valiantly, upon couriers with long necks, dun-colored, iron-grey, and bright bay.

With our swords still wounding and piercing our adversaries, until charging home, we conquered and crushed this refuse of mankind.

The short inscription in three lines reads thus: With hostile haster; the men of crime We assailed; onward rushed Our horses, and trampled them under foot.

The two line inscription, which is under the long inscription, in the terrace, is as follows: Divided into parts, and inscribed from right to left, and marked with points, this song of Sarasa Dzerahh.

Transpired, and hunted down, and covered their faces with blackness, Awa the Bent Ac.

On the subject of these inscriptions, Mr. Foster, in his dedication of his book to the Archbishop of Canterbury, thus remarks:

"What Job, (who living in the opposite quarter of Arabia, amid the sands of the great Northern desert, had no lasting material within reach on which to perpetuate his thoughts) so earnestly desired, stands here realized.—Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book!—That (like the kindred creed of the tribe of Ad) they were graven with an iron pen, and lead, in a rock forever! (For mine is a better and brighter revelation than theirs.) For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in the flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another."

But it is not the antiquity of these monuments, however high, which constitutes their value; it is the precious central truths of revealed religion which they record and which they have handed down from the first ages of the post-deluvian world, that raise them above all price. Viewed in this respect, they strike at the very root of skepticism, and leave not even his own hollow ground beneath the feet of the unbeliever. For, if what the infidel vainly would bring into the question, as originating with

Christianity, stands here, registered as the primeval faith of mankind, there is an end, at once, to the idle sophistry of unbelief. "The inscription on the rock of Hisn Ghorab, a contemporary witness of the faith of the most ancient of the old Arabians, changes the state of things, placing beyond the cavils of skepticism itself, at once, the fact and the purity of their belief in the scriptural doctrine of the resurrection; and presenting to the eye of this great Gospel truth, (to borrow the language of Mr. Burks,) 'covered with the awful hoar of innumerable ages.'"

New Orleans.—The Picayune, of the 2d inst., says: "There were six deaths from yellow fever, in the Charity Hospital, for the twenty-four hours ending at five o'clock yesterday evening."

The health of Mobile is most gratifying. The Alexandria Republican, of Saturday, the 18th ult., says: "We have had rains during the week, and a cool, damp atmosphere. The river is 'head low,' and the prospect of a rise far from flattering. The health of the parish continues good. The weather now is cold, and it has rained almost incessantly for twenty-four hours. Winter is upon us sure enough."

Miraculous Escape from Death.—We learn from the Philadelphia U. S. Gazette, that on Monday evening, 30th ult., when the passenger train from New York reached Bristol, it was ascertained that it had too much headway, and as the locomotive and baggage cars entered the depot, they were detached, and the passenger cars passed on, still having very great headway. The brakeman found it impossible to check the cars, and the consequence was that the first car dashed through the end of the car-house. Providentially there was a barrel of water at the end of the rails, which threw the car off the track, and its speed was in some measure checked, but not stopped until the first car was half way out of the car-house, hanging over the wharf! The greatest alarm and confusion ensued among the passengers; but fortunately no lives were lost, and but one person was seriously injured, a little girl, who was standing on the platform below, and whose leg was broken by some of the falling timbers of the car-house. The escape of the passengers is miraculous, for if the forward car had gone four feet farther, it must have been precipitated to the platform below, some twenty feet, and dragged the other cars with it.

The following quizzical story was told a temperance meeting in Hartford by a reformed drunkard. It opens rich, and as the man has become sober, one may now laugh over his absurdities with double relish. He said—

"I used to drink, and my wife used to jaw me about it. What do you get drunk for! said she, what do you jaw me for! said I. So we agreed and made a firm bargain that I would not drink and she would not scold. For three long days we held on firm, no drinking no scolding, but on the third evening, being in company with some good fellows, I took a horn and when it was down, I right off wanted another, and in a very short time I found myself about 'how fare you!' with twenty horns safe and snugly under my bread basket. (Tremendous laughter.) By and by it got time to go home; but as you may well suppose, I dreaded to meet my wife like the tophachee—(Laughter.) However go I must, so I staggered along hoping to find my wife asleep. When I reached the house, I found it still lighted, and through the window I saw my wife up and waiting for me. (Laughter.) Thinks I, I can't go in yet, but I must wait till she goes to bed, so there I stood, freezing in the cold rain two hours. (Tremendous laughter.) At last she went to bed, and I crept in at the back door, stumbling over pails and chairs but finally succeeded in getting to bed without disturbing her. (Laughter.) But after doing awhile I awoke and found myself as dry as a fish. You know brethren, how dry we used to be in the night after we'd a spree. (tremendous cheering.) My wife always knew what was the matter with me when I got up in the night to drink cold water. (laughter.) I hardly dared to get up, for fear of my wife, but my thirst was greater than I could bear, so out I crawled, and I groped very softly after the water pail, but no water pail was there. I then felt roared in the dark, on the tables and shelves, for something to cool my burning thirst. Soon I found a tin pail full of liquid something—I seized and put it to my mouth, and took a long and hearty draught—the liquor at the same time running out on each side of my mouth down my cheeks. (Tremendous laughter.) I thought the liquor tasted odd, and at that instant it flashed on my recollection that I had fixed some poison a few days before to kill rats with. (Tremendous laughter for five minutes.) Horror struck I stood—my hair standing on end, it was death to scream out, for my wife would jaw me if she waked. (Laughter and stamping) and surely it would be death to hold still, but scream I must, and scream I did, (rious laughter.) 'What was in the pail?' You are dry are you?' said she. 'What was in the pail?' yelled I in perfect agony of fear. 'Wait!' 'Why the pin on the shelf.' 'Oh you brat! you have drunk up all my starch!' (Tremendous laughter for five minutes and cries of 'Order!' from the chairman.) The next morning my shirt collar was tied to my neck and cheeks, and it took half my chin to cleave it off.

Cherokee Newspaper.—We have received the first and second numbers of the Cherokee Advocate, published at Tahlequah, Cherokee Nation, and edited by Wm. P. Ross, a son of the forest, reared at Harvard! It is neutral, save its guardianship of Indian rights, and is very handsomely printed. The editor exhibits a ripe taste and generous mind, and much may be expected from his endeavors.—Reveille.

Cuba.—All the Americans arrested at Cuba, charged with participation in the late disturbances, have been liberated on nominal bail, except Mr. Thompson. This is to be attributed to the exertions of our consul, General Campbell.

That man who borrowed the Justices' Act from the Mayor's office, will be just enough to return it.

DIED.—On the 8th instant, Elizabeth Suffacool, aged 3y. 8m.

DEATHS.—For the week ending Monday the 14th instant.

Evan Eynas, 48y; congestive fever. Olyntha Leach; bloody flux. Ruth Harris, 4y; ague and fever. Walter Harris, 33y; ague and fever.

Harmon J. Akes, 28y, 1m, 15d; inflammation. Moses Cutler, 27y, 9m; diarehea. Ann Manhart, 10y, 6m; inflammation on the lungs. Total 7.

separate shepherd. But to keep sheep to the greatest advantage there should be a large spread of cultivated grasses for the flock to range on, early in the spring, in the autumn, and through the winter. Whenever the prairie grass gets hard they should be brought into the stubble fields, and the after growth of the meadows. But the greatest advantage is to be derived from blue grass; shut up in June it will keep green all winter, and, if a succession of pastures is provided, the sheep will do well upon them all the winter, and will only need feeding when the snow is frozen on the ground. Too much industry cannot be used by sheep farmers in laying down a large spread of cultivated grasses for fall and winter use. A wood enclosed pasture would be a great change for sheep in the height of summer. A prairie flock may be made a very useful and profitable auxiliary in bringing into cultivation a prairie farm. A field enclosed in the prairie, and pastured the year before it is ploughed, may be broken up afterwards with two horses with more ease than four oxen could plough the prairie in its natural state. The small field of four or five acres is shifted three or four times in a season, and will leave some twenty acres so much enriched that it will produce a double crop of corn. The wolf has kept us from following our sheep in the field, whereby the farmer loses much in the cultivation of wheat.

WHY IS IT THAT AMERICAN MECHANICS AND ARTISANS CAN NOT DO AMERICAN WORK?

This is a question we wish to press home to the whole American people. The assumption is constantly made in the papers, especially the Journal of Commerce and Herald, that if we protect our workmen against foreign competition they will necessarily be restricted to inferior fabrics and pay a far higher price for them. We say, Not so: If there be no natural obstacles to the production of any article we need here, then we shall be better and cheaper supplied with it in the long run by securing the work to our own workmen than by letting in a flood of foreign competition to overwhelm them. We say that, though the nominal or money price of the imported article may occasionally be lower—so much so as to shut up American workshops, in which men are paid American wages—yet the real average cost—that is, the amount of our labor or its products to be given for it—will be less, if we keep out the foreign article, and let American artisans have steady work in supplying us at fair wages. In this case they will be constant purchasers and consumers of our grain, meats, vegetables, fruits, and desirable customers of our hatters, tailors, shoemakers, &c. They will help pay our taxes, work our roads, support our schools, churches, &c. which English artisans cannot do, so long as they remain in England. These may buy a barrel of flour or a cask of hams or occasionally when the crops happen to be light in England, but they cannot spend one-tenth of their earnings in American produce, while the American artisan (no matter where he was born) spends the whole here. Now we maintain that it is cheaper and better to buy our cloths and castings, our cutlery and wares of American workmen than of foreign. Occasionally an article might be bought with less money abroad; but it could not be a good bargain if it threw some workmen here out of employment, as it has a natural tendency to do.

But are we to isolate ourselves, and buy nothing of other nations? By no means. Let us freely buy every thing which other nations, through a preponderance of natural advantages, can produce decidedly cheaper—that is, with less labor—than we can. Let us impose no duties, except for Revenue, on tea, coffee, spices, tropical fruits, or any thing else that nature has interposed barriers to our advantageously producing. Let other nations buy in like manner of us. But whenever can just as well be done in one country as another, let each do for itself. This is cheapest, most beneficial to all. Even a barbarous nation would do better to import spinning-jennies and power-looms than to do so and shut up; if it does not see this, the fault is not ours. Enough that we see it, and openly say so to the whole world. If the true interest of all that each should purchase freely such raw staples as it cannot advantageously produce, and therefrom fabricate for itself.

ges and profits on the importation of raw materials only; and not on the greatly increased value of the fabric.

Now will any man look at this subject fairly, not at some petty detail, but at the great essential matter, and say that it is or can be our best policy to send our cotton to Great Britain, and send there our grain and meat (when they will take them) to feed the manufacturers, and bring back the cotton as shirtings, sheetings, calicoes, &c. and really be the gainers by the operation? Is not the assumption that we could obtain our cloths and wares cheaper—really cheaper—of foreign than of American workmen a violation of the plainest dictates of common sense? Does not every man see that here is a vast amount of extra labor to be performed, over and above the amount that would be required to take the cotton, the wool and provisions to our own manufacturing villages, and obtain thence the cloths and wares we need? And if the labor is saved by home production—is it certainly most—will not the laboring class be sure to reap a great part of the benefit? If not let us devise ways and means to secure it to them—but let us not sacrifice a clear and plain advantage—a positive general good—in our dread that some part of us must receive a greater share of it than others.

The assertions so recklessly made by the free traders with regard to the comparative prices of British and American fabrics are confronted by the most glaring facts. At this moment we are largely rivaling English fabrics in all the open markets of the world. The advance of our fabrics from the depressed prices of the first months of 1843 was caused directly by a purchase of forty thousand bales of these goods for the China market. This purchase was made by shrewd, intelligent business men, for the excellent mercantile reason that they could make money by it. They are chiefly free traders, and they know the value of every pattern of British as well as American fabrics. If they could have bought goods even five per cent cheaper in England they would not have taken a bale from us. And they still keep buying American cotton fabrics for China, in spite of the advanced but now receding prices. We have the highest authority for stating that the most profitable branch of the cotton manufacture for the last six months has been that of supplying the China market. On this ton of the twenty-five cotton mills of Lowell have been steadily employed. It is this new and large demand which has advanced and has kept up prices. It is this which has made the cotton manufacture more profitable for the past year than before. At this moment, the British army in India is in good part clothed in American cottons, bought in preference to the British shirtings, because the latter are made of short staple Madras and Surat cotton, while the former are made of long staple American cotton, costing twice as much and over, while the fabric weighs nearly twice as much. In other words, there is about twice as much cloth to the same surface in the American as compared with the British. John Chinaman understands this perfectly well, and buys accordingly, in spite of his friend Bull's daisy possibilities.

We have abundant evidence—if any body can need evidence—of the fact that good, substantial American cotton fabrics are at least as cheap as their British rivals. We have been shown American shirtings now selling here at eleven cents per yard side by side with similar British fabrics which cost eleven cents at wholesale in Manchester in 1842. The American fabric is heavier, and in no respect inferior. So again: We have English heavy brown shirtings, 40 inches wide, bought this season in Manchester at six and a half cents per yard, which are by no means equal in quality to the similar brown shirtings made in Paterson, which are now selling in this city at seven and a half cents per yard. Here, says a free trader, is a cent a yard difference in favor of the British fabric. But not apart from the superiority in quality the British piece of thirty seven yards weighs nine lbs. thirteen oz. while a piece of the Paterson goods of 30 yards weighs 11 lbs. 8 oz. Thus the British cloth, which seems to be a cent a yard cheaper, actually cost 24 cents a pound. This fact illustrates the general difference between the rival fabrics. A hundred weight of British cloth is spread over more surface than so much American, and therefore is said to be cheaper.

importer has lost one hundred dollars per case. This is the way British cottons are now selling here, and some American which have been had for high prices may not do much better.

—We were boarding in 1833 in a mechanics' boarding-house in this city, where several Englishmen lived, one of them but three weeks in the country. Of course he was comparing every thing American with their English counterparts, not at all to the advantage of the former. At last, he remarked, 'Your fish are not so fine as those of England.' 'That, I suppose,' said a dry Yankee who had heard till his patience was exhausted, 'is because they have coarser water to swim in.' The company laughed, and the Englishman finished his dinner in silence.

MARGARET AND THE MINISTER.

A Scotch Story, not faulted on, but all fact.

BY LAURIE TODD.

I spent a month in London, in 1833. During this period, I was engaged every night, Sundays excepted, to some club society, conversations, or dinner party. Among the latter, from the peer to the peasant. On one occasion I dined at Lord B's. There were twelve at the table, and six servants, in splendid uniform, to wait upon them. I put on my best black, and went into the carriage to this important affair. I had got a few glimpses at high life previous to this, so that I felt some confidence in myself. The mistress of the feast sat at the head of the table, and on her right sat a young lady, a Miss C—, at the right of whom I was seated, while the eldest daughter of the family, a fine young lady of seventeen, sat at my right hand. So that I sat between the two. When I looked at the servants, with their powdered heads and cloths of scarlet—at the vessels of gold and silver, jars of china, and platters of glass; at the lords and ladies, sirs and counts; at the room, the seats, sofas, ottomans, and foot stools of which far outshone what I had read of Eastern luxury and splendor, and whose gas lamps and chandeliers sent forth a blaze more brilliant than a winter's sun; I thought this was rather going ahead of anything of the sort I had yet seen, and was afraid I might make some blunder; however, I was resolved to maintain my confidence, and make myself perfectly at home, like my worthy countryman, Sir Andrew Wyle, at a ball given by the Duchess of Dalhousie, in the next square to the one in which I was then partaking of London hospitality. I soon found that Miss C— was a social, intelligent mortal, and felt myself at home with her at once.

'Miss,' said I, 'I have been at some fine parties in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Liverpool, but this is carrying the joke a little beyond any thing I have before seen; I am afraid I may go wrong, as I am some like the old woman in Scotland, who went to dine with the minister; so if I blunder, you must help me along.'

To this she readily consented. 'But what of the old lady in Scotland?' said she.

'I have heard my father,' I replied, 'relate the story, some fifty years ago. It happened in the parish where he lives.'

She was much surprised to hear that he, my father, then lived in his ninety first year.

'On a certain market day,' I continued, 'Margaret, the wife of a neighboring farmer, in addition to her load of hens, geese, &c., brought a small basket of eggs as a present to the minister. Having sold off her load of sundries, she wended her way to the parsonage. After inquiring how he, the wife, and the bairns did, she said—

'I have brought ye twa or three fresh eggs for the gude wife, to help in making her yaul bannocks.' (Christmas cakes.)

'The eggs were kindly received, and it being dinner hour, she was invited to stop and take her kail, soap.'

'Nay, nay,' says Margaret, 'I dinna ken how to behave at great folks' table.'

'On, never mind,' said the minister. 'Just do as you see us do.'

'Margaret was finally persuaded, and sat down at the table. It so happened that the minister was old and well stricken with age, and hid, with all, received a stroke of the palsy, in conveying the spoon from the dish to his lips, the arm being unsteady; the soup was apt to spill, therefore, to prevent damage befalling his clothes, it was his custom to fasten one end of the table-cloth to the top of his waistcoat, just under his chin. Margaret, who sat at the opposite corner of the table, watching his motions, pinned the other end of the table-cloth to a strong homespun shawl, under her chin. She was attentive to every move. The minister deposited a quantity of mustard on the edge of his plate, and Margaret, not observing this fugate exactly, carried the spoon to her mouth. The mustard soon began to operate on the olfactory nerve. She had never seen mustard before, and did not know what it meant. She thought she was bewitched. To expectorate on the carpet was a sin. She was almost crazy with pain. Just at this moment the girl coming in with some clean plates, opened the door near which Margaret sat. Margaret at once sprung for the door, upset the girl, plates and all, and swept the table of all its contents, the crash of which added speed to her flight. Making two steps at once in descending the stairs, the minister, breakfast at the other end of the table cloth, was compelled to follow as fast as his tottering limbs could move. He held to the banisters until the pins gave way, when away flew Margaret, who never again dorkened the minister's doors.'

THE TEXAN REVOLUTION.

Extracted from a pamphlet under this title published at Washington, D. C. April 1843, by P. Jones.

The kindness and generosity of the Mexicans—the ingratitude, falsehoods and frauds of the Americans—and the pretexts of the Revolution.

Since time began, no emigrants were ever treated with so much kindness and generosity as those Americans who settled in Texas. Their land was given them. They were exempted from taxes for ten years, and from Custom House duties during the same term, for every thing imported for their own use. The Laws protected their industry, both agricultural and mechanical, in a high degree. In return, they were only required to bring evidence of good moral character, and to make oath to support the Constitution, and to conform to the religion which it established. By complying with these conditions, becoming the lawful proprietors of land, and residing six months, the settlers became naturalized citizens.

I will quote a few authorities to show how Mexico carried out the lavish generosity with which she commenced; how she more than fulfilled the liberal promises she had made to American emigrants, notwithstanding the lawless and perfidious conduct of so many Americans.

David G. Burnett, an emigrant from Newark, N. J., at one time a Judge, and since Vice President, and acting President of Texas, wrote on the 4th of November, 1830, as follows:

'No country promises a more ample remuneration to the industry of its inhabitants than this; and the laws of none afford stronger protection to the labor of respectable emigrants. Population she wants, sober, industrious, virtuous, republican population. With this she will compete with the choicest sections of the globe, in all that is requisite to secure the happiness and prosperity of man.'

This letter, it will be observed, was written near the close of the year in which Samuel Houston emigrated to Texas for the purpose of revolutionizing it.

In 1831, Anthony Day and George Curtis Esquires, of New York, and Gen. William H. Sumner, of Boston, Trustees of the Galveston Bay and Texas Land Company, published a pamphlet, from which I make the following extracts:

'Though the Catholic Religion is required to be supported, the laws are tolerant, and there is no persecution for opinion's sake, upon that most interesting topic.'

'Public instruction is predicated upon the following basis:—In all the towns of the State, there shall be established a competent number of common schools, in which there shall be taught reading, writing and cyphering, the Catechism of the Christian Religion, a short and simple explanation of the Constitution, and the general one of the Republic, the rights and duties of men in society, and that which may conduce to the better education of youth.'

'The method of instruction shall be uniform throughout the State, and in those places where it may be necessary there shall be institutions of learning more suitable for the dissemination of public instruction in the useful Arts and Sciences.'

'The influence of free constitutions and wise laws has seldom been more perfectly illustrated than in the sudden development of the resources and advantages which this fertile country now exhibits.'

'Except for the consideration named, [greater security to the South Western portion of the United States] the cession of Texas is not desirable to the inhabitants. They are perfectly contented with their condition under its present Government. They desire no better. It is a free Republic like the United States. The people choose their own rulers and make their own laws; and those laws exempt them from duties upon all goods imported for their own use, and from taxes for the support of Government, for ten years from their settlement. What more can they desire? and if they did, we know not to what Government they could look with a prospect of attaining it.'

'Having ascertained the important powers of the Federal and State Governments of the Republic, it became necessary for the settler to be informed that these powers are so carried into effect by the laws, as to afford the highest encouragement to NATIONAL INDUSTRY, by protecting duties on all articles of agricultural produce and mechanical construction, particularly those of wood and ether. Of these, the prices of which are high from the abundant supply of the precious metals, and the habitual inactivity and luxury of the Generous Mexicans, the intelligent classes of emigrants will avail themselves in a rapid accumulation of wealth.'

'The time seems now to have arrived and the policy adopted, which Gen. Pike, upon actual observation of the country upwards of twenty years ago, when it was under the non despotism of Spain, considered necessary to its prosperity. His observation was, 'that if the numerous bays and harbors of the Gulf of Mexico were opened to the trade of the world, and a general license given to the cultivation of all the productions the country is capable of, with freedom of exportation and importation, with proper duties on Foreign Goods, the country would immediately become rich and powerful, and a proper stimulus would be held out for the poor to labor, when certain of finding a ready sale for the productions of their Plantations and Manufactories.'

From the Nashville, (Tenn.) Banner.

The following letter from a gentleman of respectability, now in Texas, has been politely furnished us for publication:

Texas of Austin, Oct. 2, 1830.

'I have resided in this country nearly four years, and have been active in collecting all the information to be relied on, relative to my adopted country, and shall give it to you as such, under the hope and persuasion that it will carry conviction with it, until the leading facts are refuted or at least controverted. The new settlers are represented, and enjoy every civil privilege that reasonable men could ask for. Those who are here are satisfied, and say that this is the most magnificent government they ever lived under.'

From the N. Y. Cour. and Env. of Nov. 1834.

'The mildest system of government exists in Texas. Settlers are allowed to carry in almost any amount of property, for their own use, duty free. * * * The laws formerly existing against North Americans, and requiring the settlers to be Catholics, have recently been repealed.'

Extract from a letter of William Wilson, an emigrant from Boston, dated Aug. 18, 1834.

'Some people might ask if we are at peace with the Mexicans. We are, and they are disposed to do all they can for the people. * * * We pay no taxes of any kind, and are not likely to do so for some time. In fact, things are in a very promising state, and the people are accumulating property.—All religions are tolerated, which is well for Texas. This is a new law, and gives much satisfaction to the people.'

Extract from a letter of Mr. Bartlett, dated Dec. 30, 1844.

'Col. Austin was imprisoned for advising his colonists to form a State Government for themselves, whether the Mexican Government permitted it or not—a high offence, cognizable by the courts of the United States, and for which in some countries, imprisonment would be a light punishment.'

'I have frequently heard the Government acknowledged by the inhabitants, to be the easiest they ever lived under.'

Extracts from a letter of Gen. John T. Mason, dated Sept. 28, 1834. The writer had just returned from Texas.

'The most important act of the Legislature of Coahuila and Texas, was the organizing of Texas into a separate judicial district.'

'All proceedings of the courts of Texas are required to be in English, and the right of trial by jury, in all cases, civil and criminal, is secured; which gives to the code of Texas the security and safeguards of the English law. This system is permanent, and will never be relinquished. Indeed, it was so satisfactory to the Mexican legislators, when explained to them, that they proposed to extend the same provision to Coahuila at the next session.'

'President Santa Anna is friendly to the colonists and to all foreigners.'

A work, entitled 'Guide to Texas Emigrants,' was published in Boston by David Woodman, Jr., in 1835. The following are extracts:

'The trial by jury, in all cases, civil and criminal is provided for, in which eight out of twelve, or two-thirds of the jurors, give a verdict. This law is now in full operation, under the administration of Thomas Jefferson Chambers, a lawyer of eminence, formerly an American citizen.'

'The national religion is the Catholic, but a late law of the State allows both religious and political toleration, provided the public order be not disturbed.'

The above mentioned work was published the same year that Samuel Houston did raise his flag.

The reader is now prepared to appreciate the veracity, honor and gratitude of men who put forth in their Declaration of Independence (a detestable counterfeit of our own) the following pretexts for revolution:—

'If [the Government] has refused to secure, on a firm basis, the right of trial

SEE HERE!

One of the most notorious customs of the present day, to gull the unwary, is to throw out an "advertisement," with a caption to attract attention:—such as:— "god's selling at half price; now's the time to make your fortune; Millerism and the Mormons prove the world must come to an end, and we will sell goods for almost nothing to be ready; selling at cost; lots of fine things at less than cost; ready made clothing cheaper than unmade cloth; goods cheaper than the cheapest; great attraction; a particular assortment for the ladies; call in, for things made here; the great depot for every body; that's the hammer; and ten thousand other odd phrases to cozen the populace into, to say the least, a shave; for good goods, and fair prices will recommend themselves.

Reader! whenever you see an extra exclamation for trade, only a little "soft soap" to "raise the wind," look wild you will be yanked! All this flummery of silver steel needles; cast iron mill stones, gold iron wedges, raw silk handkerchiefs with cotton warp and manila filling; paste diamonds; and bear's oil directly from Paris; Greenian sacks; and second mourning calicoes, is downright knavery! Let every person make his eyes his chap, and this stool-pigeon, monkey-maneuvering and false facing to catch a penny, will be as unpopular as high way robbery. Judgment and honesty are full as well calculated to make bargains as all the new-fangled, printed phantasmagoria of the nineteenth century. Do ye believe it?

"He that sows iniquity shall reap vanity."—Bible.—For a long time we have been astonished at the course pursued by each political party. Every evil thing that can be "hunted up;" all the iniquity that the imagination may suppose, could disgrace humanity; and all the slanderous epithets that malice, corruption, intemperance and savage ferocity use to vilify morality, and revenge a worm eaten disposition, is used by both parties with as much sang froid, and American pomposity, as if our country was a gaming house; politicians, the gamblers; and the destinies of the people a game of bluff! Shame on the people, that suffer such insults and abuses upon the interests and "good name" of our common country, and country's friend! Vilification and slander ought to be punished with more rigor than high way robbery, for there a man has a right to defend himself instantly.

How different is the course of the great men of this day from the Son of God, in former days! He never retaliated railing for railing, but said, pray for thine enemies—and do unto others as you would wish them to do unto you.

It really seems as if the blood of the whole community was poisoned; or that a large portion of mankind, was running mad with the hydrophobia. No one need to brag about the virtue of freedom, and the continuance of liberty; both will go to ruin unless there is a speedy change, and more respect paid to character and national honor. Blessed is the peace maker.

The Dutchman's prop.—An honest old Dutchman, on reading a political article in the newspaper, headed "propose," sounded it very gravely—"ah prop!" and continued drily: "a prop is needed sure, for the mugwumps have pokked the people so far into the clay, that the nation will fall, any how."

Snow.—On Friday morning last, the 18th, snow commenced falling, and more or less, continued to fall till after 4 p.m.—not more than two or three inches, however, had the presumptuous audacity to tarry among the green coats of warm weather.

On Saturday morning, when the sun arose, as clear as crystal, the scene was sublimely grand and picturesquely magnificent! The mellow rays of King Sol, glittered on the old white surveyor's hairy mantle, which covered mother earth's grassy bosom, as far as the eye could glance, while the green leafy shrubbery, orchards and forest, stood trembling in their beautiful summer clothes, as if they had been caught in one of the rude snags of ugly old winter!

Goose Quills.—To ridicule men or women, we call them geese, and at the same time make a "goose quill" pen the most exalted ideas.

Is there any religion in that?

by jury—that paladium of civil liberty, and only safe guarantee for the life, liberty, and property of the citizen?

It denies us the right of worshipping the Almighty according to the dictates of our consciences.

During the war which ensued upon the Texan insurrection, the leading men of the movement, and their agents in the United States, made earnest appeals to us to come to the rescue in the name of religious freedom. While Stephen F. Austin commanded the Texan army, a letter appeared in the N. Y. Transcript, purporting to have been written in a drumhead, under Austin's dictation, in which such an appeal was directed to the descendants of the puritans!—Can four falsehood and humbug go further?

I wrote at the time a full exposure of this fraud, and offered it first to the Transcript, then to several other papers, of this city, but could not get it admitted into any. I have the MS. by me as a memento. It was afterwards published in London.

The declaration continues:

It has failed to establish any public system of education.

It has been seen that a law had been passed providing for such a system. The conspirators must mean I suppose that pecuniary provision had not been made by the government. Such provision was never made in Massachusetts until very recently, nor then except to a comparatively trifling extent. For two hundred years every town established and maintained its own schools under the regulations proscribed by the State. In the main they do the same still. The Mexican government was not yet out of the revolution, the treasury was low and the nation in debt. Why should not the Texans establish their own schools? What a daring and cold blooded attempt at deception is disclosed in this complaint!

The following "pretext" is also set down:

It incarcerated in a dungeon, for a long time, one of our citizens, for no other cause but a zealous endeavor to procure the acceptance of our constitution, and the establishment of a State government.

This is the case of the Irishman who was to be hung for stealing a silver watch, there was a horse at the end of it. In another part of the same respectable document, the revolutionists declare, that "so far from their remonstrances and petitions being regarded, the agents who bear them are thrown into dungeons."

Now mark how plain a tale shall put the Fa-staff story down.

Austin went to Mexico in 1833, the bearer of a constitution formed by an insurrectionary convention in Texas, who had undertaken to dismember the State to which they belonged and owed allegiance, and to erect a part of it [Texas] into a separate State. By the constitution and laws of Mexico, a new State could not be admitted into the Mexican union unless she had 80,000 inhabitants; nor could she form a constitution, unless she had been previously admitted. Texas had at that time only 20,000 inhabitants, and had made no previous application for admission. The very proposal to be admitted, in such a manner and under such circumstances, showed an audacity hardly less than criminal. Moreover, the proposed constitution said not a word about slavery when slavery was existing in Texas, and was required by the federal laws to be abolished. By this silence, it was intended to continue it. The existing State constitution—that of Coahuila and Texas—had abolished it.

The Mexican Congress rejected the proposed constitution, and Austin departed quietly for Texas; but before he had journeyed so far as to be beyond reach, there was transmitted to the hands of Government a letter of Austin, written from the city of Mexico, recommending to the municipal authorities of the cities and towns of Texas to take their government affairs into their own hands, and to organize under the rejected constitution. Upon this discovery he was pursued, arrested, and imprisoned.

Hear what himself said respecting this transaction, in a letter dated Jan. 17, 1831, soon after his arrest:

"I do not, in any manner, blame the Government for arresting me."

"The General Government are disposed to do every thing for Texas; they can be doing to promote its prosperity and welfare, that is consistent with the constitution and the laws; and I have no doubt the State Government will do the same, if they are applied to in a proper manner."

Again, in August, 1834, Austin wrote: "The Government have remedied all the evils complained of in Texas; and he recommended 'that a public act of gratitude should be passed by the people, for those remedies that had been applied by the Government.' In November of the same year, a grand central committee of the Texan settlers, for the purpose of counteracting the pernicious influence of intruders and demagogues, and putting down the foul calumnies they were busily employed in propagating against the Mexican Government, issued an address to the people, of which the following is an extract:

"We ask you, in the spirit of candor, has the Government ever asked any thing unreasonable of Texas? If it has, we must, before God and our country, say we know it not. Again, (for your experimental knowledge must bear us out,) has it ever burdened you with taxes, or the performance of arduous, perilous or expensive duties? Nay, has Texas ever borne any part of the expenses of sustaining the Government that protects our lives, our liberty and our prosperity?"

When have the people of Texas called upon the Government for any law to their advantage, or for the repeal of any law by which they were aggrieved, but what their requests have been granted?"

Austin fully and repeatedly admits the truth of the charges against him, states that he had received no personal ill-treatment, and expected soon to be set at liberty, which, in point of fact, he was, in a humane and magnanimous manner, by President Santa Anna, giving the most solemn pledges to exert his influence to maintain the supremacy of the laws, and to discountenance the disturbers of the peace. "Nevertheless," he returned to Texas only to rush into rebellion, and to set his hand to the atrocious falsehoods, and to dictate that sacrilegious appeal to the pity of this country, which I have mentioned. Even if the fact on which it was grounded had been true, Mexico had forbidden religious freedom, and persecuted him for non-conformity; he would have had no right to complain; for it was on the express condition that none but Catholics, should be brought into the country, and that they should take an oath to conform to the Catholic religion, that his father, and he after him, obtained the grant of a foot of land; and to support that religion. Austin had taken an oath. This shows how highly he valued his Protestant faith, if he had any!

Yet this is the stiler of Texas, whom Gen. James Hamilton in his late letter vilifying the Press of Mexico, likened to William Penn! Our (or the Texas?) Gen. of Great Kenosha, financiering fame, found it easier to libel Santa Anna than to bribe him!

Foreign News

TWENTY DAYS LATER.

By the last Steamship, and the ordinary course of the mails, without any exertion on the part of the N. Y. Herald, we have received our regular files of European papers, from which we extract THE NAME OF VICTORIA'S BABY, LIBERATION OF O'CONNELL, AND SUNDRY OTHER MATTERS.

ENGLAND.

London, Thursday.

Christening of the Infant Prince.—The baptism of the infant prince, second son of her Majesty, took place on Friday in the private chapel at Windsor Castle. The Foreign Ministers, and others assembled in the red drawing rooms, and soon after were conducted to seats provided for them in the chapel. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Norwich, with the Bishop of Oxford and the Dean of Windsor, assembled in the vestry at six o'clock, when the procession of the sponsors for the infant Prince was formed. The sponsors were the Duke of Cambridge, proxy for Prince George of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Kent, proxy for the Duchess of Saxo-Coburg and Gotha. The Dowager Lady Lytton handed the Prince to the Archbishop, who solemnised the rite of baptism, the Duke of Cambridge naming his Royal Highness Alfred Ernest Albert. The choir, accompanied by the organ, sang Handel's Hallelujah chorus from "Judas Macabbeus." The Archbishop of Canterbury then pronounced the benediction. A state banquet in honor of the event was afterwards given by her Majesty in St. George's Hall, which had a magnificent appearance.

IRELAND.

Liberation of Mr. O'Connell.—In the early part of Friday a communication was made to the High Sheriff of the city of Dublin, by means of an official letter from Mr. Lucas, that he should hold him self in readiness to discharge the state prisoners as soon as the order of the House of Lords should arrive.

Mr. Giffith, one of the agents for the traversers in the late state prosecutions, who remained in London after the other agents, Messrs. Ford, Malony, and Cantwell, who came over on Thursday with the intelligence that the judgment had been reversed by the House of Lords, arrived on Friday evening with the order for their discharge. Immediately after his arrival, shortly before six o'clock, he proceeded at once to the Richmond Brideswell, and informed Mr. O'Connell and his fellow-prisoners that they were at liberty, which intelligence having spread rapidly through the neighborhood, a considerable number of persons collected round the entrance door of the prison in order to see and welcome them upon their liberation, it having been generally understood that they would go to their respective homes for the night, and return in the morning for the purpose of leaving the prison in triumph—passing along the route by which they were conveyed there. Shortly after seven o'clock, Mr. O'Connell left the penitentiary, leaning upon his sons, Mr. John O'Connell and Mr. Daniel O'Connell, joined accompanied by Mr. Stree, and proceeded on foot, amidst the shouting of the mob, down the Circular Road, along Harrington Street, Stephen's Green, Upper Merrion Street, to Merrion Square, where he arrived about a quarter past eight o'clock. The other prisoners subsequently left the jail, and were also loudly cheered upon making their appearance.

A considerable assembly of persons were collected about Mr. O'Connell's house, and in a few minutes after his entrance, he appeared upon the balcony, and addressed them. He commenced by stating that he had at last returned to his honest home from prison, and proceeded to say, that in other countries it was generally regarded as a disgrace to be sent to jail, which was not the case in Ireland, as they were all aware that he and his brother martyrs were doomed to imprisonment for endeavouring to make their fellow men free. (Great applause.) The learned gentleman then briefly thanked the Irish people for the peace and tranquillity which they had manifested during his incarceration, and said that he had no doubt that they would continue the same course now; they had reason to be joyful. He then alluded to the procession, which, he said, would take place in the morning at ten o'clock, and said he would give his countrymen an opportunity of testifying their love for him, which was only equalled by his love for them. After exhorting them to go home peaceably and quietly, telling them that he would meet them in the morning, the learned gentleman re-entered his house amid loud cheers, which continued for some time.

The crowd, however, dispersed shortly after, without any disturbance taking place.

THE PROCESSION.

At an early hour on Saturday morning, Mr. O'Connell and all the other State prisoners (who were discharged on the previous evening) returned to the Richmond Brideswell for the purpose of leaving it in procession, and passing along the same route by which they were conducted there. The morning was very inauspicious for such a display, in consequence of which it was postponed from ten until nearly two o'clock, by which hour the weather had taken a change for the better, when Mr. O'Connell took his seat, accompanied by Mr. John O'Connell, in the "celebrated chair," in which he and Mr. Ruthven were chaired in after their return from the city of Dublin, in 1832; and proceeded—after the trades, corporation, committee of the Repeal Association, &c., to pass through the principal streets from the Circular Road to Merrion Square, the residence of Mr. O'Connell. The learned gentleman and the other traversers were loudly cheered by the people as they passed along.

Previous to the arrival of any of the carriages, the Circular Road was crowded from the turnpike to the prison, and as far again upon the other side by thousands of the lower orders, who relinquished all ideas of business, and regardless of wind and weather, attended for the purpose of seeing the "Liberator" liberated. Several gentlemen also arrived early, and called at the prison, to congratulate the traversers upon their liberation. Many of them who came from the country presented Mr. O'Connell with addresses, including the Mayor and ex-Mayor of Limerick, who handed him an address adopted by the corporation.

From all parts of Ireland accounts have been received of public rejoicings caused by the reversal of the judgment against the State prisoners.

FRANCE.

According to advices from Paris, the celebrations of the victories in Mexico were not yet ended. "Our letters from France," says a contemporary, represent the court, cabinet, and people as exultant. The flags captured at the battle of the Marais were received with honour equal to that which welcomed the standards of Austria. And the parcel itself is to be brought in a car and sixteen horses to the spot of its nativity in the Rue St. Denis, and there enshrined for the admiration of ages. The King of the French, to express the magnitude of his joy, as well as the magnanimity of his triumph, has sent a monster omnibus as a present to Queen Victoria!

The Presse states, that in consequence of a convention concluded between the five great powers, on the 20th of December, 1841, for the suppression of the slave trade, the Prussian Government has published an ordinance, by virtue of which the captain, supercargo, and the first pilot of every ship convicted of having been engaged in the slave trade are condemned to hard labour for a period varying from five to twenty years. The same punishment will be inflicted on the owner, the insurer, or on any person advancing funds knowing the destination of the vessel. The crew are to be liable to a confinement of from six months to five years, if it be proved that their operation in this trade has been voluntary.

It has come out (says the Chronicle) that Sir Robert Peel, absorbed by the O'Connell strife, had determined to fling the Tabiti question overboard altogether, back out of his threats in France, and pocket her insults magnanimously, without obtaining one single atom of reparation or concession. The whole party of the French conservatives have been in a fit of laughter ever since; and the opposition are ashamed of themselves for having supposed for a moment England capable of resorting to an insult or threats.

"The truth is now known," says the Debut. "Has M. Guizot offered to disavow or to recall M. D'Aubigny? No, for M. D'Aubigny is neither disavowed nor recalled. Has the English cabinet demanded the disavowal and recall—not only of M. D'Aubigny, but of Captain Brunt? Whatever may have been the phrases through which the negotiation passed, one thing is certain, the arrangement is concluded, and neither Captain Brunt nor M. D'Aubigny has been disavowed or recalled. M. Guizot's firmness must, therefore, be applauded, if he has refused this double sacrifice which was demanded of him. The English cabinet deserves commendation for moderation, if, after mature examination, and recognising that there was no fault on our part in the use of our rights, it relaxed its pretensions."

SWEDEN.

The Times of Saturday contains the following letter, by which it will be seen that the reformers of Sweden have, for the present, been defeated:—

Stockholm, Aug. 20.

The question of changing the law of parliamentary representation is decided in the negative. The Diet of nobles discussed yesterday, this highly important matter, from nine o'clock in the morning till seven o'clock p.m., and the result was the rejection of the project by a majority of 450 against eighty-two. In the Diet of the clergy, the debates continue to-day but it is expected that the project will be thrown out nearly unanimously. The Diet of the citizens has adopted the project by a majority of forty-seven against nine, and also the Diet of the peasants passed it by a majority of eighty-nine against fourteen; but as the consent of the four Diets is requisite for making a law of the empire of any project discussed, the present attempt of changing one of the fundamental laws of the country, is therefore frustrated.

INDIA AND CHINA.

By the Overland mail, intelligence has been received from the East, which is, however, of but slight importance. A mutiny occurred upon the subject of pay in the 64th B. N. I., which had been for some time previously in a state of insubordination. General Hunter was sent for to quell it, but upon his arrival on the ground was hoisted by the men, who pelled the commanding officer with bricks, and kicked another. The mutineers were subsequently disarmed, and marched under guard to Sukkur, where thirty-nine of the ringleaders were arrested. The conduct of the officers in command had been freely canvassed, and Colonel Mosely had been suspended.

Scinde was generally tranquil, fever was somewhat prevalent, and among the sufferers had been Sir C. Napier. A good deal of intrigue was going on in Affghanistan, but the accounts were so conflicting that it was difficult to ascertain the facts. A report was current that Herat had been taken by the Persians, but nothing certain was known.

Sir Henry Hardinge left Aden on the 6th July, and was expected to arrive at Calcutta on the 21th, where Lord Ellenborough was waiting for him. The recall of the late Governor-General had produced a modified declaration in his favour from some quarters, but it was generally regarded with indifference; his lordship was to leave in the Tenasserim steamer at the beginning of August. Various reports were calculated about the Indigo crop, which was said to have suffered from drought and locusts.

In Bombay there was a trial going on of eighteen Parsees for a murder committed at two o'clock in the day in one of the most public streets in the town, on the principle of the gang murder, which degraded India. Great excitement prevailed on the subject; the murdered man was one of their own tribe, and yet much money was expended in the hope of preventing the conviction of any of the parties.

A project was on foot at Bombay for making a railway to the Thul and Bhore ghats, two great passes in the mountains of the Concan country, by which all the trade comes to that part.

A party of forty cavalry, sent out about twelve miles from Shikarpore to protect a body of grass cutters, was attacked by some Beloochees in the pay of Shere Mahomed, in consequence of the neglect of the native officers commanding; who retired from the road to smoke with their soldiers. The grass cutters, and twelve men and one native officer, were killed by the assassins. This had produced a stringent order from Sir Charles Napier.

Letters from China come down to the 21st June, but contain no news beyond great languor in trade.

Intelligence from Sydney to the early part of May arrived by the same route; the country was suffering much from the depreciation of stock.

The Cameo from Liverpool to Calcutta, with a cargo, valued at L. 60,000, was lost off Koolgre, and the Candahar from China was totally wrecked near Bombay.

ENGLAND.

Sir Robert Peel will leave Dryton Manor, for London, to-day. The right honourable baronet is likely to remain in town several days on public business.

The general subscription to the fund for covering the expenses of the meeting of the British Association, at York, on the 26th instant, amounts to nearly £1,000.

Cotterston is said to have been disposed of, by Mr. Bowes, after his break down at Goolwood, to Earl Spencer, for 2,500 guineas.

The citizens of York do not relish the idea of calling the infant prince "Duke of Kent," instead of "Duke of York," as precedent warrants. They have had a meeting on the subject.

A large finnan-whole was caught, near Spurn Point, on Wednesday week. It was alive when taken, but died in the afternoon. It measured from thirty-five to forty feet from the tip of the nose to the tail.

A rumor has prevailed at Perth, that Prince Albert was to visit Blair Castle on the first of the present month. The Perth Courier doubts the truth of this rumor, and it is now evident that it was unfounded.

On Friday morning last the carriages, sheds at the terminus of the London and Brighton Railway, with several carriages and a quantity of working tools, were destroyed by fire.

The total revenues of the Prince of Wales, now three years old, (from the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster) amounted, in the year ending 31st December last to upwards of £73,100.

The Gazette, of Friday, contains an order for a Court mourning for the Grand Duchess Alexandra of Russia, to commence yesterday change on Thursday next, and terminate on Monday next.

The committee of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland, at the recent general meeting of the society, awarded a silver medal for Rodway's Patent Horse-shoe, which was exhibited by Mr. John Martin, veterinary surgeon, of Dublin.

Two men and three lads have been killed in a coal-pit at Darham, near Maryport. They were descending the shaft in a basket, when the rope by which they were lowered broke, and they fell to the bottom, a depth of fifty yards. They were killed on the spot.

A fatal boiler explosion occurred, a few days since, at Little Madeley, in Staffordshire; one of the firemen being smashed to death by a quantity of falling bricks. Large masses of iron and numbers of bricks, some red hot, were driven in all directions by the explosion. One large piece of iron travelled a quarter of a mile.

The Lakes.—The number of visitors to the lakes this year is exceedingly great, and the innkeepers can scarcely find sufficient accommodation for the visitors who are continually pouring upon them.

Natural Curiosity.—A white swallow was recently shot by a young gentleman at Ince-leithen. It was observed playing about with some common swallows, and had attracted the attention of several persons by its conspicuous dress. It was stuffed as a curiosity.

Another Royal Visit to Scotland.—The Times states, that, as soon after the prorogation of Parliament as her Majesty is sufficiently recovered to withstand the fatigue, she will, with her royal consort, again honour her Scottish subjects with her presence among them. Her Majesty will proceed northwards in the royal yacht.

Honorary Reward by the King of the French.—The King of the French has caused to be transmitted to England, with a complimentary note, a gold medal which his Majesty has awarded to Captain Kree't of the English merchant service, for his assistance to a French vessel which was, some time since, wrecked on the coast of Africa.

Louis Philippe.—We are positively assured that his Majesty Louis Philippe will reach England on the 9th of next month, should no unforeseen obstacle occur.—Times.

The Queen and Albert visited Scotland week before last.

An Outrage on the Highway.—The Albany Evening Journal states that a gentleman of Lockport, with his cousin, Mr. Douglass, of Albany, hired a carriage from Mr. Crocker, who keeps a livery stable in Hudson street, to take them over to Stephentown. While there on Sunday afternoon, walking over a farm belonging to the family, they noticed a stake in the ground bearing the inscription "Down with the Root." This they pulled up in a moment of sport and without thinking that the act would give offence to any body. The next morning (Monday) they started on their return home, and when within twelve miles of Albany, were overtaken by a band of 40 or 50 "Indians," all on horseback, armed, painted and disguised. The Chief riding up to the driver, levelled a pistol at his head, and ordered him to stop. The driver, not immediately obeying this command, the Indians made at the horses with their spears, whereupon the driver stopped. One of the band then mounted the driver's box, and two others got inside the carriage. The Indian on the box cocked his pistol, held it to the driver's head, and directed him to turn back with his team. This order was obeyed, and under the escort of the band, Mr. Douglass was driven all the way back to Stephentown, where he was examined, and the proposition discussed, whether he should be tarred and feathered. Eventually it was decided that he had done nothing to deserve this indignity, and he was released, but did not reach home till Tuesday morning. The driver has these facts from Rogers, the driver of the carriage, who adds that on his compulsory ride back to Stephentown, his Indian companion on the box, whenever they approached a dwelling, would level his pistol at his head, raise his tomahawk, as if about to strike, and remain in that attitude until they had passed the house.—Bicknell's Reporter.

Canadian Politics.—The writs for the election of a new Provincial Parliament will, we understand, be issued to-day; and a few short weeks will, we trust, show the friends, as well as the foes, of British connexion and constitutional liberty, that the loyal people of United Canada, however they may differ on minor points of legislation, will unite as one man in sustaining our true-hearted Governor in his efforts to defend the prerogative of the crown and the liberties of the subject, against the revolutionary attacks of place seeking patronage coveting demagogues, whose avowed object it is, to govern not for the good of the whole, but for the profit of a clique. If this majority of the electors of Montreal do not wish to see our streets again invaded by the hieling ruffians, who on a former occasion, enabled a minority to triumph over them, let them cast aside every feeling of apathy, act like men and Britons, organize themselves into companies for their mutual protection, and bid defiance to all "pressure from without." They have had a sample of what the Hinks and Drummond party are capable of, and one lesson of this description ought surely to suffice.—Montreal Herald, Sept. 25.

Learn.—A noted person once said the judges of law are "windows" to enlighten men on justice, but we think in this age, like the poor man's "paper lights," many of them let in a little light, but the light itself cannot see through them.

A Look and Whig.—A woman recently gave birth to a son with two heads in Baltimore. He would make an excellent politician; having a head for a Look and a head for a Whig. A two faced fellow surely.

"A Look," an abbreviation for Loco Foco.

THE END OF THE WORLD!

Tremendous Excitement—Immense Crowd at the Big Tent—Converts—Churches Deserted—Weeping and Praying.
The excitement in this community, in regard to Millerism, is much greater than we had supposed—much greater than one who has not visited the "Big Tent" could imagine. The scene presented there on Sunday night, was certainly a very remarkable one. The immense tent was filled with thousands of persons, every seat and spot of ground being occupied, and still thousands had to go away unable even to get inside. The churches throughout the city were almost entirely deserted, so eager were all to hear the doctrines held by Miller and his followers expounded. Among the vast assembly in the great tent we noticed people of every profession, and every class of society. The high, the low, the rich, the poor, the aristocrat, the democrat, preacher, saint and sinner; men, women, children and "muggers" all crowded and thronged together, and almost suffocated with the dust, heat and smoke. After the sermon had been preached—and it was a very reasonable, sensible sermon, which none could object to—came a scene which beggars description. To be reached it would have to be seen. The mountainous converts, of whom there were a very large number, threw themselves in the dust and dirt around the pulpit, and for nearly an hour, men and women were praying, singing, shouting, groaning and weeping bitterly. The noisiest assembly to be very generally observed, and hundreds of them were crying and making the most hideous noises. Then preachers did not get any certain time for the destruction of the world, but stated that they were expecting it hourly, and would watch and pray until it did come.

The tent was taken down yesterday morning, and the company started up the river, and we were truly glad that they have gone. These scenes as were witnessed on Sunday night, continued much longer, they would, we believe, produce an incalculable evil in this community. The doctrines they preach are sound—their sermons none could object to—and they were entitled to, as they did receive, a respectful hearing; but the appeals to the passions and fears, such as were indulged in on Sunday night, would have a bad effect on the ignorant. There are scores in Louisville, who are now half crazy on the subject. The believers in Millerism in this city, are composed not only of the ignorant, but of some of the most intelligent men in the community. Our own opinion is, that it is a false religion—and time will prove it. We do not, however, at all question the sincerity of the preachers or believers.

Copper.—We are gratified to see public attention more and more turned to the consideration of the propriety of working our own rich copper mines. The construction of a ship canal around the foot of St. Mary cannot long be delayed. This will afford every facility for transferring by railroads, provisions and goods up to the primitive mining region on the southern shore of Lake Superior. Equal facilities will of course be available for transporting copper to this city, and the eastern market. A writer in Hunt's Magazine presents a detailed statement of the copper business of England.

The works are very extensive and costly, and owned by a few individuals. The smelting of copper ores for the world is in the control of a few English manufacturing firms. An establishment costs about 100,000 pounds sterling, owing to the great number of processions to be gone through. But England does not furnish all the ores which are used. Cuba exports to the Swansea works 25,886 tons; Valparaiso, Chili and Copiapo 12,801, for which $3,112,102 is paid in England. All other copper ores smelted in that country, cost $7,363,620. One house smelts $2,314,940 worth of ore.

The writer wishes to impress upon Americans the necessity of working their own mines in this country. It now pays duty of 24 1/2 per cent in the ore as an import, and 10 per cent duty. The freight, insurance, and charges from New-York or Cuba to England, are one fifth the proceeds of sales. A new mine has been opened in Cuba about 25 miles from the port of Neuquien, by Mr. Dison, the vice-consul of the United States. A Spanish company, called the Santiago Company, whose mines are at St. Jago de Cuba, are said to have received 50 per cent profit per annum. The per cent of copper is from 12 to 20 per cent, and it is regarded as very rich ore.

We learn from the Cincinnati Chronicle, that a Mr. George E. Sellers, of that city, has a furnace by which he expects to reduce the enormous expense of working copper. His plan is to be tested at the copper region on Lake Superior. The opinion is confidently expressed that the day will soon come when the English works will have to be abandoned. The manufacture of five or ten millions of dollars worth of this valuable metal a year in our western country, would benefit immensely our Agricultural and Commercial interests.—[Buffalo Com. Adv.]

Important from Canada.—We have received Montreal papers of the 24th inst.

It appears that the Provincial Parliament has been dissolved, and a new election ordered. On this crisis in the affairs of Canada, the Montreal Herald, a loyalist organ, utters the following remarks:

We are on the eve of a general election, which must be the most important in its results, of any that has taken place since Canada, by becoming a British province, ceased to be a spotically governed dependency of France, and obtained that free representative form of constitutional government which Great Britain alone enjoyed, or could bestow. However, the Baldwin-Liberal faction may strive to hide the fact, whatever fantastic tricks they may play off, there are in truth only two great political parties to be found in Canada:

1st.—Those who, whatsoever their imperial politics, whether Tory, Whig, or Radical, sincerely love their mother country, and its monarchical institutions, and, therefore, seek to maintain the integrity of the empire, in which they are proud and happy to be living.

2nd.—Those who, whatever their pretensions and diplomacy, seek, by revolutionizing our constitution, and degrading the legitimate power of the Sovereign, to separate Canada from Great Britain, and either set up for themselves, or petition (contemptible as they are!) to be admitted, as a state, into the neighboring republican confederation.

All minor distinctions are now merged and swallowed up, in these two grand classes in our population, and the result of the approaching election, will go far to decide, for ages at least, the fate of ourselves and our children.

The new Parliament is ordered to meet on the 12th of November next.

Another Haul of Counterfeiters.—The Cincinnati Atlas of the 4th inst. says:

If our city is becoming somewhat celebrated as a field for counterfeiters, it commences their operations upon it, must be admitted also, that we have an Argus-eyed police, that has thus far checked their business; before much mischief was effected. Marshal Saxton has an extensive acquaintance in the city, whose whereabouts he has lately dogged very attentively. He has for a long time been on the search for the plate of the $5 counterfeit note on the Bank of Wheeling, a considerable number of the notes of which have been forced into circulation this summer; and from some suspicious appearances, he concluded to pay a visit to the copper plate printing establishment of Doolittle & Munson, last Wednesday night.

Taking Mr. Smith of the day watch with him, they proceeded up stairs softly, about 11 o'clock, and burst in the door upon two astonished workmen, who had barely time, before Salton and Smith got in, to throw a roll of damp printed sheets of the counterfeit fives into the stove, where a small fire was burning, and to scotch the plate. The fives were snatched from the fire before they were wholly destroyed; and after searching every cranny of the office for the plate, it was at last found at the bottom of an ink box, full of printer's ink.

The names of the workmen are Goodman and Chay. The former has lived in this city for several years, and has a wife and children. He has worked at different times for Woodruff & Hammond, and also for Doolittle & Munson. They were both immediately committed to jail. They had a pile of bank note paper work down ready for printing, and before morning they would have added a large amount of spurious five dollar notes to the circulating medium.

It is proper to add that not a particle of suspicion or blame is attached to Messrs. Doolittle & Munson, the very respectable persons in whose office one of the two men in question had been lately employed on other work. It appears they had a key by which they could enter the office at pleasure; and their employers were perfectly atoned at the inquiry detected and exposed by Marshal Saxton.

Consulate General of the Empire of Brazil, in the United States.

New York, Sept. 24th, 1844.

The exportation of Brazil wood from the ports of Brazil, has always been an exclusive privilege of the Imperial Government—but as abuses have occurred, and some vessels, perhaps through ignorance of the Brazilian laws in relation to the trade, have exported on private account, the said article to foreign ports, it is made known to those whom it may concern, that the laws of Brazil forbid entirely the exportation of the article by private individuals, and imposes a fine of fifteen dollars a ton on each vessel that may take the wood by contraband from any part of the Empire to foreign countries. The fine will be enforced even after the departure of the vessel from Brazil, for which purpose the Government has taken all necessary measures to arrest the adepts and abettors in the clandestine shipment.

LOUIZ HENRIQUE FERREIRA D'AGUIAR.

Consul General.

Earthquake in Livingston Co.—A correspondent of the Courier states that a violent shock of an earthquake was felt in the neighborhood of Lima, Livingston Co., on Thursday evening of last week. At Avon it was quite severe. It was accompanied by an explosion, like a very heavy clap of very distinct thunder, though the night was perfectly cloudless and the air extremely mild and quiet. The windows of the houses were shaken violently, and several persons who had retired (it being about 10 o'clock) leaped from their beds, and went into the street to seek the cause of their alarm. At Caledonia, 15 or 20 miles west, windows and stables were severely jarred, and in one instance a candle was thrown from its candlestick, and loose panes of glass were shaken from the window. The explosion lasted for nearly a minute—quite fifty seconds.

MEXICO.

Our Havana correspondent has sent us a file of the Government newspaper to the 24th of August, received by the "Tavira" British steamer from Vera Cruz. We find in them the following items of interest:—After a long debate, Congress has granted in full the supplies demanded by Santa Anna for the Texas invasion. On the 21st of August, a Mexican express arrived at Mexico from Monterey, containing an official notice that overtures had been made by Sam. Houston for another armistice between Texas and Mexico. The "Diario del Gobierno" states that it had been prohibited from publishing the details of the proposition of Houston, but in the tone in which the allusion to Texas cowardice is couched, some indication is given that Houston has given way in his claims on Mexico; and that the far-famed "revelling in the Halls of the Montezumas" is postponed for the present.—[Phil. Gaz.]

Fire in the Woods.—We understand that for some days past, fire has been raging in the woods near the ridge road, in the town of Ontario, Wayne county. Thousands of acres have already been burned over, and the ground is so excessively dry, that there is no prospect of the progress of the fire being very soon arrested. Miles of fence, a large quantity of hay, and a number of buildings, have been destroyed.

Riots and Bloodshed expected.—We expect bloody times in New York at the coming election. The political clubs of each party, composed of the elite of the nineteenth century, have already had three or four bloody encounters in the streets, in which hundreds were engaged on a side, and more riots may be expected every day. We have no police in New York under Mayor Harper, worth a straw. These fighting clubs are supplied with money, and set upon each other, like bull dogs, by men and saints who build churches and monopolize the kingdom of Heaven. This is a queer world—New York is a queer city—and we are a queer people altogether.—[N. Y. Herald.]

Anecdote.—When Dr. Franklin's mother-in-law first discovered that the young man had a hankering for her laughter, that good old lady said she did not know so well about giving her laughter to a printer—there were already two printing offices in the United States, and she was not certain the country would support them. It was plain, young Franklin would depend for the support of his family on the profits of a third, and this was rather a doubtful chance. If such an objection was urged to a would-be-son-in-law when there were but two printing offices in the United States, how can a printer hope to get a wife, now, when the last census shows the number to be 1557.

THE NAUVOO LIBRARY AND INSTITUTE—LYCEUM, &c.

Mr. Editor:—I trust your readers by your indulgence will not deem it too impertinent in me to make a few enquiries through your valuable columns of the presidents, trustees, officers and leading men of the above institutions. Being a stockholder in the Institute, paying my full shares in books, not being able to draw any, and as a literary reader, I would wish to ascertain whether there is any probability of enjoying the privileges of the Library, or as some are ready to conclude, whether the Institute is broken up? Not, gentlemen that I have any fears of the breaking up of the Institute that I make the above enquiries; but first, seeing that winter is commencing, and that Snow has already visited us, and may possibly continue to be seen about our streets for the most part of the winter. Can we, or not, hatch up something that would comport with the prospects of our flourishing city, and with other cities, by continuing a public institution for books, periodicals, &c., and increase her reputation for learning, for letters and for literary pursuits, &c. Last season the Institute commenced under the most favorable auspices, with the zealous and indefatigable exertions of Benjamin Winchester, Sidney Rigdon and several other gentlemen who attended and addressed our meetings; and which continued to flourish under the support and patronage of the lamented General Joseph Smith, whose presence animated the minds of numerous individuals to become members and hold shares. He, as I am informed took ten shares, and at the same time stimulating its members in calling their eloquent powers in engaging themselves in its exercises, and that too by the most profound display of his own.

I would enquire secondly, where are our Ciceros, our orators, whose eloquence burned from the thelipsis though touched with a live coal? I pause for a reply. Methinks I hear a thousand voices echoing from a thousand tongues, we are not dead but speaketh. Such will come forward and rear a temple to learning, an altar to science, to literature and to every good work; a superstructure of intelligence, whose head will reach the heaven.—Then we have the material; but what master minds will again superintend the building? Knowing some who would gladly become workmen, we need others—as (Phelps), whom we could call into requisition; while some are engaged in every trade and profession in our city, a Taylor could get up such scenes as would display the majesty, beauty and glory of our Institute. I would therefore call upon you, Mr. Editor to stir up the pure minds of those whose devoted energies threw out such an array of native talent last winter as lit up and cheered the spirits of our citizens, thereby relieving our spirits and forming an impenetrable barrier against the chills and gloom of winter.

I have dwelt long on the Institute and should weary your readers to say as much about the Lyceum and Theatre. Suffice it to say, I would like a Lyceum of Shakespeare, for since the days of A. A. I have not been so amused and instructed; even Nicholas (Nichols) with all his love for the drama, never beheld a better scene of things than was exhibited at our theatre.

One word on the Lyceum. With all the variety of animated discussions, the choice recitations, with the compositions full of pathos and lively imagery, as they were; together with the crowded houses, the refined taste shown by the presence of the ladies, with the mature judgment shown by the attendance of the more aged. With all these interests, I hope nothing will appear this season that fosters of evil—no chance for it, however legal a form it may assume—(no) Frank is I am to express myself, I trust that such men will co-operate with us as may be a safeguard to our Lyceum. So shall Nauvoo enthrall any city in the west, for learning, as well as intelligence and wisdom; so shall light and truth spread with majestic sway until every nation is lit with her rays, and finally shrouded with her glory.

An Observer of Men and things.

AN ORDINANCE CONCERNING SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS, AND OTHER PURPOSES:

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the city council of the city of Nauvoo, that before any person shall sell, or dispose of any spirituous or intoxicating drink by a less quantity than one gallon in this city, he or they shall first obtain a license from the Mayors Court, for which shall be paid down for the use of the city, not less than two hundred nor more than four hundred dollars, (and issuing fees) for one year.

Sec. 2. And be it further ordained, that if any person shall sell or give away, dispose of, to be drunk in this city, in less quantity than one gallon, any spirituous or intoxicating drink or liquors, without first obtaining such license, they shall pay a fine of not less than twenty-five and not more than four hundred dollars, to be tried before the Mayor.

Sec. 3. And be it further ordained, that all ordinances or parts of ordinances or private grants repugnant to the interest and meaning of this ordinance, are hereby repealed.

Sec. 4. And be it further ordained, that if any person shall be convicted, before the Mayor, of drunkenness in this city, he, she, or they shall be fined twenty dollars.—This fine may be paid in labor upon the public streets or other public works of this city, at the discretion of the Mayor.

This ordinance to be in force from and after its passage.

DANIEL SPENCER, Mayor.

WILLIAM RICHARDS, Recorder.

THE FIRST LEAF OF AUTUMN.

BY ELIZABETH CARRINGTON.

Is the fall, then, quieting leaf,

Off the tree, and yellowing leaf,

The first to tell the autumn wind,

That the light of day is now behind,

Slowly parted from the cooling branch,

I see the falling leaf,

A story of sorrow and woe,
And night's darkest hours may hover
Where dangers lurk below;
Tossing on the sunlit sea of gladness,
The cheek and the eye may be dry,
Whilst the clouds of dejection and sadness
In secret overshadow the breast.

THE BURIAL.
Hark! hark! the muffled drum!
A soldier's funeral comes!
Floods of the creeping worm,
His sepulchre are the arms he bore—
His sepulchre, the cloak he wore;
His sepulchre, the musket of his corpse—
His coffin is his uniform!

With solemn step towards the grave
His corpse is by his comrades borne;
His dirge, the life that warmed him once,
Is now a dirge to him now seems to mourn.
The tolling drum in dejected tones,
Stems of its sadness, round to tell;
It seems grey comrades dead in arms,
Their voices, in parting knell.
Farewell!—Farewell!—Farewell!
Farewell!—Farewell!—Farewell!

MILK SICKNESS, OR METEORISM.

To the Editors:

As there is considerable curiosity excited in this country, in regard to what is commonly called Milk Sickness, and as I am so often requested to give an account of my discovery in relation to it, I take this opportunity to address a few lines to you on the subject.

Some time in the summer of 1838, I was living at Edwardsville, and having occasion to use a quantity of milk, which was somewhat scarce, I examined the udders and branches of creeks in the vicinity in search of such as would answer my purpose. I found a peculiar kind of soft rock, in a bank of a branch which empties into Cahokia creek. When I commenced digging the rock was about eighteen feet above the bed of the branch, and after removing about eight feet of rock, I came to a crack or crevice, which appeared to have been solidly capped over by the rock. On each side of this crack in the rock, was a white substance. I took my knife, and scraped off some of it, which had the appearance of flour; but paid little or no attention to this at the time.

Later in the fall, while hauling the rock to being very warm and dry, looking round for something to quench my thirst,
I saw a small quantity of clear water which appeared to have oozed out from the bank, and from under the rock where I had been at work, and ran out about fifty feet lower down the branch. As I was about to taste this water I perceived a singular smell, but nothing unusual in the taste, and being quite thirsty, drank freely. I then turned round and my trunk, and one of my oxen drank of the water.
The ox soon after had the Milk Sickness;
and his milk never been used since. I did not feel the effect of the water for several days after; but then became sick in my stomach, which increased for a few days, until my sickness was unable to support me. Physicians were called; but not knowing the disease, my case was considered incurable; when Dr. B. F. Edwards, of Alton, was sent for, who pronounced it a case of Milk Sickness.

It seemed to me strange that I should have the Milk Sickness, when none of the family, fifteen or sixteen in number, had any symptoms of it, although they drank freely of milk, and I drank none, even if eaten. During my sickness, there was every day a large quantity of milk separated from the milk, and I had seen it before; when suddenly it occurred to me I had drunk the water in the crack.
After I became able to ride, I went down and examined the place, and satisfied myself that the poison which gave me the Milk Sickness was there.

It being generally known that I had the Milk Sickness, and that I said I took it from drinking water, many questions were asked me concerning it. I mentioned in reply, what has been stated above, with the exception of the place, which I kept secret; as I had suffered by the poison if the substance which contains this poison were valuable, I wanted them. Dr. John H. Wer, of Edwardsville, came to me, and said that my account of the Milk Sickness agreed with his opinion in relation to it, and wished me to show him the place where I said I took it; but I refused to do so until I obtained the privilege I wanted from the owner of the land. I then showed him the crack in the rock, and the substance on the sides; and also the place where I drank the water. Dr. W. said he was satisfied that it was plain to see arsenic on the sides of the rock in the crack; and by throwing in pebbles we could hear them strike water below, and there was no water in the branch below. Dr. W. was anxious for me to commence digging at once; but circumstances prevented.
I found him to be very true to the place, and told him when there was a suitable time we would do so.

When it became dry this season, I spoke to several men about digging for me, and told them where I was going to dig, and what I expected to find, and where I drank the water, which gave me the Milk Sickness. They had the curiosity to go to the place where I had described to them, and obtaining some of the water gave it to a calf, and found that it produced the same disease.

Some further experiments have been made; but I do not expect to arrive at the final result until I have reached the substances that impregnate the water, and render it poisonous. If I make any discoveries which I think will be interesting you shall hear from me again.

J. FOSTER.
Edwardsville, Oct. 8, 1844.

To the Editors:

About one year ago, having heard some of the circumstances of the sickness of Mr. John Foster, and his description of the cause, I called on him to learn something more about it; and his statements so exactly corresponded with the theory I had formed of the disease called Milk Sickness, and its cause, that I became very much interested on the subject, and urged Mr. Foster to go on and test the matter. Some time after that Mr.
Foster invited me to go with him to the place where he drank the water which made him sick, as stated by himself. I did so, and we spent some time in search of the substance he described to me, which he supposed contained the poison.
In a few days Mr. Foster placed in my hands some of the mineral, which he obtained by digging down some three or four feet; and although I had no chemical apparatus, I was convinced that arsenic was present, and by the chemical reacts the mineral was found upon it. I was satisfied that copper was also an ingredient, and was hence induced to change the name of the disease called Milk Sickness, to Meteoism; from Meteo, (Meteoism), as Milk Sickness is a very improper name for it, it is well known that Milk, when despoiled of poison, is not only healthy, but a good antidote to Meteoism, and my experience in the treatment of the disease for ten years past, together with the above circumstances, confirm me in the belief that it is Meteoism.

Within a few days I have had an opportunity of witnessing some experiments on this subject. Water has been obtained from the place above named, and given to healthy calves, which produced the genuine sickness to which cattle are subject in this vicinity, called Milk Sickness.
After the death of one of the calves, I examined its stomach, and found it in the same situation of other cases which I have examined in that locality. The stomach was contracted to a firm, and almost obdurate mass. The mucous membrane of the stomach was easily torn, and the secretory function seemed to have been so completely checked up, as to leave no organ and its contents a most perfectly dry. The food present in the stomach, so that it adhered to the sides.
This accounts for the difficulty of producing an effect by remedies in this disease.
The odor of this stomach was precisely the same as the breath of an individual laboring under this sickness. I have treated many cases, and the breath is very peculiar. I trust Mr. Foster will continue his researches, until he shall have not only satisfied himself, but the whole country, of the real cause of this pestilence which of all, perhaps, I ever saw, is the most distressing to the unfortunate victim afflicted with it.

I am, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,
JOHN H. WER.
Edwardsville, Oct. 8, 1844.

AMERICAN LADIES.

Francis J. Grund, a German, who lived some years in this country, and published a work on Geometry, was just going to England, where he has published a big book, entitled, "The Americans."
The following is a portion of his observations on the Americans:

The forms of American Ladies are generally distinguished by great symmetry and fineness of proportion; but their fancies and constitutions seem to be less vigorous than those of the ladies of almost any country in Europe. Their complexions, which to the south, inclining towards the Spanish, are to the north, more fair and blooming, and white young, by far the greater portion of them are decidedly handsome. A marked expression of intelligence, and a certainly desirable heart of language, probably the result of the climate, lend to their countenance a peculiar charm, in which it would be difficult to find a parallel in Europe. An American lady, in her features, is perhaps the most symmetrical creature on earth. Her limbs are exceedingly straight, her motions are light and graceful, and her carriage at once elegant and dignified.

But the blemish, it is painful to say, are doomed to an early decay. At the period of twenty-four, a certain want of firmness in her proportions is already pre-sensible; and once passed the age of thirty, the whole fabric goes seemingly into decay. As the principal cause of this sudden decline, some allege the disease; but I ascribe it more willingly to the great assiduity with which American ladies discharge their duties as mothers.

No sooner are they married than they begin to lead a life of comparative seclusion; and, once mothers, they are actually buried to the world. At the period of ushering their children into society, they appear, indeed, once more, as respectable matrons; but they are only the silent witnesses of the triumph of their daughters. An American mother is the nurse, tutor, friend, and counsellor of her children. Nearly the whole business of education devolves upon her; and the task is, in many instances, beyond her physical ability. Thus, it is customary with many ladies in New England, not only to hear their children recite the lessons assigned to them at school; but actually to expound to them, and assist them in the solution of arithmetical and algebraic problems. There are married ladies who apply themselves seriously to the study of mathematics and the classics, for no other purpose than forwarding the education of their children; and I have known young men who have entered college with no other instruction, in any of the preparatory departments than what they have received from their mothers. But this continued application to the most arduous duties, the increasing care and welfare of their children, and the consequent and unreasonable confinement to the house and the nursery, under German constitutions, already by naturally sufficient delicate; and it is thus, by the sacrifice of health and beauty, that American ladies pay their offering to the sacred tribute of maternal affection. No human being can ever require the tender care of a mother; but it appears to me that the Americans have, in this respect, obligations immeasurably greater than those of the inhabitants of any other country.

Climate west of the Rocky Mountains.

A remarkable fact, characteristic of the country west of the Rocky Mountains, is the mildness and equality of the climate.

The great mountain barrier seems to divide the continent into different climates, even in the same degree of latitude. The rigors of winters and sultry summers, and all the precious iniquities of temperature prevalent on the Atlantic side of the mountains, are but little felt on their western declivities. The counties between them and the Pacific are blessed with mild and steady temperature, resembling the climates of parallel latitudes in Europe. In the plains and valleys, but little snow falls throughout the winter, and usually melts while falling. I rarely lie on the ground more than two days at a time, except on the summit of the mountains. The winters are rainy rather than cold. The rains for five months, from the middle of March, are almost incessant, and often accompanied with tremendous thunder and lightning.
The winds prevalent at this season are from the south and southeast, which are a very bringing rain. Those from the north and south west are the heralds of fair weather and a clear sky.—The residue of the year, from the middle of March to the middle of October, an interval of seven months, is serene and delightful.
There is scarcely any rain, throughout this time, yet the face of the country is kept fresh and verdant by night dews, and occasionally by humid fogs in the mornings. These are not considered prejudicial to health. Since both the natives and whites sleep in the open air with perfect impunity. While this equitable and mild temperature prevails throughout the lower country, the peaks and ridges of a vast mountains by which it is dominated, are covered with perpetual snow. This renders them discumbent at a great distance; and at times, like bright summer clouds, at other times assuming the most aerial tints, and often forming brilliant and striking features in the vast landscape. The mild temperature prevalent throughout the country is attributed by some to the current of winds from the Pacific ocean extending from latitude twenty degrees to at least fifty degrees north. These temper the heat of summer, so that in the shade; no one is incommoded by the per-solation; they also soften the rigors of winter, and produce so high a moderation in the climate, that the habit that can wear the same dress throughout the year.—

ARREST OF COUNTERFEITERS.

The St. Louis New Era states, that on last Sunday night, Capt. McDonough of the city police, succeeded in arresting Jerry S. Cowden, one of the principal and most extensive counterfeiters in the West. It appears that the above named officer, having received a letter from Gen.
Crittenden, advising him that Cowden was then at St. Louis, engaged in the business of counterfeiting, kept on the lookout; and having discovered where the individual in question lodged, suddenly pounced upon him in his retreat, and took him into custody, together with another man, named H. Stutz, who was with him at a time, and is supposed to be an accomplice. About $10,000 in $20 bills on the Northern Bank of Kentucky, and two $100 bills on other Banks, all extremely well executed, were found in the room, or on Cowden's person.

After an examination before Justice Wetmore, the rogues were committed to take their trial at the next term of the St. Louis Criminal Court.

Stutz has since been discharged after a second examination—the testimony against him being deemed insufficient to justify his farther detention.

The Bond.—United States of America, District of Columbia, to wit: Be it remembered, that on this ninth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty one, before us, two of the justices of the peace for the county of Washington, of the District of Columbia, personally appeared Henry Clay and Willis Green, and severally acknowledged themselves to owe the United States of America—that is to say, that said Henry Clay five thousand dollars, and the said Willis Green five thousand dollars, each, to be levied of their bodies, goods and chattels, lands and tenements, to, and for the use of, the said United States, if the said Henry Clay shall make default in the performance of the condition underwritten.

The condition of the above obligation is such, that if the above named Henry Clay SHALL KEEP THE PEACE of the United States towards all persons, and particularly towards William H. King, then this recognizance shall be void, otherwise it shall remain in full force and virtue in law.

MURDER IN WISCONSIN.

EXETER, Green's Co., Sept. 26, 1844.

Dear Sir: In your paper of the 8th of August is an account of a horrid murder committed at this place sometime in June on A. M. Greene. This is a mistake.
It should have been Arthur Smith; he was a son of Deacon Arthur Smith of Speno, a county of Cayuga, in the State of New York. He was an amiable young man, and by his untimely death an aged father, a number of brothers and sisters and a numerous circle of friends and relatives are called to mourn; one of his brothers (Benoni Smith, Esq. of Speno), is now here investigating this mysterious affair, and settling the estate of the deceased;
the murderer has not been detected; suspicion rests upon one of his nearest friends.—Mr. Smith was educated to the mercantile business; in the early part of his life he was a clerk to his brother in Speno, afterwards for about six years he was in the employ of J. C. Heatt, Brothers & Co. of Troy, New York, and emigrated to this country about six years ago;
he was universally beloved and respected, and his loss is deplored by this entire community. A reward of $500 has been offered for the apprehension of the mur-derer. He was plowing on the prairie with three yoke of oxen. The prairie now is so constructed that it runs without holding; he was two miles from his house except his own, which was distant one mile; his house was entered, his trunk broken open, but the money, viz., $200 in gold which was probably the object of pursuit was not found; it was rolled in a piece of cloth. The plow-man carries with him an axe and a file with which he repairs and sharpens his plow—he was in the act of filing his blade when he was probably first shot, then beaten to death with the axe.
After he was entirely demolished in this way he was drawn about two rods into the grass and bushes and had lain ten or twelve days; when found, his wallet and other money were taken, what amount is unknown.

An Earthquake.—We are informed, by a gentleman from Greece, that several distinct shocks of an earthquake were felt in Greece on Thursday night. Our informant got up at the time and witnessed the marked vibration of the glass in his windows, which continued for several seconds. The occurrence caused no little commotion in that section—about 8 miles from the city—aggravated probably by the confident expectation of the worst, only dissolution entertained and propagated by the Millerites.—Rocketer Ad.

Earthquake at Trinidad.—By the schi-

Slah, at Baltimore on Friday from Saint Thomas, Sept. 4, we learn that on the 30th of August, about 3 o'clock, A. M.
the inhabitants of Trinidad were roused from sleep by the shock of an earthquake, the violence of which far exceeded that of any other they have ever experienced except the one of 1825. Great fear was entertained for the safety of the town, but no material damage was sustained. The deepest anxiety was manifested on behalf of the adjacent island from neither of which had any positive information been obtained up to the time of the Sarah's leaving on the 3d inst.

The Cherokee Almanac tells a story of a Doctor, (Indian, we suppose,) who had directed a patient to take a certain kind of bark. "Well, Doctor," said a patient, "does it make any difference which way the bark is peeled?" "No," replied the Doctor; "if you peel it upwards, it will act as an emetic; if you peel it downwards, it will act as a cathartic; and if you peel it round-wards, it will tear you all to pieces!"

Fatal Riot on PM's Point.—We remember that a desperate riot occured last night on PM's Point, between Germans, Irishmen and others—in which two men (Germans) whose names could not learn, were so badly wounded that they died soon afterward. There was another person very dangerously wounded, and it is supposed fatally wounded, some two or three more who were slightly injured. The fracas commenced in the street near the corner of Bond and Lancaster streets.—Balt. Pot.

LATER FROM SOUTH AMERICA.

The following extracts we make from a letter from Rio Janeiro, dated

August 30.

Provisions are very high; Pork a Flour and scarce than they have been this season, with the exception of April when they were in greater demand.
Cargoes of foreign produce are expected daily, which are nearly all so already at a high price.

Accounts of the wars from the interior are very incorrect, so I cannot tell you anything about them; but from the neighboring provinces I have a little news for you. From the North, in Peru and thereabouts, it is all quietness and order, and the inhabitants are said to have the most perfect love for the Emperor.

The Provinces in the North West are a little disaffected, without however a cause, being full of outlawed rebels descended from the Mining Districts. The Province of Minas is very quiet and prosperous in successful operation. From West there is no news whatever. From the Southern Provinces I have a confused account, and nothing certain from Buenos Ayres. The news from La Grande is that a war with Buenos Ayres is inevitable, and whether Brazil is declared war with Buenos Ayres or no cannot tell, but that troops have been sent being banded and sent to the South know very well. However, as soon as any thing important occurs, you shall know it.

THREE WEEKS LATER FROM

SOUTH AMERICA.

We have the Buenos Ayres British Packet to August 30; our latest previous advice being to July 31.

No event of importance in the war is recorded in the Packet; though we may infer from some of its comments that some improvement has taken place in the condition of the Riverista party. Senor Paz, the late commander-in-chief in the city

From the N. Y. Tribune.
Paris, 16th Sept. 1844.

The war fever which existed here, at the departure of the last steamer, has not wholly subsided. The dispute originating in the expulsion of Prichard from Tahiti, yet agitates the public mind, although the ministerial journals announce that the settlement of the affair is in accordance with the honor and interests of France. The particulars are yet unknown, and the silence observed with regard to them is interpreted by the opposition as a proof that the ministry have sacrificed the dignity of the Nation, to keep themselves in power. Rumor mentions, however, that the French Agent is to be recalled, and that Prichard is to receive indemnification from the French Government, for the losses sustained by him, from his expulsion. Sir Robert Peel refused to state to the House of Commons the conditions of the settlement, and requested the member who moved the question not to press it. This course, it is supposed was dictated by the wish of sustaining the present French ministry, and through their co-operation, peace between the two Nations.

After this event Parliament was immediately prorogued, thus preventing any knowledge of the treaty transpiring until after the excitement in France shall have subsided. The facts and circumstances give this opinion the character of correctness. England has every interest to preserve peace, and to prevent by every diplomatic art the overthrow of Guizot. By presenting or exposing matters which are so well calculated to increase the popularity of France, it would cause the present Cabinet to resign, and from the tone of public opinion, there is no doubt but that a Ministry hostile to England would succeed it. The navy of Russia is now on a very respectable footing. The government is on the most friendly terms with the British Cabinet, but its policy with respect to India and its designs on the Dardanelles, give the latter a full unpopularity. The Germanic Custom League is depriving England of her markets, and the difficulty of governing Ireland in the event of a foreign war, have caused the Cabinet of St. James to assume a more conciliatory tone. See the notes of Lord Aberdeen.

The brilliant victories achieved by the French army and navy in Africa have not been followed by the results anticipated from them. The Moors or Arabs were at first intimidated by their severe defeats, and sued for peace; but finding that the French, owing to the order of the Ministry, did not push their conquests, recommenced conquering their works, and encouraged the small French garrison left to check them. The fleet returned, bombarded the forts, and threw their cannon into the sea. Morocco is now blockaded, while Tangiers, a port through which the Moors can receive munitions of war and provisions, is left open. This state of things is attributed to the interference of England, and to the pusillanimous policy of Guizot, who, it is said, is determined to preserve peace, regardless of what sacrifices of honor it may cost France. On the commencement of the war, France declared her intention not to occupy permanently any part of Morocco. It is not surprising that under these circumstances, the Moors should go on to forget their defeats. In the chest containing papers belonging to the son of the Emperor, seized at the battle of Isly, the untiring efforts of Mr. Drummond Hay to settle the difficulties between the two nations are abundantly and honorably proven. Other papers were discovered proving that while Mr. Hay the British Consul, was acting as Mediator, the Governor of Gibraltar was directing the Moors to hostilities. The despatches of the Prince de Joinville have not been published in full. He made allusions to the conduct of England, which in the present position of affairs were calculated to exasperate the French people; certain portions were therefore not published.

The Greenland, a beautiful war steamer of 450 horse power, lately launched went ashore in a fog near Lancher. The Moors immediately attacked her, killed several of her crew and wounded a large number. The Prince de Joinville went to her assistance, and finding that she could not be got off, burnt her. A del. Sailer succeeded in escaping from the French and Moors sent to pursue him, and it is said that he is now in the South Sea, organizing an expedition against the French settlements.

Every preparation is making for the visit of the King of France to England. It is to take place in the early part of October. He will be accompanied by the Ministers Guizot, Dumas and Mackau. An incident occurred a few days ago that was certainly Democratic. Some peasants were sent as a present to the King from Scotland. At the time it was against the law to admit them; they were, therefore, confiscated for the benefit of the poor, and consumed in one of the Charity Hospitals, as the laws require.

The news of O'Connell's liberation has been received with the greatest delight. It is attributed to the threatening aspect of the Foreign relations, and the necessity in order to conciliate the people of Ireland, of reversing the unjust and iniquitous decree which so long condemned him to a dungeon. Here no one gives England credit for Justice. The French Funds are in a fluctuating state. Some time ago the Chamber of Deputies authorized the Minister to borrow 450 millions of francs. It is probable that the wants of the Treasury will require the negotiation of 300 millions within the coming month, and the uncertainty of the time when it will be offered and the conditioning accounts of the newspapers are seized upon by the brokers for the purpose of influencing the Stock Market. Belgium has concluded a treaty with the Germanic Custom League, by which the duties on the products of the respective nations are to be greatly reduced. This event will greatly increase the commercial importance of Antwerp. The Austrian Minister, Prince Metternich, is now at Trieste, making inquiries of the probable effects of the accession of Austria to the League, as regards the interests of her Italian and Germanic possessions. The Emperor and Empress of Austria, the King of Naples, the Dukes of Tuscany and Modena are also at Trieste. There are various conjectures as to the cause of their assembling.

The events recently transpired in the United States have caused considerable surprise and astonishment. The resistance of a Mob to the civil and military power, the destruction of life and property, under the Government and institutions which Chevalier and De Tocqueville so favorably describe to their countrymen, are viewed as proofs that the denunciations heaped upon our country by English writers are not wholly undeserved.

The people of France have always exhibited the greatest attachment to American, and express it in a manner that renders their intercourse with the American traveler so pleasing, that it is always remembered with delight. Here in a Monarchical Government, professing the Catholic Religion, perfect toleration is secured, and enjoyed by all, as regards education and worship—and the Protestant Clergy and Jewish Priests are liberally paid, the Government allowing them an extra compensation to support their families. The Gots in Philadelphia and Illinois, no matter how originating, are pointed out as proving that in reality there is no freedom of opinion in the United States—that the laws guaranteeing sacred rights are trampled under foot, and that there is a spirit of intolerance that sets them at defiance. It is a painful subject to have to allude to, and to feel conscious, although endeavoring to palliate it, that the want of energy in a few local governments, has brought upon the American name the censure deserved only by a few individuals. The French are strongly attached to education and association to the Catholic religion, and you can well imagine the impression produced here by the destruction of churches, and the dispersion of Catholic Institutions. They are brought up to respect, but speak the general feeling here.

In haste, adieu. P. A. R.

SILK CONVENTION.

This Convention, comprising about fifty delegates from the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania, assembled in the Repository of the American Institute about 11 o'clock yesterday morning, and organized by the choice of the following officers:

President, Gen. James Tallmadge, N. Y. City.

Vice Presidents, A. H. Whipple, Vt.; G. W. Murray, N. J.; James Harrison, Ct.; Col. E. Clark, N. Y.; Sam'l. Church, N. Y.; Henry Meigs, N. Y.; L. R. Barbour, Mass.; A. M. Summav, Pa.

Secretaries, Theodore Dwight, Jr., Charles Nichols.

Business Committee, A. C. Van Epps, Lucretia Carey, John S. Pierce, L. R. Barbour, J. G. Ward.

On taking the Chair, Gen. Tallmadge returned his thanks in a neat speech, in the course of which he took occasion to reiterate an opinion which he advanced at a former Convention held in this city one year ago, that this country is every way better adapted to the production of silk than any part of Europe or Asia. In corroboration of the truth of this statement he mentioned the fact that in Italy artificial means have to be resorted to to hatch the eggs of the silk worm, while here they are hatched by the effect of the common atmosphere. Indeed, those engaged in the business are obliged to keep the eggs in a cellar or an ice-house to prevent the worms from coming forward before the foliage of the Mulberry is sufficiently advanced to afford them sustenance. This difference, he thought, might be attributed to the peculiar adaptation of our climate, the atmosphere being much less humid than that of the silk producing countries of the old world. He did not doubt but with the fostering care of the Government during the infancy of the business, here, this would soon become the greatest silk growing country in the world. There was no reason why it should not.

Mr. Ward of Johnston mentioned that in that small town the single article of Gloves were annually manufactured to the amount of from 3 to $500,000, giving employment to 250 male and 1,000 female laborers from six to eight months during the year, and using annually about $10,000 worth of silk. Heretofore they had used the Italian, but now use and prefer the American article.

Mr. Meigs spoke of the prosperous condition of the Institute and the influence it was exerting all over the country in behalf of the silk culture, and read a note from Myndert Van Schaick, Esq. to the President of the Institute offering one hundred dollars a year for ten years, to be distributed in premiums, or to be awarded in one premium yearly, for the best piece of silk stuff, 27 inches wide and 60 yards in length, manufactured in the United States from native silk produced from worms of our own breeding. E. Ward upon the journals at length referred to the business committee with instructions to return a letter of thanks to Mr. Van Schaick. [We shall publish the letter at length as soon as we can make room for it.]

Mr. Barbour announced that he had a large number of letters from gentlemen engaged in the silk business in different parts of the country, detailing their experience and containing much valuable information, and which he would read to the convention when an opportunity should offer.

Some conversation then passed between Messrs. Barbour, Van Epps, and others, detailing their personal experience with regard to the best modes of hatching, feeding, reeling, etc.; and, at half past 1, the convention adjourned to meet again at 3 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention re-assembled at 3 o'clock, but our reporter was not able to attend at that hour. We understand that the letters referred to this morning were read by Mr. Barbour, and we presume the information they contain will be spread before the public. When we entered, Gen. Tallmadge was presenting a verbal report as Chairman of the Committee appointed last year to correspond with the Treasury Department in relation to the proper construction of that part of the tariff which fixes the duties on imported silk. It appeared from his statement, that the duty on manufactured silk is $2.50 per pound, and on raw silk, including all silk in the gum, 50 cents per pound; and that in order to avoid the first named duty, silk in an advanced state of manufacture is dipped in coarse yarn, and introduced under the latter provision. Various efforts had been made to induce the Department at Washington to check this palpable fraud, but all to no effect; and no resource is left but to appeal to Congress.

The Convention will meet again to day at 10 o'clock.

CAPTURE OF AN AMERICAN VESSEL BY AN ENGLISH MAN-OF-WAR BRIG.

The Boston Atlas of Saturday contains a letter from Capt. P. C. Dumas, late master of the American brig Cyrus, of New Orleans, dated Rio Janeiro, Aug. 12, and giving an account of the capture of his vessel by the British brig-of-war Albert, upon the coast of Africa.

THE AMERICAN FLAG TRAMPLED UPON BY THE BRITISH.

On the 2d day of June, at 1 P. M. an English man-of-war brig, the Albert, was lying to an anchor, five miles off Colombia; her boat came alongside, manned by two officers, one boy and four negroes, sailors, (called crew-men). The Captain of the Albert, Mr. Bosanquet, was told by one that the brig was the Cyrus, of New Orleans, and visited once by him by force, to save himself the trouble of visiting her twice, and at the same time asked him who he was, and to show him a power from his Government to visit him. He made no answer, except putting his hands on his flag, saying, "his tells who I am;" and he said to me, "I will come on board, and you will see it."

"Very well, sir; a protest shall be made for violating the treaty." The moment he got on deck with his officer and crew, he ordered his men to open my hatches, to sit and wait down himself with his company, and came on deck, after he found that the vessel had nothing but water ballast, and nothing else. He then came toward me, and said in a rough manner, "I want to see your papers."

My answer was in the same tone, "why should a man like you take the liberty to jump on board of an American vessel, against the Captain's will, opening hatches, searching the cabin, going all over the ship, without speaking a word to me, and besides, requiring that I must show you my papers? Please tell me who you are! you are not in uniform. Any pirate can come to an anchor, like your brig, and send a boat with an English flag, as you do. Please show me a power to visit me, and then, on the spot, I will show you my papers." He said, "I have it, but it is on board." "Well, go and get it," said I. He said, "my word is good enough." I said that I was not obliged to believe him. Then again I asked for the papers. "You shall not see them," said I. "Well, if you don't show me your papers I take you to be a pirate, and from this moment I take charge of the brig." My answer was, "as long as that flag remains hoisted, and my papers on board, I shall still be the Captain of my own ship, or, if you wish to take charge of her, you must send for more force, or order your brig to come along side to fire into me until I am killed," holding the ensign high in my hands. During this conversation I had my log book in my left hand. Then, thinking that I would show my papers quicker, he said to me, "the reason why you cannot show me the papers is because you have sold your vessel—I was told so." "It is not true, sir," I replied. "If my vessel was sold, I would not have the American flag up. Neither I nor my crew would be on board."

Now, vexed to see that he could not succeed in any way, he then said, "Well, I will go in the cabin and make search all over." I immediately placed the American flag before the cabin door, held by me, the mate, and two of my men, very tight, observing to him that he could not enter the cabin without trampling on the United States flag. His answer was, "that it made no difference to him." He immediately rushed into the cabin, followed by his officer and a negro, and trampled the flag under their feet in presence of my crew. Then I said, "Boys, our flag is insulted; it will cast dishonor on the English nation." They all came on deck, and the Captain told me to let him have my log book. My answer was—

"Never!—and as long as I should have a drop of blood in my veins, no British subject should take it away from me." Then he observed that he had the power to obtain it by force, and at the same time ordered one of his negroes to take the book from me, who attempted to obey the order given to him. I stepped back, pushing the negro, and called my mate and crew to assist me, and to arm themselves with handspikes and knives, in case the British officer should give a new order. All my men were ready to strike, when the British Captain turned pale, and with the voice of a coward, said to me, "Captain, stop your men; I don't wish to see any blood shed, nor butchery." Then nothing took place. He wanted to go in the cabin to make a second search. I observed to him that my papers were on board, in my trunk; and showed him the key. He said, "Let me have the key, or I shall have it by force." My answer was, "Have you forgotten what took place for the log book?—Do you wish to begin again?" Then he said, "I will go in the cabin and have your trunk broken open." I gave him no answer. He sent his officer and a negro to act; I followed them with my mate. They broke it and took the papers out of it. I observed to the officer that I had money in my trunk, a gold watch, &c. He made no answer. We all went on deck; he handed the papers to his Captain. I then told him, "Now you are satisfied of your chief's acquiescence, please give me my papers; because I shall sail to-morrow." "No, sir, I will keep them with me, and pocket them," I said to him, "As long as my papers are taken away from me, I make an abandonment of my vessel; and I and my crew left her at the same time."

P. C. DUMAS.

The Atlas says—"The foregoing are the documents received from Captain Dumas, and we publish them as received." Capt. Adams, of the Herschel, farther informs us, that it was reported at Rio Janeiro that the British Captain abandoned the Cyrus, and that she was immediately taken possession of by the Portuguese, and filled with slaves."

P. S.—Capt. Dumas arrived here yesterday in the brig Oriole, from Rio Janeiro. He confirms the statement of the British outrage on his vessel on the Coast of Africa, published above.

Dreadful Catastrophe.—The Pittsburgh Iron Works, of Messrs. Lorentz, Sterling & Co., situated on the other side of the Monongahela, was on the 7th inst, the scene of a most lamentable catastrophe. About 12-12 o'clock, and just after the bell had rung for dinner, the head of the lower boiler burst with a tremendous explosion, scattering destruction on every side. Three of the workmen were most dangerously wounded, and the roof of the building injured. The boilers, four in number, were torn from their beds and thrown some forty feet. The following, as far as ascertained, are the names of the wounded:

Joseph Davis, (Engineer) skull fractured, broken and badly scalded.

Jacob Ford, (Fireman), scalded dangerously.

Jacob Pothmann, (Laborer) collar bone fractured and otherwise seriously injured.

We were unable to ascertain the opinions of the physicians who were at the scene of the accident rendering every service that skill could offer, but from the opinions we heard stated it is hardly possible that Davis and Ford can recover. The gentlemanly proprietors did every thing that humanity could dictate to alleviate the condition of the sufferers. It is supposed that the accident was caused by there not being a sufficiency of water in the boiler at the time.—Pitts. Age.

The case of the Louisiana Negroes.—

His Hon. Judge Bronson, returned home on Tuesday last, and on Thursday made a decree in the case of the two negroes taken with the Pilot boat Lafayette, and who had been detained in custody of the Marshal, to afford them time to establish their claim to freedom. It will be remembered that six of the eight were sold on the sixth of August last, under a former decree. They were all demanded by the Governor of Louisiana as fugitives from justice, under a charge of larceny. The Governor of Florida issued his warrant for their delivery, but before that had been received here, the six above referred to had been sold, and they are not yet apprehended.

It being clearly proved that the two who pretended to be free are also slaves, these were on Thursday delivered up to the agent of the Executive of Louisiana, to be taken thither and tried, in conformity with the Act of 1793. The decree requires that after they shall have been tried, and undergone the punishment imposed by the laws of Louisiana on the offense they are charged with, they shall be delivered to the Marshal of this district, to abide the further order of the Court in a claim for salvage.—St. August. Times News.

The Colonizationists are likely to succeed in raising the means to effect the proposed purchase of certain portions of territory in Africa, between Cape Mount and Cape Palmas. The cost will be from $15,000 to $20,000. A gentleman of New York has proffered to be one of fifteen to raise the requisite sum in subscriptions of $1,000 each, and a gentleman of Pittsburgh has given $1,000. The commerce of Liberia would be much improved by the consummation of this purchase, and it will have a great influence in breaking up the slave trade, which is yet, notwithstanding all the efforts to suppress it, extensively carried on.

THE NEIGHBOR.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 30, 1844.

THE MURDERS AT CARTHAGE.

We understand that true bills of indictment have been found against several persons of Hancock county, for the murder of Joseph and Hyram Smith on the 27th of June last. Among the most conspicuous are Col. Levi Williams, Thomas C. Sharp, Mark Aldrich, and Jacob C. Davis, a senator in the Legislature of Illinois.

Since these indictments were found, strong symptoms have developed themselves in the case of the Laws, Fosters, and Higbees.

"There is more truth whispered round Hal."

"Than your philosophy ever dream'd of."

That the Hammer.—One of the witnesses against the assassins of Joseph and Hyram Smith, had offered to him cash in hand, twenty-five hundred dollars to leave this country, but it was rejected with indignation.

Honor and shame are in the land, and amid these conflicting elements, virtue will triumph.

THE NEWS OF THE DAY.

Perhaps it may be well to apologize to our readers, for the dearth of news at present. It is not because there is none; no; by no means.—If we only role the political rags which are intruding daily, by the jockies of the various rice courses, we might fill a mammoth sheet, and when it was read, if the reader had a thimble full of brains he must exclaim, like old Stearns:—

"Alas poor Yorick!"

Ohio has elected a whig Governor, and probably Pennsylvania a hant;—New Jersey is Whig;—and just about as many as look's. To say the least, both sides have got up a splendid "cock show and con dance." On one tall pole the high comb cock crows a large victory of thousands; and on the next, the ringtail cock is eating his winged antagonist for triumph. In fact the two parties by cocks and crows exhibit as melancholy a specimen of cannibalism as the degraded Hottentots;—and yet they both think it is cunning. Ohe jani saisi.

The water on the Rapids, has fallen so much lately, that loaded boats cannot pass: Lights have to be used, delay and expense are common, and a development of matters and things with their attendant circumstances, exhibit such a vexatious interruption to the convenience, and prosperity of the upper country on the Mississippi and her tributaries, that every citizen of the great north west, should prepare to vex congress with petitions, long speeches, and arguments like "Galena lead," till the body will do as much for the necessity of Western, as they have done for the convenience of the Eastern States.

NOTICE.

COL. RICHARDSON will deliver an address to the citizens of the city of Nauvoo, on Friday evening at the Seventies Hall.

For the Neighbor.

NAUVOO MUSIC AND CONCERT HALL.

Mr. Editor:—

Since my last communication, I had many things crowding upon my mind; some of which by your permission I would like to lay before your readers giving them a bird's-eye view of the magnitude of the work in which the citizens of Nauvoo are engaged in building up and improving the town, with the hope of stimulating and encouraging to still greater exertions in so noble an enterprise.

Notwithstanding the flying reports of our city being deserted by faithless friends, and those who may wish to turn our avowed enemies, who would not at the present time challenge any city containing the like population for union, public spirit and industry which pervades all classes and grades of society among us? Look at our public buildings, which are in course of erection or about completed; some of them (by your indulgence) I will speak of more large at a future opportunity,—that grand piece of architecture—the Temple; also the Nauvoo House, the Arsenal, the Masonic Hall, the Seventies Hall, and last though not least the Music Hall. This edifice associates itself with sound and sense, "and music of kind voices ever nigh." Yes, sir, our citizens cannot sufficiently appreciate the effects that are now making to finish one of the finest monuments of our city. Our choir numbering over one hundred members, whose zeal can only be made manifest by the difficult circumstances under which they are laboring, by singing in the open air and that too frequently in windy weather; that we have an imperfect idea of the thrilling delight such a body of music placed under different circumstances would produce. But Mr. Editor, taking it as it is, I would ask where are we to go for music, if we do not find it in Nauvoo? I will boldly assert no where. Witness the concert the other evening at the Masonic Hall, got up for the most laudable and praiseworthy purpose. The music in its selection was of the most varied character; and the electrifying feeling that was manifest, proved to a demonstration, that Nauvoo can furnish us with ladies and gentlemen whose instrumental and vocal powers are of no unpolished order. The stringed instruments, the trumpets, flutes, fifes, and clarionets, which formed the band, and particularly the flute and violin solos, not only gave a magic charm, but struck the numerous and admiring audience with amaze at the consummate skill then exhibited. We could mention several gentlemen whose talent for music was of the highest order. The songs, too, and glees drew forth the most unbounded applause, and seemed to express that all was not far from the right key, (Ray). And why need I mention

"With notes that grate
So thrillingly from beauty's refulgent lip?"

The ladies will ever be remembered for their sweet, soothing, lively, and harmonious voices, for their graceful appearance, and the choice selection of their pieces.

But to turn from the gay to the more grave. One word for the leader of the Choir. When in the great congregation of an assembled multitude, numbering variously from five to ten thousand, sometimes twenty thousand. The high praises of Jehovah are sung, and every heart beat high in unison to the joyful lay as it echoes from the general throng. We are ready to reflect upon the loftiness, theme, and the grandeur, and harmony with which such scenes are associated—and we are ready to enquire who is the mover of this mighty mass. Notice being given for music, all eyes are eagerly placed upon one individual—the hymn and tune are found—the voices are tuned—at a moment the enrapt feelings of thousands blend in one common anthem or hymn of holiest song and the reviving countenances of the throng, forces the conviction on the mind that God (dare) was there.

I am informed that the shares in the Concert Hall are not all at present taken up, something considerable yet remains to be done to complete that Hall. I would say let still a more glorious spirit of enterprise be made in finishing of that building. Mr. Editor I much admire the manner in which business is done in this city. I feel bound to say that no place in the union can conduct and carry out such an amount of work with the same amount of capital as the people of Nauvoo. A poor man can put five dollars in that Hall, without grumbling, aye, and pay for it too as well as the rich man; because his hands are his fortune. And the poor can look indignantly on the rich, and say, your "gold is corrupt," because too often us'd for the most corrupt purposes.

I will close this epistle, by urging the necessity of immediately finishing the hall, because built for the most benevolent purpose. Our places of worship are as yet few and small. I am informed that the Concert Hall will be used for preaching during the winter. Get this Hall completed so that rising generations in coming time will look upon you as the founders of the greatest city in the west, and the greatest benefactors of the age in which you lived.

An Observer of Men and things.

Snow Storm in September.—The equinoctial storm manifested itself in snow in several parts of the country. We have already chronicled the slight fall of snow on the Camerlang Mountains and in the vicinity of Utica. The Herkimer Journal of Wednesday says.

A violent snow storm was experienced in this neighborhood on Sunday last. We learn it was very severe in the surrounding country, particularly in Lewis field, where snow fell to the depth of eighteen inches. The scene has been described to us as a truly sublime. From two o'clock P. M. to four it was a perfect hurricane. The noise occasioned by the constant cracking and falling of the forest trees was like the rapid discharge of musketry. The damage done to the orchard has been very severe. It is supposed that one quarter of the fruit trees in the town of Litchfield have been destroyed.

We are told that the people at Little Falls went to church in sleighs on Sunday.

Snow in September.—On Sunday it snowed several hours with great fury, in Gratton and other mountain towns in this county. The ground was covered to the depth of four inches. The hills near Utica were also covered with snow.—[Troy Whig.]

Frost in S. Carolina.—The Charleston Courier of the 30th says that the weather was very cool there, and there had been undoubtedly a frost in the vicinity the night previous. This is remarkable for that latitude.

There was a sharp frost at Richmond Va. on Sunday night.

The Connecticut River has felt the effects of the late rains, and has risen so that navigation has been resumed between Springfield and Hartford. The boat went down over the Falls on Monday, for several weeks.

The bridge over Flushing Bay was destroyed by the gale on Sunday last, and the causeway much injured.

Great Sickness.—The New Orleans papers of the 23d state that the sickness continues in the interior of Mississippi. At Woodville, out of a population of 500, 400 were sick, and there had been 60 deaths since the 10th.

COUNTERFEIT GOLD SOVEREIGNS.

We hasten to lay before the public the unneeded important letter, putting them on their guard against a very ingenious counterfeit of English gold coin:

POURTRY, LONDON, Sept. 17, 1841.

Sir,—A circumstance has this day come to my knowledge, which I think should be communicated to the American government without delay. And since the death of Mr. Hasser, who had distinguished himself in the subjects to which it relates, not being acquainted with any other person who had done so, I am induced to make the communication through you as my only correspondent connected with the government.

On Saturday last, the officers of the Mint brought me a false sovereign to examine, and report its specific gravity. We found it to be 13.58 (with reference to distilled water at 62° F.) which is about half the value of standard gold. The imitation of the coins is so perfect as to have deceived the dealer himself, and had a execution, altogether is of such quality as to excite the most intense interest and anxiety in all who have seen it. The impression of the sovereign is that of Queen Victoria, and is so exactly done as to defy detection by a microscope, except in two or three very minute instances; the most obvious of which is the difference in the dotting of the ground on the field of the quarter of the shield containing the single lion. With the aid of a magnifying glass the dots on the ground of the false coin will be found to be more distinct, being crossed or further asunder than in the real coin. The specimen we have seen was gilt, of course the color of fine gold, but on being cut, it shows the redness arising from the alloy of copper.

It is supposed that this false coin must be principally intended for circulation in the continent, or rather in the United States, (in view of the large quantity of sovereigns known to be in circulation with you) because although the state of the coin indicates some degree of wear there has not yet any passed through the hands of the bank of England, the issues being, without doubt, aware of the great scrutiny now exercised there; and although your Government may not take steps therein without further information, you cannot be wrong in communicating the matter of fact to the proper authorities who may then institute such enquiries as may be thought necessary.

I am, with great respect, sir, your obliged and faithful servant,

(Signed) R. B. Bates,
Lieut. M. F. Maury, U. S. N. Hydrographical Officer, Washington city.

A Dreadful Story.—A London correspondent of the New York Commercial says that an awful system of depravity has lately been brought to light in connection with what are called "burial societies"—a sort of subscription club where, by the payment of a small sum, weekly, an individual can insure the means of burying himself or any member of his family, in the event of death. These "burial societies" are very numerous, and the horrible fact has transpired that, on the birth of a child, its parents have frequently entered its name on the books of one or twenty different societies, and then, by allowing the poor infant to die from neglect, have realized large sums from these societies, for the apparent purpose of giving the child a decent burial. It is asserted that the sum realized in this way have in some instances amounted from 40 to 50 pounds—that literally making murder a trade, and one's own flesh and blood mere stock for the shambles.

Two more fires at Pensacola.—Our neighbor city seems to be doomed to destruction. By the arrival of the Creole yesterday morning, from Pensacola, we learn that on Wednesday night a fire broke out in the warehouse of hay in the northwest portion of the city, on a lot owned by Col. Easton, and occupied by Mr. Starnes, a merchant of the city. The loss sustained by Mr. S. is between $400 and $500. On Thursday afternoon, the large Planey arrived at the Navy Yard with one, heavy and naval stores. About sunset she was discovered to be on fire in the hold. Immediate measures were taken to save as much as possible of the cargo, and the vessel was drawn up near to the shore as she could be got, and was then scuttled. When the Creole passed the yard, about half past nine o'clock at night, the sailors and others were hard at work on the square, but we could not learn that any hopes were entertained of saving either the vessel or her cargo. The latter was composed almost entirely of Government stores.—[Mobile Herald.]

Destructive fire in Pensacola.—We learn that a very destructive fire broke out in Pensacola on Wednesday morning at 11, in the store occupied at the time by Messrs. Serra & La Rue at the corner of Palafox and Government streets, and which his fire in ashes the whole roof of the building on one street, and more than half of those on another. With the exception of Mr. Campbell's goods, which were there was no insurance what ever. The printing office of the Gazette, on Zaragoza street, narrowly escaped conflagration. The materials, we learn, were thrown in the street in great confusion, and we fear Mr. McKimley will suffer some loss both in types and furniture.—[Mobile Her., Sept. 27.]

THE STEAMER KOSCIUSKO.

The New Haven Journal has a few additional particulars in relation to this steamer. About one-eighth of her freight was thrown overboard, valued at about $2000. There were about thirty passengers on board, six of whom were ladies. One lady having twins was told she must not attempt to save her infants if the boat went to pieces and they were washed over her; but her reply was like that from any mother—"If my children drown I will perish in the attempt to save them." Some ten tons of railroad rails were in the cabin, which proved an excellent ballast. The Hartford Times says:

All on board abandoned the hope of getting on shore by means of the Kosciusko, rather her fuel had been washed over and her fires put out. Accordingly, preparations for a week were made. Ropes were lashed to the persons of all; cotton bales and other articles that would swim were prepared with ropes attached to them, and in this way the passengers and crew awaited their fate. The boat was now at the mercy of the waves, the water constantly dashing over her. Under these circumstances, a favorable change of wind occurred, and a final effort was made to get her to an anchorage, which happily succeeded. All the loose lumber, some of the doors and part of the iron nails were put into the furnace, and steam enough was raised to move her. In this way she was with much difficulty taken to an anchorage near Crane's Point, J. J. arriving there about 3 o'clock P. M. on Sunday. Capt. Leveque went on shore in a small boat, but was unable to return till the next morning on account of another change of wind and the heavy sea. He lighted fires on shore, however, as a guide to those on board, in case the boat was wrecked.

Signal Lantern.—Many accidents have occurred on the great rivers from steamboat collisions in consequence of having no signal lights which could be seen or understood. We are happy to learn that Capt. Stealy of St. Louis has invented a signal lantern, which promises to be useful in river navigation. It consists of one large and two small lights, the large one to be stationary in the centre, the small ones, to be used to show the course intended to be pursued by the pilot. The three lights are to be placed a short distance below the tops of the chimneys so as to be above the line of vision of the pilot, and are to be governed by the pilot himself by means of cords leading into the pilot house.

Revival of Millerism.—During the last few weeks Millerism has revived in this city and neighborhood to an astounding extent. A number of persons, and a female preacher in particular, have been preaching a burst of fanaticism perfectly astounding. We have given one sketch of their movements, and others have been described to us of a still more singular character.

A few evenings ago, we understand that while Mrs. Higgins was preaching, one of those political rowdies who are attached to the clubs of the city and permeate the streets at night, held up a torch light to one of the open windows of the building, where the fanatic was holding forth, and cast a very striking glare of light into the place. A terrible commotion was the result, as the congregation supposed the last hour had come, and all rushed out in a frantic state, with the exception of Mrs. Higgins, who assured that she was quite safely patiently awaited the coming of the Lord. Three fanatics are now firmly impressed with the belief, that the general conflagration of the world will take place on the 23d of this month, and it is very amusing to observe the perfect indifference with which they regard the affairs of this earth, particularly the political movements, for they are quite certain that after the 23d in this year will be neither a day nor a Congress.—[N. Y. Herald.]

Outrages and Riots.—We hardly open a paper from any part of the country, without finding the account of some outrage or riot, or murder, growing out of political excitement. The gross personalities—the slanders—the scurrilous—the violence—the falsehood—the violence—the demoralization—which have characterized the present contest, are now bringing forth their fruits. This has been in fact, for the last six months, a perfect school in the art of impudence, lying, and rascality, produced by political excitement.—[N. Y. Herald.]

Appointment by the President.—Vespasian Ellis, of Missouri, to be Charge d'Affaires of the United States to the Republic of Venezuela, in the place of Allen A. Hall.

Decision in a Private Mail Case.—It appears that Judge Randall, in Philadelphia, has decided on Monday against James W. Hale, a private mail runner, for $2000, being for forty penalties of $50 each. It is said that the case will be carried up to the Supreme Court for decision. That court may confirm this decision, and thus settle the powers of the Post Office Department.—[N. Y. Herald.]

Old Bull Outraged.—In glancing over a paper from Calcutta, we find an account of a traveller from the mountains of Norway who has lately arrived in India, and is announced as a "wonder" being a bona fide Norwegian runner, who was about to attempt the discovery of the source of the White Nile, on foot, and unattended. He expects to be absent from India only about four months, and he is to go in a direct line, crossing deserts, and swimming rivers. He runs a degree in twelve hours, and can go three days without food or water, by merely taking a dish or two of syrup of raspberries, of which he carries a small bottle; and when he does procure food, a very small quantity will suffice; but when it is plentiful he eats enough for three days. This wonderful man carries with him only a map, a compass, and a Norwegian axe. He has already made some wonderful journeys, having gone from Constantinople to Calcutta and back in 55 days, for which the Sultan gave him $2,000; and from Paris to St. Petersburg in 13 days. He has certificates from the authorities at Calcutta and St. Petersburg, verifying these very extraordinary facts. He is about 45 years of age, and slightly mad. He trusts for safety in his perilous journey to his speed, as he says neither dromedary nor man can overtake him.

Unparalleled Performance.—On Saturday last, the Locomotive Engine United States brought down from Potsville to Richmond on the Reading Railroad, a train of one hundred and fifty cars, laden with five hundred and sixty-four tons of coal—weight of the cars three hundred and forty tons—total weight nine hundred and four tons. This engine was built by our esteemed fellow citizens, Baldwin & White, and is the greatest performance ever made by a Locomotive in this department of business Philadelphia has no competitor either in the old or new world.—[Phil. N. Amer.]

They have lately named a town on the lower Mississippi, "Waterproof," it being the only town that the high water the season has not reached. It is situated on a high bluff, and approached only by means of ladders.

A lady in this village, says the Concord (Mass.) Freeman, reduced to the verge of death by brain fever, whose case was considered hopeless by her regular physician, has been suddenly and unexpectedly restored to health by the application of cold water. The cure, if we are rightly informed, is a remarkable one, and will be likely to bring this new system of medicine into favorable notice.

In the town of Sunderland, says the Northampton Courier, it is estimated that 14 tons of maple sugar were made last Spring. Population about seven hundred.

Fire at Akron, O.—Horses Burned.—The two barns of the Exchange Hotel in Akron, owned by Mr. Charles Cobb, accidentally took fire on the 25th ult., and were consumed with much of their contents. More than fifty horses were in the barns at the commencement of the fire, a portion were got out, some could not be got out at all, and one or two, after being rescued, rushed madly back and perished in the flames. Eight were burned to death, and a number badly scorched. Three barges were destroyed. Judge Newton, of Trumbull, lost his horse, buggy and harness. The Democrat puts the loss of property at from $2,000 to $3,000.

Montreal Rail Road.—Two agents arrived in Montreal on the 8th inst., to make arrangements for the construction of a railroad between that city and Portland.

Sentence of Gordon.—We learn from the Providence Journal that John Gordon, convicted at the March term of the murder of Amasa Sprague, was yesterday brought up for sentence, the court having unanimously overruled the motion for a new trial. Judge Duffee then an impressive address sentenced him to be executed on Friday the 14th of February next, between the hours of nine and three o'clock.

POETRY.

From Mrs. Nichols' Poems.

SONG OF THE DEJECTED.

I have thought of pleasant places,
Where the pleasant sunlight falls,
Like the glow on youthful faces;
When in happy childhood's halls:
And I've heard the jaysa ringing
Of sweet sounds, at summer tide,
Where the little stream goes singing
By the rocky mountain's side;
And marked the lights and shadows,
As they swept o'er hill and glade,
Leaving green and quiet meadows
In the cool and dreamy shade;
Till my heart was filled with sadness,
And mine eyes had drooped with tears,
For the loved, who shared this gladness
In life's dead and buried years.

Oh! how many steps, and measured
Are now treading and slow tread,
O'er the graves of those we treasured,
In their lives' serene glad;
How the careless grass is springing,
In its wildness, o'er their tombs,
Where the soft south wind is wafting
Its sweet scent of perfumes;
Oft I've heard their spirits sighing
On the lonely autumn gale,
And the wind's low tones replying
In a mournful, wail-like wail.
Then my spirit is awake
Of its calm and peaceful home,
And to the Churchyard I hurry,
In heavy sadness, to roam;
O'er the cold, white marble bending,
Till I reach, in utter gloom,
Till the moon and starlight bending,
Flung pale shadows o'er each tomb!

Oh! the tempest tossed and lonely,
On the dark and fearful deep,
Have known such anguish only
As mine eyes refuse to weep!
But their hearts were made to sicken
At the loud lightning's breath,
As they yielded, terror-stricken,
To the crushing hand of Death!
None may deem within my bosom,
With its careless, bounding air,
That I wear the bud and blossom
Of the cancer-root, despair!
With all true affliction withered,
And a sad, consuming grief,
How I would that I were gathered
Where the weary find relief!

LOVE STRONG IN DEATH.

BY EDWARD ELLIOTT.

[This poem is founded on a fact, witnessed by a friend of the author. A boy, when at the point of death, requested of his mother that she would give him something to keep for her sake.]

The brother of two sisters
Drew painfully his breath;
A strange fear had come o'er him,
For love was strong in death.
The fire of fatal fever
Burned darkly on his cheek;
And often to his mother
He spoke, or tried to speak.
He said, "The quiet moonlight,
Beneath the shadow'd hill,
Seem'd dreaming of good angels,
While all the world was still;
I felt, as if from slumber
I never could awake;
Oh, mother, give me something
To cherish for your sake!"
"A cold, dead weight is on me,
A heavy weight, like lead;
My hands and feet seem sinking Quite through my little bed;
I am so tired, so weary—
With weariness I ache;
Oh, mother, give me something
To cherish for your sake!"
"Why can't I see the poppies?
Why can't I see the lily,
Where, dreaming of good angels,
The moonbeams lay so still?
Why can't I see you, mother?
I surely am awake;
Oh, mother, give me something
To cherish for your sake!"

The little bonnet heaves not;
The fire bath left his cheek;
The fine chord—is it broken?
The strong chord—could it break?
Ah, yes! the loving spirit
Hath wing'd its flight away;
A mother and two sisters
Look down on lifeless clay.

A PROMISE.

When I am a spirit, with wings as free
As the pinions borne by the vireo's air,

In the twilight time I will come to thee,
And count it a blessing to linger there.

And if thou shouldst feel, at that silent hour,
A whispered breath on thy spirit's shrine,
Oh, yield thy thoughts to its mystic power,
And know that my soul communes with thine;
And I would that the boon were granted now,
That magic beauty to linger nigh,
To fan the locks from that stainless brow,
Or quaff the light of that glowing eye.

For I know that within is a fountain deep,
The gleam of whose waves had birth on high,
Where mirrored in quiet and beauty, sleep
The starry things of the holy sky.

Yet I would not come in my robes of clay:
As a being of earth, to these unknown,
I will wait till my spirit hath worn away
The grosser garb that is round it thrown;

And then, when the hum of the world hath died,
On a summer's eve, from thy wearied ear,
With a song of the skies I will seek thy side,
And count it a blessing to linger there.

And the hour is near, for my eager heart
Is beating a way through its temp' frail
Where it sooths a bid my soul depart
From the fetters it wore in this lowly vale.

And the voiceless strains that within me sleep
That would not breathe in this tainted air;
The harp that no human hands have swept,
Shall wake in a burst of music there.

And thus I will come with pinions free,
When the world's hum dies on the wearied ear,
In the twilight time, to seek from thee
The union of feeling denied me here.

THE SILK CULTURE IN AMERICA.

New York, July 16, 1844.

Hon. James Tallmadge, President of the American Institute:

SIR: It gives me the greatest satisfaction to perceive from the afternoon's paper, that the American Institute is seriously engaged in efforts for the promotion of the culture and manufacture of silk in this country.

Your distinguished Society cannot be employed in a more truly National object, or in one which will confer on its members a greater share of renown; for I am persuaded that it is not an extravagant opinion to estimate the saving which the culture and manufacture of silk will produce in the country, (when the supply shall equal the demand, at not less than twenty millions of dollars per annum.

I have always looked at this subject as one of the most interesting in relation to the profitable application of our industry and skill which could be proposed for the advantage of the community. I therefore offer your Society one hundred dollars a year for ten years, to be distributed in premiums, or to be awarded in one premium yearly, for the best piece of silk stuff, twenty-seven inches wide and sixty yards in length, manufactured in the United States from native Silk, produced from worms of our own breeding.

It may be alleged with absolute certainty that our soil and climate are suitable for the production of the best kinds of Silk, and that our own country furnishes in market adequate to the consumption of the fabric, which may be supplied for many years to come; and at reasonable prices, furnish all the inducements which can be required to impel our wonderful active and industrious people to undertake the culture and manufacture of this important article of trade.

But the facilities of exhibition and the premiums for skill, which your Society propose to furnish, are necessary to enable the exhibitors to compare their fabrics with, and to stimulate them to the manufacture of the best description of goods.

The opinions which were entertained by several gentlemen in this State, possessing great experience and ability, may be found in a report which I had the honor to make to the House of Assembly on the first of March, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, being Document number one hundred and seventy-six. It is therein stated that—"It has been ascertained by actual experiment, both in France and England, that American Silk is not superior, is at least equal to the Silk of any other country. The cocoons yield more than those of France or Italy; and their produce is of as fine a texture and equal in nerve to the Silk of any other country, and when well reeled it loses less than the Italian in wastage."

These facts were obtained from Hon. Ambrose Spencer who had investigated the subject and stated his convictions to me with that clearness and force which distinguish his mind.

It is also asserted in the same document that—"The Treasury reports of the National Government present the astonishing fact that in some years the importation and consumption of Silk fabrics in the United States have been of greater value than the whole amount of Breadstuffs exported. So that the industry and labor of the farmers of the United States have been appropriated to the purchase and introduction of a luxury, which the country could with the great facility supply itself, and in a few years produce a staple which would not fail to become a source of wealth."

This was the opinion of Le Ray De Chaumont, who at the period referred to was an Agriculturist of high repute in Jefferson County, and was perfectly conversant with the culture of Silk in this country.

At the same time that the facts contained in these two paragraphs encourage the culture of Silk, from the consideration of certainty of the crop or product, they also furnish an assurance of a suitable remuneration to all those families or cultivators, who are able to supply the demand at prices not higher than the foreign article is sold for in this market. But it should be inculeated on all who undertake this business, that permanent success is only to be achieved by economy and industry, and not by the temporary stimulus of speculative movements—the fulfillment of which have been ascertained by dear bought experience.

The extraordinary success with which this country has pursued the manufacture of Cotton and Woolen Goods, leaves no room to doubt that an equal degree of attention applied to the manufacture of Silks, will be attended with similar results in the perfection of the fabric, and in its reputation as an article adapted as well to our foreign trade as for home consumption.

As to the manufacture of Cotton and Woolen Goods, I am inclined to believe that there is some foundation for the opinion that this branch of industry may now be established on this island, and to advantage! It is a local subject, and, perhaps, does not properly come under the rules for general policy by which your Society is governed in their selection of objects of encouragement. But this city is not an insignificant place. Its interests may even be supposed to embrace a considerable portion of the national interests, and when you come to consider, as connected with the future history of New York, the extent and importance of my suggestions, your Society may feel inclined to look at this question, which I shall now present for their investigation, and to aid in its development.

During the last forty years there has been a great destitution of employment for the laboring classes of the city during the winter months. In conversing on this subject, it has frequently occurred to me that the creation of a new occupation, which would afford a means of support not subject to the intermission of business seasons of the year, was an object so desirable, as to be worthy of the attention of public institutions as well as of private-spirited individuals.

In canvassing the merits of different objects, having this end in view, none has appeared to me more suitable than the formation of Manufacturing Establishments.

Since the introduction of the Croton River on the Island, the probability that Manufactures of Cotton and Woolen Goods may be conducted on terms so cheap as to insure a profit to Capitalists, has been very much increased. The abundant supply of water which we possess will, if properly husbanded, be applicable to a vast extension of Manufacturing purposes, as well in Cotton and Woolen Goods as in the Metals and other articles of manufacture. The reduced price of Coal, and the facility of its delivery on either shore of the Island, are circumstances which favor the opinion that the time has arrived when almost every description of Manufactures may be prosecuted to advantage in this City.

It is also supposed that build up can be erected on this Island at as little cost as in any part of the Eastern States—that Machinery, at the present prices of fuel, can be run by force of steam power, at not much greater expense, than that of water power, if the interest on the capital invested in the purchase of the latter be computed—that labor of the description employed in Manufacturing Establishments will always be abundant in this City, and at a sufficiently low rate of wages;—that this Labor is for the most part without steady employment, and in his City never can find sufficient occupation unless it be in Factories;—that small supplies of the raw material can always be procured in this market, thus saving the interest on the cost of keeping a large stock on hand; or, if it be desirable to purchase a cargo of Cotton in a Southern port, it may be landed near the Factory without incurring the expense of trans-shipment, warehousing or internal transportation;—that one extensive and affluent market, and the cheap and rapid communication therewith, which Factories operating on this Island must enjoy, would confer on them advantages in making sales of their Goods superior to any in other parts of the Country, and probably sufficient to counterbalance the assumed cheapness of water-power over steam power;—and finally, that the use of fresh water in regenerating steam and cleansing boilers is preferable to the use of salt water.

There are probably some well informed and clear-headed Merchants and Mechanists in your Society who possess the information and ability, which may be required to elucidate the questions on which the practicability of the project must depend.

I have given you a short narrative of the opinions which have occurred to me in regard to it, not so much because I deem them to be indispensable as for the purpose of exciting inquiry and remark. If a thorough investigation of the proposition should result in a general conviction that the business offers a profitable mode of investing capital on this Island, and a useful mode of employing many idle hands an important benefit will be acquired for the city.

The very low rate which the Croton Water Board charges for the use of water, in Steam Engines and Factories, will operate as an encouragement to manufacturing pursuits of every description in which water is an essential agent.

A large proportion of the scientific and the laboring classes of London and Paris, derive their subsistence from the wages of manufacturing pursuits. I do not know that a list of the goods, wares and merchandise, made in those celebrated cities, can be procured, but their value has been sometimes reported in the newspapers in figures calculated to strike the attention with the greatest surprise at their vast amount and at their vital importance as contributing to the subsistence and comfort of an immense population.

Our own Metropolis is as well situated as either London or Paris for the manufacture of the articles in which they excel—that is—in Silk, Leather, Iron, Wool and many smaller commodities constituting an immense aggregate of wealth—and exhibiting the most finished specimens of artificial skill and ingenuity. To these necessary, useful and ornamental products of mechanical science, in which our city has been increasing every year, except during periods of political convulsion and financial prostration, may we not be able in time to add the important and extensive and lucrative business of manufacturing Cotton and Woolen Goods? This question is at least worthy of examination by competent hands. I wish you all health, and your Society unbounded success.

(Signed) M. VAN SCHAIK.

CAPITAL TRIAL AT THE OLD BAILLY.

Prof. E. Wright, in one of his Letters from England, published in the Boston Chronicle, thus describes his visit to the Old Bailey, and a scene which he there witnessed:

Determined to see an English criminal court, I selected a day when it seemed about as difficult to get into the Old Bailey as it would be for a prisoner to get out of Newgate. It was the last day of the trial of Dr. Belamy for the murder of his wife. The vestibules, stairways and corridors of the court room were all well crammed, so that it was not the easiest matter to reach the doors; and when I had reached a door, I found it impossible to get in without the application of two small silver keys, viz. a shilling and a sixpence. The doorkeeper strongly recommended me to wet the keys in a "drop of beer," but as a temperance man, I was determined they should work dry. I was not at all. Somewhere about the building I afterwards saw it inscribed on a blackboard that the doorkeeper was not to take fees; but it must be something more than a blackboard to convince an English doorkeeper that he is not to magnify his office as other higher functionaries do. Besides, it would be debasing theatricals to much to permit such a farce as this turned out to be, to be seen for nothing.

The room is a very plain one, and not quite so large as the Supreme Court room in Boston. Over the centre of the bench is a small plain sounding board or canopy, surmounted by the lion and that other beast going to fight for the crown of these realms, on which crown stands another little lion, looking as if he would bite. Underneath the sounding board close to the wall is hung, not the sword of Damocles, but a straight sword, properly laid in its scabbard, with the point upwards. The inquiry occurred to me if a halberd with a slip knot, would not have been more expressive. When will the Christian world have done with the code of Draco? I confess I do not date to take the sword out of the hands of the magistrates when he stands to protect the law-abiding from the assaults of the lawless; but that the sword or the halberd should be used in cold blood upon the poor captive culprit, no less outrages my reason than it revolts my feelings. It is gratuitous cruelty. To men in a state of mind to commit murder, death has no terrors. If proof of the folly of capital punishment were wanted, this very case of Dr. Belamy would furnish sufficient. Here were great and profound judges, and grave and acute lawyers sitting in their robes and wigs, and sheriffs in purple and fur, and the two pure disinterested men—the body-guard of British justice—in the jury box, and a solemn assembly of on lookers, that justice without fear or favor may be done. And what happens? A man is brought to the bar in regard to whom there is no reasonable doubt that he poisoned a young and lovely wife, while professing the greatest affection for her, developing a malignity and callousness of soul, seldom if ever equalled in the annals of Newgate, and yet a doubt is conjured up, and he is acquitted.

Why, if his own story was true, he is quite unfit to be abroad in society, on account of his utter recklessness, and yet he is turned loose again. I cannot conceive it possible that such a criminal could have escaped punishment, if the penalty had been imprisonment for life instead of death. Surely, the cause of justice is injured by having such a wretch escape because it is just possible for a weak minded juror to conjure up the shadow of a doubt in his favor. The defence was said to be very able and eloquent. Unfortunately, I did not hear it, but only the summing up of the prosecution by a Mr. Bodkin, and a very dull bodkin he was—just such a prosecutor as a murderer might like. The charge of the Judge was very lucid, but delivered inaudibly.

THE HALO.

The rings round the sun on Monday, (September 24,) for two hours before and after mid-day, appear to have been generally observed by our citizens with much interest, and to have awakened an intelligent curiosity to learn more respecting appearances of this kind and their causes.

The present halo was remarkable for its duration, and afforded favorable opportunities for observation. About mid-day, it consisted chiefly of two complete rings, one about 45 degrees in breadth encircling the sun as its centre, and the other about 72 degrees broad, having its centre in the zenith, while its circumference passed through the sun. The smaller circle was accompanied by an eclipse of the same major axis and of smaller eccentricity. Directly opposite to the sun 38 degrees north of the zenith, the circumference of the larger circle was intersected by two other circles of nearly or quite the same diameter, forming at the point of intersection a bright spot, such as would naturally result from the combined light of the three luminous rings. The ring that encircled the sun exhibited the colors of the rainbow, frequently with much vividness and beauty. The other rings were white, and fainter as they were more distant from the sun. Small portions of circles, however, with prismatic hues, appeared at different times both in the east and west.

On recurring to the works that give an account of solar halos of past times, it will be seen that the majority of them correspond, in their general features to this, having in a circle and eclipses around the sun, a larger circle with its circumference passing through the sun's centre, and two other circles intersecting this at a point directly opposite the sun. Thus in the 7th and 10th volumes of the American Journal of Science, two halos are figured bearing all these characteristics. The circles, however, are sometimes still farther multiplied, and of dimensions varying from the present.

Such uniformity of structure must depend on some law, which regulates the formation of halos; but the nature of this law is not fully developed, although its investigation has occupied the most eminent opticians, as Descartes, Newton, Huyghens, Moriotte, Young and Brewster. The cloud which forms the basis of the phenomenon, is always the same, both in the solar and the lunar halos, consisting of a thin, gauze-like, milky vapor, called by meteorologists, cirro-stratus. It is known to be very high, falling within the region of perpetual congelation, the lower limits of which in our latitude are about two miles above the earth. The moisture deposited by these clouds would be in the form of snow or particles of ice, and it is from the peculiar reflections caused by the bright surfaces of such crystals, that these phenomena are believed to be produced.

Not much difficulty has been experienced in accounting for the production of the ring that encircles the sun, since its cause is somewhat similar to that which produces the rainbow; but to explain the origin of the ring which has its circumference in the sun's centre, has been found much more difficult. The reflection of the sun's light from crystals of a cylindrical and prismatic form, has been supposed to furnish a clue to the explanation, although it has not always clearly appeared how this would produce the appearance in question.—The following experiments would perhaps throw some light on this subject.

Admit a beam of the sun's light into a dark room through a small hole in the window shutter, letting the image of the sun fall on the floor, or on the opposite wall. Into this beam introduce a glass tube. Immediately a ring will appear, whose circumference passes through the centre of the solar image. By giving different inclinations to the tube, in respect to the beam, the diameters of the circle will be greater or less. In a similar manner, the rays of the sun falling upon cylindrical or prismatic crystals of ice, perpendicular to the horizon, (their natural position,) and of course inclined to the solar beam in a given angle, may produce the circle that passes through the sun's centre. We will not at this time attempt an explanation of the peculiar reflections that form the subordinate ring.—[New Haven Palladium.]

Power of Fascination of Serpents.—A correspondent of the Courier and Enquirer, in commenting upon the death of Dr. Stadl at Siragota, by the bite of a rattlesnake, as previously related in our columns, remarks as follows, relative to the fascination so generally imputed to the rattlesnake.

The serpent's power to charm is regarded with scepticism by a great many, but there are very many authentic instances on record. In William's History of Vermont, a high authority, you will find some very interesting facts and comments on this subject; but a case has come within my own knowledge which is worthy of publication, and may throw some light upon it.

It has generally been believed to be the fascination of a serpent's eye. This may have some effect, for, probably there is no living eye which has such piercing brilliancy and fascinating beauty; but I have seen little birds under the spell fluttering about the snake and drawing, gradually, like the infatuated votary of vice, to its deadly tempter. It cannot be this altogether. The snake at such times keeps its head vibrating, its forked tongue darting, and its tail trembling; while the whole body moves like that of a creeping caterpillar. The case alluded to above was related to me by Nohemah Gallup, a revolutionary veteran, who died about a year since, in Groton County. He said that, in the revolutionary war, when attached to Fort Griswold, in that town, opposite to New London, he, in company with a number of other soldiers, went out on a hunting excursion, and finding a rattlesnake, some of which are occasionally killed (one I believe last season near "the Corners") in that town, they fixed their bayonets, and forming a circle around themselves by teasing him till they all began to grow giddy and sick, when they killed him.

They went on their way thinking no more about it, but gradually grew worse, and on reaching their quarters were so seriously indisposed as to require medical advice; being troubled with excessive nausea at the stomach, and vomiting. Their physician made particular enquiry in reference to their food, &c., for some time previous, when one of them accidentally told of their adventure with the snake. He at once replied that he was no longer at a loss to account for their sickness, and enquired if they perceived any peculiar odor at the time. They each recollected that they did. He replied, "I have seen on the lines in the State of New York many instances of this kind. The snake was charming you with a stupefying effusion which they emit at pleasure, and had you not dispatched him as you did, probably he would have dispatched some of you. He gave them emetics and they recovered. Many years afterward," said Mr. Gallup, "I went into a room where two rattlesnakes were exhibited, and immediately on entering the room I perceived the same odor, though not so strong, and was so sick that I had to leave the room." I have never seen this idea advanced by any one else. It seems more reasonable than the other, and is worthy of consideration.

Hartford Insane Retreat.—The report for 1844 exhibits a flourishing condition of the Institution. The number of patients during the past year was 169. Eighty-six of these have been discharged, of whom 44 are restored to sanity. The general health of the patients has been good.

The New State Prison.—The examinations of the mining districts in this region, with regard to the location of a new State Prison, where convicts are to be employed in mining and the manufacture of iron, were closed on Saturday last. We learn that the point of location would have been determined while the commissioners were here but for the want of information on a few minor points which will soon be furnished and the question settled in a few days.

Hearing the most favorable reports of the success of the experiment for using the heat which escapes from the Catalan Forge, while the manufacture of iron is progressing, so as to generate steam with which to propel the hammers and other requisite machinery, we determined to examine the matter for ourselves. On Wednesday last we made an excursion to Cadyville, where we found Mr. Cook,

NOTICE TO EDITORS.

THOMAS C. SHARP, the editor of the Warsaw Signal, from whom most of our editorial brethren have obtained their information relative to the late disturbances in Hancock County—was indicted for murder by the grand jury before the circuit court of this county; by a jury composed exclusively of men who were not mormons.

We give this publicity not for the purpose of persecution which we despise, but to correct the public mind, that they may know from what source proceeded their information.

We hope that all editors who have published from his paper will have the honesty to give this an insertion.

Silvery 'Rigdon' Esq.—has resuscitated the "Latter-day Saints Messenger and Advocate," at Pittsburgh, Pa. We understand that through this medium the accessories to the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, with John E. Bennett as the ne plus ultra, will form a unit of all the excommunicated members from the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He that cannot endure a kingdom of glory, can go into one of darkness: for there is no space without a kingdom, and no kingdom without a space.

THE TIMES.

A newspaper, to keep pace with the times must be filled up with very curious matter. Politics of course, must take the first column. First rank, first reading, and chief seat in the parlour, church and legislative hall. But while this motley group of statesmen, officers, voters, and aspirants, are filling the whole country with music, long speeches, liberty poles, and all sorts of shows, defamations, anecdotes, folly, fame and slander, patrole the high ways in such elegant meanness, that a wise man cannot tell whether it were better to pity or curse the customs of the Americans of the present day.

"This bids to serve, and that to fear mankind." In the midst of all this 'fire and fustian' for a little brief authority, the same paper comes lumbering on with news from all nations; riots, earthquakes, thieves, missionary boards, failures in trade, great bargains, estates on sale, marriages, deaths and murder. This all seems according to Daniel: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

But how long shall it be to the end of these wonders? Millenium has failed the third time, and hereafter very few will hitch their ears of calculation to an engine of such general disappointment. What then shall be done? Take the newspapers; they must and will contain a specimen of the thoughts and intents of the hearts of men, for the apostle said: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, faithless, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heads, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

But what does such timely instructions benefit the people? Politics, mobs, deception, and societies for the promotion of truth, religion and wealth grow with the growth, and flame with the fire that must eventually burn to the lowest hell, unless the people turn from the evil of their ways.

Another marvellous wonder engrosses thousands. Mammoth news papers, double, and even thrice, flood the great reading community of the east, and sprinkle the west, with 'novels' as destitute of truth, true science and practical knowledge, as asin's promises were to Eve when she ate the forbidden fruit. What must be done in such a case? Why not the fancied brains of disappointed men, and then go to the theatre, and see a play? Do you will be just like them. When ducks feed on fish, their flesh tastes like fish; when man drinks whiskey, he is generally drunk; and when the present generation sow vanity they reap vanity; and when the people feast on lies and light reading, what can be expected? Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

Every body, from the curious state of parties and the jarring motion of societies, governments and kingdoms, fears that the bonds of national security are bursting; but, from the dread anxiety of all to go ahead, no body believes it. No, there is none, save the Latter Day Saints, that believe or care for the welfare of the world. The Saints are actually the 'Rehabiles' of this age, as much as the descendants of Rechab were in the days of Jeremiah, when Israel went into captivity.

News papers that were once considered honorable, now make sport of character, murder and treason not excepted. In fact, the order of the day is such, that the front ranks of men in high and low life, appear to be playing at a game of brag, and they are so determined to win, that conscience, clemency and courtesy have as small a share of their lives and times, as their God. They go it regardless of feeling or consequences; no matter whether the game is played upon the tables of the living, or the coffin of the dead.

But we are saying too much, for in old times, when men became so hardened in sin, that they forgot the blessings of virtue and commandments of God, he turned his wrath upon them, as the history of Sodom, Egypt, Babylon, Tyre and Sidon, and Jerusalem show. We have a duty then, to set well our part, for though Noah, Daniel and Job plead with the Almighty, if the people repented not of their folly and sin, they could not escape the judgment written.

Wisconsin.—The people of the Territory of Wisconsin have decided by a majority of votes against a State organization at present. Well, the Scripture says, "the ox knows his owner and the ass his master's crib."

March of Mind.—A woman in England having a disordered knee, had it amputated while in a state of mesmerism. It might be well to mention the Queen in relation to her government, especially Ireland.

Miller's end of the world having failed the third time, we suppose that the prince of actors will now transport themselves into another system, calculated to come to pass after many days.

Baffled N. Y. has passed a law making it $20 fine to bring a load of potatoes to market, because they are diseased! Politics and sick potatoes in the east, and sick wheat and chills in the Mississippi and Missouri—all equal.

Great Gales.—On the 4th and 5th of October at Havana and many other southern islands, there was the severest gale known for years, and immense loss of life and property. The U. S. Revenue Cutter Vigilant drifted from her anchorage, and every soul on board, save two sailors picked up at sea, perished.

On the 18th and 19th Buffalo and Lake Erie was the scene of tremendous disaster and destruction of property; besides the loss of many lives.

On the 25th at Jackson, Mo., a hurricane destroyed much property and killed and bruised some ten or twelve persons. Further particulars may merit a further notice.

Save your ashes.—A manufactory for salicratus is about to be established in this city. Save your ashes and you save money.

THE ELECTION.

We have had a good deal said to us by both political parties about the course we intended to pursue in relation to the presidential election: both sides, as a matter of course, advocating their superior claims to our attention. We, however, announced our determination some time ago not to interfere in this matter, and we have seen nothing, nor have we heard anything that was in any wise calculated to make us alter our opinion. The murder of Gen. Smith placed us in a peculiar situation in relation to this matter, and since this lamentable occurrence the course pursued by both political parties have been anything but honorable in relation to us as a people. They have both joined hands with the mob in trying if not to sustain, yet to wink at some of the most demoniacal proceedings that ever disgraced the records of our country. They have both joined in persecuting an innocent people and in trying to oppress those who already were goaded with mobocracy; they have both published and given credence to the stories of mobocrats, black-legs and murderers, whilst they have carefully excluded from their columns everything like truth in relation to the matter, although they have had it in possession. There have been however a few honorable exceptions to this among the Democratic ranks, particularly in the more respectable papers in the east. But among the Whig party we know of none from the "New York Tribune," down to the most insignificant whig paper in this State we know of no exception—all have joined in supporting mobocracy and in sustaining the hands of murderers. We are opposed to mobocracy and violence wherever it exists; and whether its fangs are aimed at the Catholics, the Abolitionists, or the Latter-Day Saints, we took upon it as a deadly serpent that is penetrating into the very vitals of our once happy republic. It is very plausible indeed to talk about "Harry of the West," "Polk and Dallas," "mailing our colors to the mast," "the right of freeman," &c. &c., whilst the most disgraceful murders are committed under our very nose. Our friends are butchered in cold blood before our eyes; their assassins and murderers are counted, named in their deeds of blood; and the victims of the mob are denounced as villains, &c. &c. We wrap ourselves in the glorious folds of the constitution and talk very graciously about equal rights, and the privileges of freemen, the Agent, with a forge in full operation, driven by the powerful agency of steam, the generation of which is without cost in this arrangement. Although from the limited appropriation, Mr. Cook was only able to apply the escape heat of two large fires for the generation of steam, while his arrangement contemplates the erection of four such fires for this purpose, yet, under these disadvantages, the power obtained is greater than he encouraged any to expect from the whole four. In short, the principle is established, that in the manufacture of iron in the Catalan Forge, which is the process pursued with the pure ores of this region, the heat which ordinarily escapes to the heavens is abundantly sufficient to generate all the power required for the purpose. This is therefore the dawn of a new era in one of the most important branches of industry. Mines heretofore valueless on account of their remote distance from water power, will now be found of great importance. Among other recent discoveries of mines, we learn that 'Mount Whiteface' is found to be rich in iron ores. May we not therefore predict, that ere long the snows on its brow will be thawed by the ascending steam, while its caverns re-echo the heavy clang of the forge hammers?

It would be difficult to describe the arrangement without the idea of drawings. It may be sufficient to say that it is as simple as effective. As the machinery wears smooth and the mason work becomes dry and hot, the operation of the whole process improves, and is much better than when the commissioners saw it. The iron produced is of a superior quality. We were shown several illustrations of its firmness and tenacity, and brought away with us a specimen of that which was made under the inspection of the commissioners.

Mr. Cook is now pursuing the manufacture of iron by his process for the purpose of ascertaining the amount which may be obtained from a given quantity of ore and charcoal, to which we understand, he will add some experiments in the manufacture of steel.—Pittsburgh Republican.

WEST INDIES.

The West India papers are the most barren file we have received for months past. The weather, in most localities appears to be considered favorable for the crops, and guano and other manures were being brought in extensively for improving the plantations.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Advices from Buenos Ayres of the 29th of June state that the House of Representatives had confirmed the law authorising a monthly remittance of 5,000 dollars to Messrs. Baring Brothers, on account of the dividend till some definite arrangement is made for the liquidation of the foreign debt. The return of many of the old English residents for their native land seems to have created some sensation in the Argentine Republic, and their departure is mentioned in terms of regret.

NEW ZEALAND.

Accounts from New Zealand state, that on the 12th of February an interview took place between Governor Fitzroy and the New Zealand chiefs concerned in the massacre at Wairau. After a request to hear from them their own account of the affair, which was complied with by Rauparaha, his Excellency having deliberated for some time, addressed the natives to the effect that, as the English had in the first instance been in the wrong and the New Zealanders had been betrayed into unlawful acts both by their ignorance of English law, and by the great provocation they had received, no punishment should follow their offences. He concluded by assuring them that he would punish all attempts on the part of the English to wrong the natives from any similar infringement of their mutual rights.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Papers of the 11th of July have been received. Late accounts have been received at the Cape from Port Natal, but they possess not the least feature of interest. Affairs in the new settlement appear to be progressing prosperously; under the British superintendence. Caffre squabbles on the frontier are dated upon at much length by the Graham Town journalists, who record with minuteness every depredation communicated by the farmers.

OTAHEITE.

The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Otaheite, April 21, 1844, addressed by Mr. Alexander Salmon, resident at Otaheite, to Mr. John Salmon, 86, Piccadilly, London:—"My dear father, I now regret to inform you that there has been an engagement between the French troops and the natives, in which the former had 16 killed and about 50 wounded; and the latter from 180 to 200 killed, and a great many wounded. You may fancy we are not very easy here; in fact, we have all our arms cleaned up, and keep watch every night."

FRANCE.

The news of the engagement at Otaheite has thrown some of the journals into transports of rage. They accuse Mr. Pritchard as the author of hostilities. The National is the most furious, and sees in this new event another reason for quarrelling with England, and for refusing all concession on the score of Mr. Pritchard's arrest.

The decision of Government respecting the Polytechnic School will put an end to the influence of those ingenious youths, its scholars, and to their power of participating in any future popular movement. Government proposes to remove the establishment out of Paris, to place it in the environs, but beyond the fortifications, and are in treaty for the chateau of the late M. Laffite, at Maisons for the purposes of the institution, which is to be forthwith re-organized and established.

The approaching marriage of the Duke d'Angule, says the Revue de Paris, is now certain. His Royal Highness is to be married in November next to a niece of the King of Naples, the Princess of Salerno; she was born in 1822, and is said to be very handsome, and gifted with remarkable spirit.

A severe storm of thunder, accompanied with hail, has visited Marseilles, Toulouse, Bordeaux, Bayonne, and several other places in the south of France, where it has done immense damage to the vintage. The vintage this year is very plentiful, and it is said that the wine promises to be of excellent quality.

GREECE.

A letter from Athens, of the 31st ult., announces that the Coletti Cabinet was already divided, in consequence of the exigencies of M. Metaxa, who, being supported by the Peloponnesian Opposition, and dissatisfied by his two colleagues, Tzavellas and Palbi, required the appointment of Canaris to the Navy Department, and of Zographos to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, so as completely to concentrate in his hands the whole influence of the Government. M. Coletti is, however, too clever a man not to perceive the snare. The Ministry, thus divided, could not attend to the business of the State, and had not yet published a single act of any importance. The resignation of General Kalerigi, the Governor of Athens, had been accepted by the King, and all the Liberal press justly protested against the dry terms of the Royal ordinance, in which the services rendered by that distinguished officer (the chief actor in the revolution of the 15th of September 1843,) during the last eleven months were not even acknowledged by a few flattering expressions.

RUSSIA.

The Bremen Gazette of the 3d inst., says:—"The Count de Nesselrode is expected soon at St. Petersburg. We are assured that he has communicated to the English Cabinet the views of his Government relative to the war in Circassia, and has obtained a promise from the English Government that in future English agents shall neither send ammunition nor provisions to the mountaineers by way of Constantinople."

ROME.

Letters from Rome dwell still upon the unsettled state of the public mind in the Roman States. That a conspiracy is still on foot, and may lead to the destruction of the unhappy enthusiasts engaged, would appear unquestionable. It seems equally beyond doubt that the Pontifical Government refuses to listen to the advice of Austria, Naples, Tuscany, and other powers, to concede a little to the popular desire, in order to escape a calamity sure to occur in case of a continental war. The sejour of the imperial family at Trieste suggested the belief that political affairs—those of Italy—would be then seriously considered, but no hope seems to exist that the Papal Government will give way.

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS IN THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

[From a Correspondent of the Glasgow Examiner.]

The readers of the Glasgow Examiner will have heard of a singular sect of people known by the name of 'Mormons,' or 'Latter-Day Saints.' The founder of this sect was one Joseph Smith, an American, whose foul murder by an American mob has lately been recorded in our newspapers. From all I can glean, he seems to have been an extraordinary impostor. Declaring himself inspired by God to gather the faithful in these latter days, he produced certain plates purporting to be a revelation from heaven, the translation of which constitutes the Book of Mormon, in which the principles and laws of this new fraud are to be found. The Latter-day Saints believe in the fall of man—in the redemption of the world by Christ, and in the divinity of the Old and New Testaments. But they also believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet sent by God to prepare the world for the second coming of Christ. In America this sect has increased rapidly. In fact, in fourteen years the sect has risen from seven to two hundred thousand baptized members—their baptism being by immersion.

Hearing that a branch of this sect was established in Glasgow, I attended their meeting on Sunday last. It was held in a large room in the Trocadero, capable of seating five hundred persons. On entering, I found but few persons assembled, but the numbers soon increased until the room was well filled. Nearly every person was in mourning for the prophet. Many of them were dressed in black clothes, as were some of the women and children, and the rest had their hats and bonnets trimmed with black ribbon or crape. As each person entered he was greeted by the brethren, & a general shaking of hands took place, and a smart conversation, in loud tones, was kept up throughout the meeting. At the end of the room was a pulpit hung with black cloth, and in and around it were a few men who were spoken of as the 'priests,' 'elders,' and 'teachers.' In the pulpit was a man named Cairns from Nauvoo, in the United States, the great centre of the fraud. He was a 'smart' looking man, with a countenance expressive of great earnestness. I learned from one of the brethren, that this was a sort of 'conference morning,' to ascertain the state of the church in the Glasgow Conference. Suddenly a man rose up, and moved that brother Cairns be appointed President for the day, which was put to a show of hands—both men and women voting—and declared to be carried. Another person was called to another office, the precise purport of which I could not hear. A prayer was then made, and a hymn sung, after which Cairns stood up and said, "You are met this morning to receive a report from the churches represented in the Glasgow Conference. We want to understand the exact number and standing of the saints. We want to know what effect the murder of our beloved prophet has had upon us, and upon the world round about. Be brief and to the point, and don't sermonize, but give us facts."

He then called up a number of delegates, who reported as follows:—

Churches.	No. of Mem.
Glasgow	431
Paisley	81
Johnstone	38
A place (name not ascertained)	39
Pollackshaw	69
Greenock	72
Bonhill	29
Kilbirnie	64
Kilmarnock	61
Ayr	6
Airdrie	103
Campsie	26
Lanark	11
Pollackshaw	57
Renfrew	18
Irvine	20
Dalry	0

I was amazed at the extent to which this imposture has spread in religious and intelligent Scotland, for the majority of these delegates appeared madly zealous. The number given above were stated sometimes to include, and at other times to exclude, priests, deacons and teachers; and it was stated that a conference of other 'churches' assembled at Edinburgh. The delegate from Kilbirnie said that the saints at Kilbirnie shed tears of sorrow when they heard of the murder of their beloved prophet; but they took it as a testimony that his work was of God. Another delegate said that 'many saints in this place would willingly have taken a bayonet to defend the prophet, and they were quite ready now to revenge his death.'—Cairns: "Oh, God will do that brother."—The delegate: "Yes, but I should think he will use men as his instruments."

The delegate from Campsie appeared to stumble in his faith. He said—"I must confess that, with us, there were those who hardly expected the prophet would die. We didn't believe it at first; for we expected he would live to lead on the people of God, and perhaps to be president of America. But as I said to them, maybe the prophet had done wrong.—However, after a little, they became reconciled, and thought it was all right; will many of them think that perhaps God will bring him to life again. Which may God grant. Amen!" Whereupon the meeting cried out, "Amen!"

The people who composed this meeting seemed decent and orderly people; and it is only to be regretted that any of our countrymen should be so easily deluded.

Towards the close Cairns read a letter, which, he said, was from a postmaster who lived about 105 miles from Nauvoo, giving an account of Smith's death. He also stated that Smith knew he was about to die for he called the church together, and appointed a successor, and fifteen days before his death he gave orders to have a vault finished that had been standing for some time in a half built state, and he had it nicely whitewashed, and gates hung upon it, so that it might be ready for him! and this the Glasgow Latter-day Saints appeared eager enough to swallow.

I give these hastily penned lines to your readers, because I think they do not generally know the efforts that are making to delude the simple minded. Let them operate as a spur to the sincerely pious to redouble their exertions for the spread of Christ's Gospel, and for the promotion of sound education amongst all classes of the people.

We copy the foregoing in order to give our readers and the public, the Scotch notions of Mormonism. The erroneous statements and impostology, together with the 'white wash' &c., we leave the saints and other honest men to correct. We are happy to learn that Elder Cairns is prospered in the land of brother Scots.

Late and Important from Venezuela.—By the brig Rowena, Capt. Wilson, in 23 days from Laguayra, we were kindly put in possession, at an early hour, of our letters and files of the Caracas newspapers, of both the leading parties of Venezuela. From both papers and letters we have condensed the following intelligence:

Venezuela is suffering a fearful reaction in its previous commercial prosperity, caused in the main by an entire destruction of commercial confidence, growing out of the present distracted state of political feeling, a previous undue extension of credit and a general relaxation of those business principles upon which Venezuela must depend for any thing like prosperity. The revenue for this year will fall very far short of that of last year by at least 33 per cent. Some of the accounts say even more. The elections just concluded have been in favor of the Guzmanistas, or liberal party, who have already evinced a manifest hostility against the existing Government. Many of the moderate men of Venezuela are in daily dread of a revolutionary outbreak. The commerce with the United States is shackled with more than double the amount of imposts on the products of that country than any other nation now pays, and must of necessity ere long entirely cease. In fact, it now struggles but for a mere existence. No article can now be imported from the United States without a heavy loss, say from 10 to 25 per cent., and this against Coffee in Caracas at 7 3/8 cents, and Hales at 8 1/2, which are the only articles that remittances can be made in, or silver and gold at 7 per cent. premium. There is no new Coffee expected to arrive at the seaboard till September. Nothing can exceed the joy of the successful political party, save the gloom which that success has thrown over the whole commercial community, as well as those who will lose every thing in the event of a revolution.

Consumption.—A bold effort has been made in Darmstadt in Germany, to cure consumption. The seat of the ulceration having been discovered by means of a Stethoscope, the matter was discharged outward by an incision being made in the cavity of the breast, penetrating the lungs. The cure was finally effected by medicine injected into the wound by a syringe.

A Large Haul.—On demolishing an ancient Roman Chapel recently in Warsaw, two barrels filled with gold to the value of $600,000 were found in the foundation. It is to be employed in the completion of the fine hanging bridge over the Vistula between Warsaw and Prague.

Foreign News

TWO WEEKS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The last packet steamer brought our usual quota of English, Scotch, Irish, Manks, &c. papers, from which we extract as follows:

ENGLAND.

London, Thursday. Her Majesty the Queen Dowager and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, left Gosport Hall, Leicestershire, the seat of Earl Howe, on Sunday, for Whiteley Court, Worcestershire, the residence of the Queen Dowager.

Brighton, Sept. 25.—The Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice, and the infant Prince continue at the palace in the enjoyment of good health, but will take their departure either on Tuesday or Wednesday next for Windsor. The Prince of Wales and the Princess Alice were taken to Kemp Town this morning in an open brougham, accompanied by the Dowager Lady Littleton, where they were taken out and enjoyed a walk for half an hour. Earl Delaware arrived at the palace yesterday from Brickhurst to see the royal children, and returned in the afternoon, after having visited Sir Robert Peel.

Royal Fees to Medical Attendants.

The fee presented to Dr. Locock, first physician accoucheur to the Queen, is, it is understood, upon the birth of a royal infant, £1000. Dr. Ferguson, who is the second physician accoucheur, receives £500, and Sir James Clark the same amount. Mrs. Lilly the Queen's monthly nurse, receives 'for the month' £800. This amount is generally swelled to upwards of £600, the extras, being derived from the handsome present the nurse receives from each guest invited to the christening. The wet nurse is said to receive £100 per month for her services, besides the gratifying prospect of some portion of her family being provided for, either in the army or navy, or in some of the public offices, for life.

SCOTLAND.

The Queen is again to bid farewell to Scotland on Tuesday next. She will then have sojourned more than three weeks.

Where the deer and the doe lightly bounding together, Sport the long summer day 'mong the bonnie heathland heather.

Her Majesty is said to have improved greatly in health and spirits, during her residence at Blair Atholl, and she will probably retain a lasting impression of her delightful rambles among the magnificent scenery of Killiecrankie and Glen Tilt.

It is supposed that her arrangements for departure have been made to correspond with the time at which she is to be visited at Windsor by Louis Philippe. His Majesty of the barricades is expected to leave the shores of France for England on the 9th of next month.

IRELAND.

Mr. O'Connell leaves Dublin for Derbyshire this day.

The Morning Chronicle says, that after the payment of all expenses connected with the state prosecutions, £20,000 remains in the repeal treasury.

The repeal rent for the nineteen weeks ending with the 23d inst., amounted to £27,678, being an average of £1,456 per week.

PORTUGAL.

Letters from Lisbon have been received united; could not attend to the business of what underneath its folds is concealed a dagger that is aimed at the heart of the "Goddess of Liberty." This land was once denominated, "an asylum for the oppressed, the land of the free, and the home of the brave," but its glory is now written upon its glory is departed, the fine gold has become dim, and under the tree of Liberty where once reposed the patriot, the man of honor, and the veterans of seventy-six, now lurk the villain, the blackleg, and the man of blood.

It is time that we awake from our slumbers, and do our first works over again. It is time that we repair the breaches, and go back to first principles. It is time that we discountenance vice, enforce law, punish the guilty, let the oppressed go free, and then there may be some hopes of regaining that fame which we once enjoyed as republicans; but which has now become so tarnished among the nations of the earth.

Four o'clock this day.—The Tabernacle at this moment (12 o'clock) is crowded with men, women and children, presenting a singular scene of religious infatuation. As much as the Millerites may have been charged with insincerity, we cannot doubt after looking upon the crowd now assembled in the Tabernacle, and listening to their prayers, exhortations and hallelujahs coming, as they appear to, from their very souls, we say without the slightest sincerity as little as we do their most singular infatuation. They have lived upon four o'clock this afternoon for the "Coming of Christ." They would to end this day at four o'clock, they most firmly believe, and they are preparing their souls and bodies for that great event, and for taking their final leave of terra firma, in their Grand Ascension. Some of their exhortations, though honest, partake a little of the ludicrous and provoke a smile from "both saint and sinner."—Bay State Dem. Oct. 10.

When Mormonism first began to attract the attention of the public, it was a common thing to proclaim that the delusion would be dead in one year;—but when Millerism sprang up, even sectarian bigots could brush the hair of eurythmics and pretend to be very religious crying out with long faces—and not infrequently meeting with the Millerites, to "watch the coming of Christ," when the bible never once alludes to any such event only when Israel was gathered: see Jeremiah 16: 16? And before the great and terrible day of the Lord come, ELIJAH the prophet, was to be sent, &c. If there was ever a basswood generation, this is it.

If a few gentle priests could manage the affairs of the Almighty, we should have fine times. The promises would all fail; the bible, which is the great Almanac of eternity, would turn out, in its calculations like the common religious "tracts," to be the speculations of men; God would be distanced; and Miller, Ely, the Pope, bishop of Canterbury and some clerical cronies, would ride into the Millennium on flowery beds of ease, and leave the old prophets and apostles, to work their passage back to bliss, over the bones and blood of martyrs—ex necessitate rei.

From abroad.—The Liverpool Standard of October 4th contains the following:

By the Hibernia and Great Western, whose arrival we notice elsewhere, we have received intelligence from America a fortnight later than that previously received. The intelligence is unimportant.

It appears, from a Mormonite document, entitled the "Epistle of the Twelve," that the succession to Joe Smith is given to a band of twelve men, who are called Apostles, and are appointed to preach to the Mormon people throughout Europe and America.

MORMON AFFAIRS

We saw a statement in the Missouri Republican, that the Mormons and Indians had assembled in great force, near Carthage, Hancock county, Illinois, as it was supposed, with hostile intentions towards some of the citizens of the county, &c.

The facts as we have learned them from an authentic source, are about as follows: The circuit court of that county met on the 21st. There were recognized to attend this court, all the common council of the city of Nauvoo, and many other persons of that place, charged with a riot in destroying the press and materials of the Nauvoo Expositor in June last. Those persons and their witnesses, making in all about one hundred persons being poor, and most of them unable to pay tavern bills in town, and wishing to avoid the show of a large Mormon force about the court, came to the very laudable conclusion of camping out some three or four miles from town, where they could be at all times ready to attend court upon a short notice to answer the charges against them.

In addition to this, some twenty Potawatami Indians, with their women and children, on their way to hunt muskrats in Iowa, passed through the county about sixteen miles from Carthage, about the same time. They had no connection with the Mormons or any other persons in the county, but passed through without molesting any one; and this was the great Mormon and Indian force referred to.

Now for the object of getting up this story, and the use that was attempted to be made of it. It was well understood that at the court an attempt would be made to indict the persons who were guilty of murdering Joseph and Hyrum Smith, while they were confined in the Carthage Jail, in June last; to prevent which something must be done by the mob party in Hancock. With this view the mob gathered a considerable force around the court house on Monday, and after the court adjourned in the evening they took possession of the court house, organized an alarm meeting—made violent and inflammatory speeches about this supposed Mormon and Indian force, and attempted to get upon excitement. They resolved that it was extremely unsafe for the court to hold longer, and that it ought forthwith to adjourn, and that if the court refused to do so, that they would immediately organize an armed force around the court house in Carthage.

They appointed a committee of safety, and directed that the Judge should be informed of the resolutions of the meeting, that he might consult his safety, &c. The meeting then adjourned to meet on the next evening.

Judge Thomas did not wait to be called upon at his chamber, by those gentlemen, but without much form or ceremony, he let those panic makers know that he should not obey their order to adjourn; and they with all their force could not do him from doing his duty. And furthermore, if any of them appeared about the court house with arms or any other hostile demonstrations, that he would order them instantly to fall, and if necessary he would be one of the posse to aid in the execution of the order. This so deterred the out-breakers, that they dared not even present their resolutions to the court.

They then attempted to frighten the Grand Jury, and through some of their friends had the question started there, whether they should go into court, raise the alarm, and advise the court to adjourn? The jury, however, as promptly rejected the proposition as did the Judge, and instead of adjourning, proceeded to find indictments against eight of the murderers of the Smiths; and seven or eight Mormons who destroyed the printing press in Nauvoo; thus enforcing the laws against mob violence, whether perpetrated by Mormons, or anti-Mormons. The mob became alarmed, their force dispersed, and the adjourned meeting was never held. The Mormons got through their business in court—broke up their camp, and went home. The poor Indians, unconscious of the stir they were making, among the white people of Hancock, went ahead with their war upon the muskrats, and at the latest dates all was peaceable in Carthage.—State Register.

67. We feel grateful for so much truth, and candor. The whig papers from Sharp's Warsaw Signal, down to the N. Y. Tribune, all over the country, when they found they could not speculate out of the blood and carnage at Carthage—not only abused and vilified the Mormons, but came out against the laws of the land slyly, and justified the murder of the two Smiths. There was, in old times, a drouth, but when the prophet prayed seven times, he discovered a cloud about the size of a man's hand which brought plenty of rain; so may it be with this first appearance of truth and justice in the west.

From the same paper.

LATEST FROM HANCOCK.
The following is an extract of a letter received by a gentleman of this place last week. It will serve to show the people of Illinois and of other States, what a desperate set of men have settled themselves above the laws; and with what contempt they treat the most sacred of the institutions of the country.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CARTHAGE, HANCOCK COUNTY, ILL.
Carthage, Oct. 22, 1844.

DEAR SIR:—I have been here about two days. Court is in session. The mob (so called) is here but not in great numbers. They are fierce and vindictive; and disposed to do harm if they dare. They had a violent warlike meeting in the court house last night, in which they tried to get up a story that there were two hundred Mormons and three hundred Indians encamped near this place, in hostile array for the purpose of an attack on the town. They passed panic resolutions, advising the court to adjourn, and threatened that if that was not done, that they would raise an armed force, as they say to protect themselves; but all know, for the purpose of awing the court, and driving off witnesses. I was at the meeting to see and hear. I can assure you however that the court will not be frightened to adjourn. Nor is any body afraid of an attack on the town by the Mormons or Indians. As for their trials against the prosecutors they are not needed. Roswell, Sharp, Williams & Co. were the leaders in getting up the excitement. They have advertised for another meeting to night. But I think they will not succeed in holding it in the court house. They hope to get it believed abroad that they are about to be attacked by the Mormons as an excuse for some outrage which they wish; but have not the courage to perpetrate. There is no danger of violence from the Mormons, unless these mobbers, as they have threatened, should attempt to drive the court out of the country; or overawe the witnesses or jurors, and then, you may expect to hear that they have received a sound drubbing, which will put an end to their agitations for all time to come.

Indian Troubles.—From the officers of the steamboat Lynx, we learn that another depredation has been recently committed by the Liston Sioux Indians. A trader, named N. W. Kitson, while upon a trading expedition up the St. Peter's river, was taken captive by a party belonging to this tribe, who kept him in confinement several days, and would not permit him to depart until he had given them some two or three hundred dollars worth of goods and treated them to a feast. Their object in robbing Kitson is said to have been for the purpose of getting ammunition to repel the force recently sent from Fort Snelling to arrest those engaged in the robbery of the cattle drovers from Missouri. Nothing had been heard from the troops, at St. Peters, who were sent out for that purpose since their departure.—St. Louis Era, Oct. 8.

The Private Mail Case Decided.—Judge Randall, of the U. S. District court, last Monday, the 7th inst., delivered his opinion in the case of James W. Hale, against whom a verdict was rendered a short time since for forty penalties of $50 each, for carrying letters out of the regular mail on a post route; for profit. Judge Randall reviewed the whole case, and decided that Mr. Hale was liable for the penalties under the act of Congress, and ordered judgment to be entered against him and in favor of the United States, for the sum of $2,000. It is understood that this case will be taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States for revision, as there seems to be a difference of opinion among the District Judges of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Maryland, as to the application of the Post Office laws to the Mail Companies.

The Scotch Giant and Giantess have arrived at Baltimore. He is seven feet four inches high, measures fifty-seven inches around the chest, and weighs 412 pounds. She is also of extraordinary size, and has a beautiful form. They are accompanied by a dwarf twelve years of age, twenty-four inches in height, and weighs but twenty-eight pounds.

Mexican Tents made in Boston.—One thousand tents for the Mexican Government have been manufactured in Boston and shipped in Havana. They were paid for by a draft on Baring & Brother. The United States has inquired into the matter, and found that the tents were really made in Boston, and for the Mexican market, and they were represented in the clearance as 100 bales of manufactured sail-cloth.

The Houston, (Texas), Telegraph says, that the debt of the Republic of Texas, amounts to one hundred dollars for each man of that country!

For the Neighbor.

MR. EDITOR:—Sir: Permit me through the medium of your valuable paper, to make a few statements of facts, by way of reply to the unwarranted attack made upon myself by the editor of the Warsaw Signal, in his paper of the 30th ult.

It appears that bills of indictment were found by the Grand Jury against nine of the persons engaged in the murder of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Among this number is the name of Thomas C. Sharp, indicted as accessory. I know not that it was upon my testimony alone that a bill was found, it being strongly corroborated by other facts disclosed in the evidence of other witnesses. Why this attack should be made upon my testimony alone I know not, unless he wishes to prejudice the minds of the people against it, from the isolated fact that I belong to the Latter-Day Saints—as if embracing the religion which I sincerely believe, and know, to be the religion of Jesus Christ was sufficient reason for disfranchisement and subjection to disbelief. He says:

"We were indicted as an accessory on the testimony of a perjured Mormon villain, who can be proved such, in every community in which he had lived. What his testimony was before the Grand Jury, we know not, and we care less—all, we ask is a trial before an impartial tribunal."

The editor does not give us the name of this "perjured Mormon villain?" consequently I can only infer that he alludes to myself from the fact that I was the only "Mormon" witness examined by the Grand Jury. If it be a fact that I am the person charged here with being a "perjured villain," I repudiate the charge as being worthy alone of the slanderous, lying pen from which the charge emanated. However, nothing can be too base and villainous for a murderer—as I know Thomas C. Sharp, editor of the Warsaw Signal to be—to resort to. His remarks bear a very great inconsistency, if not a falsehood, upon their face. He indulges in calling me a "perjured Mormon villain," says that he was indicted upon my testimony, and in the next breath he says he does not know what my testimony was. Now, if he does not know what my testimony was, how does he know that it criminated him or was false? He knew full well that I could have criminated him, that I knew his hellish proceedings and deed of blood, and that I could have condemned him within the pale of truth. I do not consider this any slander upon my character, but regard it only as the prating of a murderer, whose venom is ever lashed upon the heads of innocent and truth-telling people. As to my character, I will merely remark that it cannot be harmed by the hands that are dripping in the blood of innocence, and T. C. Sharp may learn this fact by experiment, if he chooses.

Let me now ask Mr. Sharp one or two simple questions, which may serve to refresh his memory by calling up circumstances, and by the time I conclude, quite likely I may bring him to his recollection to such a degree that he will discover the secret that he was really one of the murderers of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. I perceive his memory is quite treacherous—for this there is a reason!

Does Mr. Sharp recollect making a certain speech at the Crossing of the Railroad, wherein he said the law would not answer their purpose—that they must go to Carthage and kill the Smiths, while the Governor was in Nauvoo, which would so enrage the Mormons that they would murder the "dam'd little Governor," and then they would get rid of the Governor and Mormons? Does he not recollect seeing persons besides myself standing by, who were not Mormons, at the time this address was delivered? (whose names, for some purpose, was not presented to the Grand Jury, but who, in all probability, will appear and give testimony before the Circuit Court.)

He speaks of my being a Mormon. Now, if there is any virtue in not being a Mormon, I would inform him that I was not a Mormon until some time after the murder was committed, and I made affidavit of the same things to which I testified before the Grand Jury, before I embraced the Mormon faith. But one thing I can say, I have never been guilty of committing murder myself, or advising other people to commit it, either before I became a Mormon or afterwards.

The editor again says: "On Friday morning, two Mormon witnesses, were smuggled, without knowledge of the citizens, into the Grand Jury room, and examined until three o'clock P. M. when the testimony was closed."

Now, I have a few words to say about this "smuggling" witnesses. I was not smuggled; I went bold and fearless before the Grand Jury, in open day; and I presented myself there, as I had the right to do, without giving Mr. Sharp, or the citizens in general, notice that I was going to do so. Probably Mr. Sharp might have known more about it, had I not been in great danger of being intercepted by a mob. I well remember, (and I presume Sharp knows something about it, as he is so expert in leading on the rabble to deeds of murder,) that a day or two before, I was followed by a gang of eleven men four miles this side of Carthage, with the intent of murdering me, for the purpose of destroying my testimony. Their maneuvers about the premises were observed, and although they kept things as sly as possible, yet their intentions are known to me. Under these circumstances, if I had been "smuggled" the state of things would have justified me. But I shall never smuggle myself to shun the execution of murderers' threats. I shall, before all courts, and under every circumstance, tell the truth and nothing but the truth, and if I meet the fate that menaces me, I shall fall having discharged a duty that I solemnly owe to my country and my God.

Respectfully,

WM. M. DANIELS.

MARRIED.—On the 21st of Sept., at the house of Mr. John Wilkie in Nauvoo, by Elder Addison Everett, Mr. John Bishop of Montrose, Iowa, to Miss Julia Ann Gillum, of Nauvoo.

—In this city, on the 26th ult., by Elder Thompson, Mr. Leonard Schussler to Mrs. Margaret Hartley, all of Nauvoo.

Well, gentle reader, start not! the Printers are not always forgotten on occasions like these—though it is but seldom we are called upon to drink to the health of a fair-bride, yet on this occasion, we did so, to a jug of good ale, and a loaf of splendid cake, from the hands of the fair bride herself, for which, from the FOREMAN down to the least Devil in the office, all unite in wishing the bride and bridegroom all the happiness that belongs to the hyemal state.—May their days be crowned with peace, prosperity, and happiness; and may their offspring be as numerous as the sand upon the sea shore.

AUTUMNAL GALES.

The following are some of the particulars of the late autumnal gales, which have exhibited some of the calamities of the last days—for the Lord walks on the wings of the wind when he pours out his wrath.

From the New Orleans Tribune of Oct. 16.

HURRICANE AT HAVANA.

Great Loss of Life and Property.—Destruction of Woods, Crops, &c.—The brig Emperador arrived here yesterday from Havana, bringing letters and papers to the 9th instant, by which we have received full accounts of a most disastrous hurricane that passed over the island of Cuba on the 4th and 5th instant.

So far as heard from, the devastation appears to have extended over the island far and wide, and the next intelligence must bring us accounts of many more disasters, both by sea and land, than we have yet heard. The loss of property has been enormous; the loss of life, though it has been considerable, we are astonished that it is no greater.

The barometer, during the storm fell five inches—something never before known within the tropics.

Sunday, October 6, 1844.

When we wrote an article this morning, we had not seen but a small part of the ravages of the hurricane. Now that we have traversed the whole city—now that our eyes have beheld innumerable ruins—now that we have heard with horror the relation of a thousand disasters—a thousand scenes of desolation occurring in the short space of 11 hours—we suppress our feelings to print the effect of this terrible, without parallel in the history of Cuba. Most sad indeed is this relation to us, and were it not to satisfy the public mind, we would beg to be excused. But knowing that the reality is never so horrible as the exaggerated picture which fear and charlatanism forces upon public anxiety, we will seek to calm the excited emotions of the community. We do not wish to infer from this, that our sad review will be wholly exact or complete. At this early hour it is impossible to obtain positive information of the extent of suffering. The public authorities for the city and port are actively engaged in the inquiry, and in the method of repairing them as far as possible. Those most interested do not know their losses with any degree of certainty. Therefore, our sketch will be complete, provisionally; but we shall ad interim write new facts, information and dates, complete and rectify it should it be requisite.

The 4th of October—as we have already said, a day of such sad memory—it rained continually and abundantly. At first, the wind was light and scanty from the S. E. Afterwards it blew with more force from due east until evening, when nature fell to almost a complete calm—a prelude to a grand tragedy that was soon to be enacted. At 8 p.m. it began to blow and gain with force; at 9 the wind was tempestuous; at 10, a hurricane—increasing in strength during the whole night, and continuing thus until 10 a.m. Then imperceptibly it began to lull. At meridian, much diminished, and diminishing all the evening. During that unfortunate night and morning the hurricane traversed three-fourths of the compass, and with such sudden variations, that the dangers, especially in the bay, were aggravated, rendering all efforts heroically employed for the salvation of the lost vessels, null.

During this night of terror, tribulation filled the heart of this tranquil city. At 11 p.m. commenced the demolition of houses, enclosures, trees, doors and windows, and to such extent that it would be difficult to find within our whole extensive population, within and without the city walls a single house that has not suffered, and been injured more or less. Night infernal! To the clamor of destruction which resounded in the elements, the cries of the victims, the voices of sufferers, the tears of the unfortunate, and the prayers of the faithful, were added.

The long desired dawn of day at length arrived, but not with it a termination of the general anguish, which increased, as the feeble rays of light illuminated us with the torch of death; this picture of destruction; for in truth it was between the hours of 6 and 8 that the hurricane effected its greatest ravages. During that day almost every establishment remained closed; the streets and squares were deserted; the distribution of the daily supplies for the city were retarded till late in the afternoon. In the markets there was nothing—no milk, meat or provisions of any kind. When the hurricane was over, the city continued to present the appearance of a place bombarded and sacked. Doors and windows that remained, were found shut, and only through sections of the doors and window (loopholes) might be seen anxiously watching to learn if the war of the elements was over. Wherever the eye was cast, were seen rubbish, boughs and trunks of trees, spouts window-frames, houses propped up, windows and doors forced out, turrets broken, walls demolished and habitations overflowed. The spectacle which the wharves of Caballero, San Francisco and the Machina presented, especially the latter, is indescribable, most horrible and most desolate. At the first, the vessels moored there striking against each other, had their ribs broken. At the second, more than ten schooners went to pieces, and passage boats and launches broken, with masts and spars, boxes and barrels, were under the wharf. At the Machina, were seen likewise a multitude of small vessels destroyed, injured and abandoned. The gate of the wharf was forced down, and the great mast of the Machina fell, and in its fall destroyed part of the houses which were there. At the Fish market there has also been havoc—one of its towers ruined—all the launches that were near it, were thrown up on the shore or in the sewers. In front of the Fish market, against the quarter of Valdez, and over against the city walls, a brig loaded with charcoal has been driven, and directing the eye towards the Punta, three or four more vessels are seen. The picture is sad from this point—vessels dismasted in the channel—others lost on Casa Blanca, Tricornia and Regla and even as far up the harbor as Tulepiedra.

We have already said that the Tenglado, or shed on the wharf of Caballero, is completely down. In its fall three victims lost their lives—two whites and one black. The new shed in front of the Custom House has suffered damage likewise—the planks of the wharfs broken up. In Regla the damages are considerable, as much in the town as the wharves. The Plaza de Toros half destroyed, and many houses fallen. In Guanabacoa, we are informed, that more than 30 houses are ruined. In the Cerro many houses and enclosures are down. In Puentes—we do not know what has happened in this picturesque place. The bridge of Mordazo has disappeared.

In Havana we have heard of three stone and mortar houses almost ruined and it is rare to find one that has not suffered partially. The greater part of the city lamps have gone to pieces. The top ornaments of the Government House have been transported, as if by magic, to a great distance. The stately palm trees of Santa Clara were torn up by the roots, and their beautiful leaves thrown by the wind into the street.

In the street O'Reilly, No. 108, a chamber, or upper story, was blown down, injuring considerably a mulatto carpenter and a boy who slept there. At present we do not know of any more personal accidents within the city walls.

Outside of the walls, as was to be expected, was the greatest destruction. The sentry-boxes were carried a great distance and torn into chips; the lamps torn from their hangings and utterly destroyed. Opposite the Pillar of India many houses have fallen; the balconies that extended to Cienfuegos street, and many others, no longer exist. The Campeo di Marte (Parade Ground,) on the south and west side, has lost a great part of its iron railings and pillars, which fell from the force of the wind and the trees blown against them. All the arches and gateways have lost the trophies and inscriptions which adorned them. The great House of Aldama—that castle—but palace, built bomb proof—has suffered; one of its balconies, facing the north, was twisted away by the wind! The Plaza de Vapor, on its north side, is without a single excuse for a door. The Alameda is all blown down—all there is a level.

The American ship Ebro, which sailed from New Orleans for Havre, was wrecked on the point of Salado, near to this port. Crew all saved—vessel a total wreck.

The Spanish brig Zaragoza, which sailed on the 4th, was lost on the rocks of Haute, westward of this port, and totally lost. Captain and crew (with the exception of three) saved.

The vessels of war injured are—frigate Isabel 20, injured slightly. Frigate Cofes, parted cable and drifted in among the merchant vessels, and injured both them and herself—in the gale of the 2d she ran afoul of the Titi, and carried away her jibboom and royal mast and yard. St. Amer Congreso, lost a boat and had her chimney blown down. The Bazan suffered in her side, upperworks and low. The brig Laborde suffered only inside. The schooner Infanta, injured. Transport, lost a boat. The Pontón Marie lost her catheads. The brig Trois lost only her cambouse and boat injured.

The American vessels in this harbor have all suffered more or less, from $200 to $2000. The schooner Mary Shields, Partel, of Savannah, was the most exposed during the storm. She is injured as much, if not more, than any other American vessel.

From Matanzas.—In Matanzas the hurricane commenced on the 4th, and continued with scarcely any intermission, until night. A great many dwellings, masts and sugar houses are blown down, and there is scarcely a roof in the place that has escaped the effects of the gale.

Yesterday morning the rivers of San Juan and Yaguri were swollen to a degree never before seen, carrying every thing they met before them, and as some of the edifices on their margins were blown down, the rush of waters finished what the gale had left. The supposed amount of sugar lost in these buildings on the margins, is 3,000 boxes. The store house of Messrs. Domingo Aldama and Julio Alfonso, being very strongly built, escaped destruction.

The loss of lives is said to consist of five launches, victims of the fall of their barrack, 10 women and one man (whites) killed; two negroes drowned in the Ojo. Many more would have perished had it not been for the strenuous efforts of many persons, who, on horseback, placed their lives in danger to save their fellow-beings who remained in their dwellings too long to be saved on foot.

In the bay of Matanzas, the damages have indeed been great—the only vessel which has escaped without any injury, is the Spanish brig Sabina, bound to Bremen with 651 boxes of sugar on board. The American brig Maria Teresa, which was loading for London, cut her masts away, saving by this means his vessel from going on shore. The barque Aun Louisa, Captain S. Row, of Boston, was thrown upon the rocks, but this morning she is floating again, having suffered much.

The steamer Cardenas and the American ship Vashington, are entirely lost. The damage, which is universally felt, is great, incalculable, and the information from the country is most heart-rending. Every thing, canes, plants, vegetables, &c., have all suffered.

From all parts we continue to receive accounts of the terrible storm. In San Antonio do Banoes & great many houses have fallen.

The theatre and the tower of the church are ruined. It is said that three or four lives are lost—one of them, a youth of twelve years, crushed by the falling walls of Canoa, a hurricane he was wind that place a wholly blown down, excepting the church, three stores, in which the neighbors sought refuge. This town consisted of 62 houses, some of stone, but most of wood and plaster.

On the coast Destino, the negro appeared, and the dwelling red. On the Columbo es are ruined, and not a tree, or fruit of any kind. Santiago de las Vegas they tempestuous win swept action for the space of 14 g at 9 p.m. of the 4th, to considerable distances balconies, plasters of the windows and shutters of racks and court house, dwellings throwing down buildings, etc. etc. As of a square the winds ds and tore up trees by inches. The loss of life m happy to say is only one.

In the small town of San Antonio Chi house stands, and on coadia, all was thrown down, killing three negroes and wounding six others.

On the coffee estate Candelaria, 8 miles from Batobano, the hurricane was felt with as great force as in Havana. At the houses of ordinary construction, and many of stone and mortar, are down. The dwellings have suffered much. The winds have thrown all down except the coffee bushes, and they are much injured.

P. S.—The Spanish Correo is advertised to sail for Cadiz on the 9th inst.

The Captain General has decreed that in consequence of the effect of the hurricane, the persons who own wood houses injured by the storm, may repair them with wood, if they are too poor to build with stone and mortar. This decree has made the Captain General very popular among all classes. He has likewise decreed that boards, planks, window-frames, shutters, and all kinds of wood for building houses may enter free of duty. The same liberty (free of duty) for six months, beginning to-day, upon corn, land corn, meal, beans, potatoes, rice, sweet potatoes, plantains. Also some other minor regulations advantageous to the people.

GREAT GALE OFF THE SOUTHERN COAST.

Our New Orleans papers furnish us with additional particulars of the great gale off the southern coast, in which many vessels, a large amount of property, and many lives were lost. The details are derived from the "Light of the Reef," published at Key West, on the 9th inst.—St. Louis Republic.

The gale commenced on the 4th inst., and lasted eighteen hours. On the 5th before the gale had reached its height, the U. S. revenue cutter Vigilant, dropped her anchors and was driven to sea, where, with the exception of two seamen, all were lost. The officers and crew of the Vigilant consisted of W. B. G. Taylor, commander; Wm. G. Taylor, Lt. commanding; Mr. Cooper of Hingham, Mass., 2d Lieut.; six seamen, and the cook and cabin boy, slaves, belonging to the Louisiana pilots, and two of the negroes who deserted with the pilot boat from the Balize, were on board. J. C. Johnson, pilot, belonging to the Vigilant, and Mr. Robert T. Armistead, of New Orleans, (passenger), were providentially ashore, and saved.

[This vessel—as we learn from accounts received by the eastern mail yesterday—captured; and Michael Driscoll and Henry Hoyt, the two seamen saved, caught hold of a small canoe, which got loose from the vessel while bottom up. They retained their hold for two days and nights the sea continually breaking over them. They were taken off by the ship Isaide, from New Orleans for London, nearly speechless and quite exhausted.]

Schooner Hudson, Captain Millen of New York, recently from Washington, D. C., drove to sea with two anchors dragging, in the early part of the gale, about 10 A. M., and is supposed to be lost with all on board, viz: Ambrose Cooper, passenger from St. Augustine; James Millen, (the captain,) of New Orleans; William Mollard, mate, of the eastern shore of Virginia; John Saunders, Englishman, and A. Thompson, Norwegian, crew and owners. The four owners of the schooner were lately petty officers on board the Columbus, 71, and had employed their savings in the purchase and fitting out of their vessel, purposely for freighting and passage on the coast.

Ship Atlantic, Mallet, from Liverpool for New Orleans, went ashore on Cayesford reef on the morning of the 4th inst. Same day, the gale increasing, cut away her masts; she then got into deep water, when her chain parted, and she struck on the rocks. Part of the cargo, consisting of dry goods and hardware, were saved and brought to Key West. The crew and passengers had also arrived there. Ship reported to have bilged.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE AND PROPERTY.

On the night of the 18th, a dreadful storm visited Lake Erie. The Advertiser (Buffalo) states that the amount of property is immense, and the loss of life is awful. The Cincinnati Gazette received the following letter from a correspondent at Buffalo:

BUFFALO, Oct. 19—10 o'clock, A. M.

Messrs. Editors: It is my painful duty to give you a few of the particulars of the hard st. gale that ever visited this section of the country: $300,000 will not cover the loss of property in this city.

At about half past eleven last night the gale commenced blowing from the north-west most violently. If kept increasing from that time until about 4 o'clock.

The iron U. S. steamer Chautauque, Booker Hill and Columbus, with several canal boats, were driven from the harbor and cast ashore; some below the south pier, and some in the bay. The steamboat Indian Queen and schooner Ashland were driven on shore, in attempting to make the pier. The Commodore Perry came in at 12 o'clock, in a shocking condition. She was almost crippled. She did a great deal of damage to boats and vessels while landing at the dock. The steamers St. Louis, Julia Palmer and Robert Fulton left last evening at 7 o'clock, for the upper Lakes. The St. Louis was driven back to Black Rock this morning. The Julia Palmer was driven back also; but after making several attempts to get into the harbor, was beat up into the bay, where she has laid since 7 this morning. She threw 15 horses overboard; 12 of them got on shore. The Fulton has not been heard from. It is supposed that she has gone to the bottom. The whole dock, from one end to the other, is completely ruined. The south pier, which was supposed would stand anything has been swept away. Seneca street, below Michigan street, is one heap of ruins. Canal boats, small houses, furniture, lumber, cord-wood, &c., &c., a confused mass! Two girls domestic, were drowned in their beds at Hildley's Hotel. A woman was drowned in her bed at Washington street.

At 9 o'clock, there were 32 dead bodies in the court house since that time several more have been found. I have been informed that 59 will not cover the number. Buildings, innumerable are blown down in all quarters of the city. The water rose from 4 to 5 feet in the warehouses on the docks; the roofs of a great number of them are torn off. The new cotton factory sustained a very heavy loss. An innumerable quantity of furniture of all descriptions has been taken from the beach this morning belonging to the steamer De Witt Clinton. It is ascertained that she is lost. The steamer G. W. Dale lies across Ohio street, in a shocking condition. A horse swam into the harbor this morning and was saved. It is impossible to tell where he came from.

10-12 o'clock—I have just been informed that 18 more bodies have been brought to the court house. I have also been informed by the agent of the Julia Palmer, that she had at least 500 passengers on board. She is the opposition boat; it is reported that a steamboat went ashore this morning a few miles above the city. The wind for the last hour has been increasing. It is impossible for me to give a list of the different sufferers. Last night the streets were filled with men, women and children, running in all directions.

Yours, in haste, J. W. P.

The Rochester Democrat of Monday

says:

Our city was visited on Friday night with the severest gale ever known in this section. The weather for two or three days previously, had been moderate, cool and rainy. Between 11 and 12 o'clock on Friday night, the wind sprang up freshly from the South-East, and veering suddenly to the South-West, in a short time it blew a perfect hurricane, exciting general alarm throughout the city.

The gable end of the new block now erecting on the corner of St. Paul and Main streets fell with a tremendous crash upon the store adjoining, occupied by S. L. & J. H. Brewster, crushing the roof, and carrying all the floors and goods in a mass to the cellar. The destruction was almost complete, the building being totally gutted, with the exception of a few feet of floor in front. Mr. J. H. Brewster was sleeping in the front part of the second story, and escaped in a miraculous manner. The falling mass carried away part of the bed on which he was sleeping, leaving no way of escape except through the front window.

The roof of the Frankfort Market was lifted off in a mass and deposited in the river.

We have heard of no other material damage, except the destruction of balconies and signs, and the prostration of shade trees and fences. The awnings on the business streets were all torn in tatters.

We have, however, to record political "omens" enough to last Amos Kendall till after election.—The Hickory and Ash poles in this city, number together, some 125—all of which "suffered some." The tall Ash on the corner of Buffalo and State streets lost its topmost in the gale. Several of the minor Hickory and Ash poles prostrated, their banners "trailing in the dust," as Amos would say; and those which survived the gale were awed, lying but perpendicular. An Ash pole in Frankfort, in its fall drew up a tree by the roots to which it was fastened. The wind paid but little respect to party for it demolished about an equal number of political emblems, and gave them all an oblique leaning toward Texas.

The iron U. S. steamer Chautauque, Booker Hill and Columbus, with several canal boats, were driven from the harbor and cast ashore; some below the south pier, and some in the bay. The steamboat Indian Queen and schooner Ashland were driven on shore, in attempting to make the pier. The Commodore Perry came in at 12 o'clock, in a shocking condition. She was almost crippled. She did a great deal of damage to boats and vessels while landing at the dock. She threw 15 horses overboard; 12 of them got on shore. The Fulton has not been heard from. It is supposed that she has gone to the bottom. The whole dock, from one end to the other, is completely ruined. The south pier, which was supposed would stand anything has been swept away. Seneca street, below Michigan street, is one heap of ruins. Canal boats, small houses, furniture, lumber, cord-wood, &c., &c., a confused mass! Two girls domestic, were drowned in their beds at Hildley's Hotel. A woman was drowned in her bed at Washington street.

It is impossible to tell where he came from.

ANOTHER HURRICANE—LOSS OF LIFE AND PROPERTY.

We learn from the Western Examiner, printed at Independence, in Jackson county, that a destructive hurricane visited that section of the State about 9 o'clock of the night of the 25th. Its effects were lamentably disastrous. That paper says:

It came across the prairie, and the first we heard of its effects, was at the Mission, three miles from Westport, which it injured considerably from whence it passed over our country in a north-east direction, striking the river about one half mile above Wayne city, at C. N. Hall's mill, and have heard of its keeping along down the river for some miles, but as yet we have not heard where it commenced nor where it ended. It varied from five to seven hundred yards in width, and pursued a straight direction.

We give the following list of the killed and wounded.

Mrs. McGill, Livingston, killed; Mrs. Stone, do. Mr. Kerr had three children killed, and himself greatly wounded; Miss Mary Middleton and Dr. Martin's son, near Westport, were killed. A stranger who had been moving a family to Plato, and encamped opposite Owen's landing, was found dead, his wagon blown entirely away. Thomas Hedges had all his houses and furniture blown off, and several of his family badly crippled. Samuel Lambert, houses &c., gone, wife and another person badly injured. J. Bead, (w. houses &c., blown off. J. King, do. Mrs. Higgins, do. and herself badly crippled. Mrs. Ragan, do. and herself and negro man crippled. Calvin McCoy, do. and several of his family crippled. Dr. Martin, do. Mrs. Backhart, do. Thomas Smith, do. C. N. Hall's steam saw mill, roof blown off, grist mill and houses blown entirely away—damage about $1200.

We have heard of several others killed and wounded, and much more property injured, but do not know the particulars. We have no idea that the half has been told, or yet heard of the loss of lives and destruction of property, occasioned by this awful tornado.

The Mosque of St. Sophia at Constantinople.

—In entering this most celebrated of the Turkish mosques the font ensemble of the interior is somewhat less imposing than the exterior induces us to believe, and this is owing, in the greatest measure, to the disproportionate shallowness of the dome, the diameter of which is 115, while its height does not exceed 20 feet. There are in the interior a vast number of columns of which eight, of porphyry, are from the temple dedicated to the sun by the Aurelian, and the same number of green marble from the temple of Ephesus, as well as many others, the spoils of various heathen temples. The floor of the mosque is covered with beautiful carpets, and the ornaments throughout are of great richness. In different quarters of the mosque are small raised pulpits, where dervishes or learned doctors sit explaining the Koran and each has his own particular audience. The mosque being without pews or seats of any kind, seems so vast, that although it is really inferior in size to St. Peter's or St. Paul's in the visitor's eye, it surprises both. The verdantique columns, the galleries, colonnades, stairs, and interior, are all of marble; the beauty of which exceeds all description. The roof is of a cemented mosaic, which as it decays is sold for relics.—Polytechnic Review.

French English.—"Yat a ver comical language de Anglais is" said a French gentleman the other evening at table. "Do you think so?" "Oui, ver drill. I vil tell you. I wanted to see Angland; ver good. I got de passport. I arrived at Dovers. I was ver much hungry. I looked in my dictionary for 'potage,' potage, soup, sope. 'Madame,' said I, 'some sope if you please.' In one minute she had beckoned me. I vent vid har to the chambre. 'Dis is sope,' said she, 'and de vater.' 'Pardon, madame, not sayon, but sope. 'Well sure, dis is sope.' 'Parbleu, Madame de sope, sope, comprenez vous?' 'This is sope.' 'Dat sope! dat potage! madame. I am not one unbecile, one fool; I want de sope, not one lump of savon sope, madame.' 'But she wouldnt understand; and so, sure, I washed my hands vid the savon and vent to bed. De hands wer ver clean but for want of de sope de stomach was ver empty!"

Foreign News.

8 DAYS LATER.

By the Great Western which left Liverpool on the 12th Oct., we have our files of foreign papers as usual, although they are barren as to any thing that would interest us, still we extract a few items:

ENGLAND.

King Philippe was visiting the Queen, other matters remained as at our last advices.

IRELAND.

Mr. O'Connell's tour from Dublin to Derry has been a triumphal progress. In his carriage rode Mr. John O'Connell and Miss Staunton; and Mr. Daniel O'Connell, junior, travelling by the mail, overtook the party at Limerick, and proceeded in company with them. At every town the houses were decorated with evergreens and triumphal arches spanned the streets; inscriptions being hung up here and there, such as "Remember the 30th of May." The glorious triumph of the 7th September—"Denham, Cottenham, and Campbell," and the like. At several points of his progress addresses of welcome and congratulation were presented.

SWEDEN.

A great frost had inundated many places in Sweden.

INDIA.

Sir Henry Hardinge arrived at Calcutta at eight o'clock on the evening of the 23d July, and was immediately sworn in to his high office.

Prior to his departure, Lord Ellenborough was entertained, publicly, by the officers of the army at Calcutta, and he then declared that his chief regret on quitting India arose from his separation from the military service, which he highly prized. He embarked on the 1st of August, on board the steamer Tennessee, and immediately started for Suez. A subscription was in progress for the erection of some testimonial of respect to him.

The mutiny of the 64th Regiment of Bengal Infantry, which has been repressed by the decided measures of General Hunter, had produced the most stringent proceedings on the part of Sir Charles Napier, the Governor of Scinde. The colors were taken from the regiment, and the trial of the forty ringleaders of the mutiny was going on with the greatest care.

A small expedition, sent to attack a fort called Barnore, thirty-six miles northwest of Khandahur, had been obliged, by the great heat, to retreat back to Khandahur.

The news from the Punjab represents that country as a prey to anarchy and confusion, and the lowest intrigues of assassination and plunder by the chiefs. The shikhs hate the British Indian Government, and it is feared that, however pacific may be Sir Henry Hardinge's inclinations, he will be forced into war.

The rulers of Caudah, Candahar, and are described as acting with more unanimity than ever known before, and Herra Singh, notwithstanding the difficulties of his Government, is eager to side with and to be supported by those chieftains.

The arrival in Bombay of Sir Henry Pottinger, from China, has been the signal for great rejoicing. He was welcomed with addresses, and dinners, balls, &c. The Chamber of Commerce presented an address to which his excellency returned a most remarkable answer, in which the late proceedings and negotiations in China are reviewed.

Sir Henry Pottinger embarked, at Bombay, on the 27th of August, on his return to Europe.

CHINA.

The news from China does not come down later than the 21st of June, and was brought to Bombay by the steamer Driver, on board of which Sir H. Pottinger arrived there. The visit of the French frigate, Alenore, to Chusan and Shanghai, had occasioned much excitement among the Chinese along the coast, so that it was considered eminently desirable that a strong naval force should be kept in the north for the protection of British life and property against the outbreaks of the mob. The American and French fleets of war Brandywine, St. Louis, Cleopatra, and Acmene had arrived almost simultaneously in the Chinese waters. At Canton, the populace continued very unruly, manifesting on every occasion that presented itself, a spirit of extreme discontent at the presence of foreign flags. An arrow, as a windmill, had been placed on the top of the United States flag-staff, and great umbrage had been taken at this by the Chinese; on what ground is not explained. On the 6th of May the American Consul, Mr. Forbes, caused the obnoxious weathercock to be removed. While a party of sailors were engaged in this riot commenced among the rabble, some of whom pushed themselves into the square and threatened mischief. A placard was, shortly afterwards, issued by the gentry strongly recommending the maintenance of good feeling. Intelligence of the 17th from Canton is contained in private letters from Hongkong of the 19th, more recent than any we can discover in the papers of the last named date. The mob had broken into the square of the American factory, on the afternoon of the 17th, and endeavored to pull down the United States flag. They were resisted, and a Chinaman, who turned out to be an innocent and unoffending shopkeeper, was shot. At ten P. M. the Chinese soldiers made their appearance and cleared the square. The populace continued in a state of great excitement, and Canton was threatened with threatening notices that the factories would be attacked and burned. The Chinese authorities appear to have no authority whatever over the mob, and it seems to be thought that, unless some strong and decided measures are taken by us, there will be no safety for either life or property at Canton.

EGYPT.

Lord Ellenborough arrived at Cairo on the 19th September, and immediately proceeded on board the steamer Geyser, by which he was to sail, on the following day, for Marseilles.

Mr. H. Burne, of the London Post-office, had arrived at Alexandria, for the purpose of definitively settling the treaty between the British Government and the Pacha relative to the transit of the mails. The details were kept secret.

GREECE.

King Otto opened the session of the Chambers, in person, on the 19th of September. His speech was conciliatory in tone, and promised useful measures. The 15th anniversary of the revolution of the 17th September was celebrated with all the solemnity of a national fête. The King and Queen attended a solemn thanksgiving in the principal church; the whole of the troops were under arms; and, in the evening, the city was illuminated. All passed off quietly.

SOUTH AMERICA.

IMPORTANT. By the great Cohabite, 50 days from Rio Grande, we learn that war is declared by Brazil against the Argentine republic, through the intervention of General Paz. 10,000 troops passed through Rio Grande, on their way to Montevideo. "The immediate and total destruction of Oribe's forces is anticipated, and the port of Montevideo will be thrown open and trade again commenced. It is supposed that Brazil will not be satisfied with the destruction of the blockade, but continue to the entire overthrow of Rosas. More troops were daily expected from the north with Paz at their head."

CUBA.

PORTS OPENED FOR SUPPLIES. A letter to a commercial house in New Orleans states, that in consequence of the destruction caused by the late disastrous storm on the 4th instant, the following articles will be admitted free of duty during the ensuing six months, viz: boards, planks, shingles, and every description of building lumber; also—rice, corn, cornmeal, potatoes. The same paper adds that the damage produced by the storm to buildings, fruit trees, rice, cane, and coffee, is immense, though it was not possible to make any estimate of the extent to which the ensuing crops were injured.

MEXICO.

Vera Cruz dates to the 30th Sept. have reached us via N. Orleans and Havana. The remaining 104 Texan prisoners that were confined in the Castle Perote, were released on the 18th ult., and are looked for at N. Orleans by the cutter Woodbury. Great joy is expressed in the event.

Santa Anna had obtained leave of absence from the chambers, for a season, and left the capital on the 12th Sept. for his residence at Mango de Clivo. Gen. Canales, who reached San Louis de Potosi on the 17th, and took command of the army operations against Texas on the following day, was summoned to return to the capital which he reached the 19th, and immediately entered upon the duties of provisional president during the absence of the president.

The N. O. Pickayune says: "In no portion of the news received by the way of Havana do we find any mention made of the preparations against Texas, nor do we learn that the chambers have taken any farther steps towards raising the $4,000,000 voted for the war. From this it is evident, however temporary, of Santa Anna and the realists of Canales, we are more and more convinced that the president lacks the hopefulness of a contest with the republic of the Lone Star."

TEXAS.

President Houston's reply to Gen. Wall's manifesto, announcing the recognition of the United States in the Galveston City of the 27th ult.

It is dated Washington, (Texas) July 29th, 1844, and is eminently caustic. After refusing the salient hero of San Jacinto for his want of diploma in courtesy, in not making his address or communication through the proper channel, the secretary of state, he refers to the indignation expressed by Santa Anna at what he calls the perfidy of the Texan government, disapproving of the acts of the Texan commissioners.

Protestant Episcopal Convention.—The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette of the 19th ult. says: The House of Bishops is still in session, engaged, as we learn, in an investigation of the affairs of the General Theological Seminary.

The following is the action of the House upon a subject of great importance in this Diocese:

"Sentence of Suspension passed upon the Right Reverend Henry Uslick Onderdonk, Doctor in Divinity by the House of Bishops, in General Convention assembled, October 21st, 1844."

"The Right Reverend Henry Uslick Onderdonk, Doctor in Divinity, having acknowledged himself the cause of a schism and injury to the Church, and having submitted himself to the judgment of the House of Bishops, in General Convention assembled, the said House do hereby adjudge that the said Henry Uslick Onderdonk, Doctor in Divinity, be suspended from all public exercise in the offices and functions of the sacred ministry, and in particular from all exercises whichever of the office and work of a Bishop in the Church of God; and does accordingly so suspend the said Henry Uslick Onderdonk, Doctor in Divinity, and declared him suspended, from and after this 21st day of October, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, from all public exercise of the offices and functions of the said ministry, and from all exercise whatsoever of the office and work of a Bishop in the Church of God. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

PHILANDER CHASE, Sen. Bishop.

DELAY.

Our paper has been delayed beyond its proper time, for want of paper.—The bad state of navigation, &c., has been the cause.

TRADES' MEETING.

On Tuesday evening the Masonic Hall was filled with a meeting of the various trades of this city; and was addressed by John Taylor Esq., Alderman Spencer, Gen. Young, and others. The drift of their discourses were to go ahead and carry out the project of sustaining and bridging up Nauvoo by its own mechanical and manual labor.

Mr. Taylor said, "that we can manufacture every thing that is necessary for us to use or wear, by utilizing our industry and means; for labor is wealth and power if we will only carry it out. There is no speculation in it, we want to carry it out on matter of fact principles." &c.

Mr. Spencer said, "that it was to the interest of every Latter-day Saint to use their influence, (both pecuniary and in labor,) and to come forward and assist in building up all up as one—to secure to us a home, a resting place from the impending storm that is gathering to burst over the world. We are identified as one and we ought to feel for the interest of all—we must support one another." &c.

Gen. Young said, "we can eventually produce a nation and bring back some of the money that has been going away from us all the time. The only thing is to persevere, and we can compete with eastern manufactures." &c. &c.

A letter was read by John Taylor Esq., from a gentleman of Peterboro, N. H., by the name of Livingston, relative to building a factory here; and a committee consisting of Messrs. Scovil, Repsher, and Adams, were appointed to answer said communication, and make arrangements for the erection of a suitable building for said factory.

Adjourned till Tuesday next, at 8 o'clock P. M.

The smoky days—or, as some say, "Indian Summers," have given the farmer an excellent chance to prepare for winter. The weather is dry, and for the most part, warm, giving the extensive prairie of the west time to dry, and burn, and smoke, while the Indians hunt. So this is self-evident that the "smoky days," can make smoky days, like Jonathan, John Bull, and Saint Cloud, can do little more than smoke a cigar, or snuff up their noses at the Dutchman's pipe. As the old chief once said "heap of prairie on fire make smoke, heap."

Wit of the World.—The wit manifested by all the leading societies, which make up what is commonly called "the world," exhibits itself the farthest in the American of the present age.

The temperance party comes out with cold water calender; the jolly crew with a "comic," so faintly pictured, that the devil himself, in his most gracious and sanctified meditations, could not help laughing at the address of some body. Next comes a democrat, a whig, and by the powers of John Bull, the Presbyterian, the Crocker, and as we may say—all sort of American. Now all we have to say is, so long as "gawking" looks ahead, it is to be hoped that American will calculate during this year, what may be expected next year; but if every new kind is a true sign of this "speckled bird," age, in all sobriety, as it was in the days of Noah, we should think all the "clean beasts and fowls were aboard, and that the "creeping things" had begun to come on.

ANCIENT WRITING.

It gratifies the curious, to see curious things; and so we for once take a moments time to lay before our readers a specimen of ancient writing about two hundred years old. Having no arbitrary characters to correspond with the manuscript, we have to imitate with letters as near as we can. Soon after printing commenced in English with a small t over it meant "that;" w with e after it meant "which;" and so of many other words. Him, with a colon after it meant "himself;" teachi; teaching, &c.

There are 74 octavo pages in the manuscript finely written. It was a sermon of the Reverend Thomas Kimbrey, and bears date, "March 2, 1636, at Honely in Ware," Conn.

A treatise of the teaching of the Spirit.

An Assay to remove a bar that stops zealous men from embracing the everlasting covenant with full assurance of their interest & perseverance in grace to the possession of glory; & occasions differend am. brethren, we I conceive to be That they see not their need of God, who is the fountain of life, & in whose light we see light. Psal. 36:9.

From the Illinois State Register.

Warsaw, Nov. 1st, 1844.

DEAR SIR:—I send you a plate with an engraved likeness of T. C. Sharp, Editor of the Warsaw Signal, and one of the supposed murderers of Jo Smith. He has made himself somewhat notorious in our county as one of the chief agitators of the Anti-Mormon humbug. He it is who invents and publishes all the lies about Mormon stealing; Mormon murders; Mormon adulteries; spiritual wives and fanatics; for the purpose of exciting the people to riot and murder. This same Sharp was once an Anti-Masonic editor in the western part of New York. He it was who invented the name of "Jack Mason" for all such persons who refused to take part in the Anti-Masonic humbug of that day. He has transferred himself to Hancock, settled at Warsaw, and made himself the organ of a gang of town lot speculators there, who are afraid that Nauvoo is about to fill off their towns, and render their speculations abortive. As a wit, his most brilliant achievement here was to import his own nick-name for the peaceable people of New York and apply it with the affix of Jack's Mormon to the honest and sober minded portion of the community in Hancock. This fellow after laboring for years, in the Anti-Masonic cause in New York; and assisting to give the whigs an ascendancy in the western part, now pretends to be a democrat. But he deceives nobody. Every one knows that he and a few others at Warsaw pretend to be democrats; as a surer means of injuring the democratic party. Whenever a whig paper talks about democrats being in the exterminating party, it is always the fellow. They are also the democratic witnesses and letter writers for the Whigs against the Governor. It is by such fellows the whigs can prove any thing they want to. But now for the likeness. Here it is.

THOMAS C. SHARP.

The likeness is a good one; and admirably takes off the true mean, sneaking look of the man; the cunning, malice, vulgarity, envy, cruelty and cowardice of a paltry spirit, relieved by no one respectable quality. I have been of the trouble of having his likeness engraved for your paper so that some of his sympathisers may see for themselves what kind of a creature it is who wheedles and moves them.

Very respectfully yours &c.

THE ARMY.

Although the Military of Illinois has made two campaigns this season, still so little is said or done about this "Regular Army," as Webb has it, that few people know that the United States have any troops in actual service; but, just to relieve the community from false security, or from a notion that a Republican government had no soldiers to toe the mark "When the war-dogs are howling."

We have clipped the following:

Movement of Troops.—A detachment of 260 recruits, infantry, arrived at Buffalo on Friday, per Troy and Erie line route for western ports. They are under command of Captain McKenzie, and Lieutenants Allen, Hurst, and Lanning. Some of the men had a long and tedious way to travel, being detached for Fort Gratiot, Mackinaw, Winnebago, and some to posts on the Upper Mississippi, as far as Fort Crawford.

It is generally supposed to be hard service to be a soldier, but as there was so much hard fighting carried on in old times, and so much talk'd about by some folks,—we hope the Nauvoo Legion will be peace makers.

THE NAVY.

The "right Arm" of our country's defence always ought to make an American feel proud, knowing that in common with all nations, we have rights to defend upon the high seas. Commerce is one of the twin sisters of fortune, and, like a valiant to a lady, an honorable navy, dignifies her country, at the same time that she extends the arm of protection.—What would Great Britain do without her navy? And what would the commerce of the United States be worth without the "Iron eyes" of a 74, or the hard arguments of "Long Tom," to compel obedience of national rights?

That's therub. The following is to the point and shows that we rule the water as well as Britania:

The St. Mary, sloop of war, was launched from the navy yard Washington on the 24th inst. It is said the St. Mary is ordered for the Mediterranean, under Commander J. L. Saunders.

The Portsmouth, new sloop of war, is preparing for sea at Portsmouth, N. H.—It is said under Commander Montgomery she will go out to relieve the Saratoga on the coast of Africa. Capt. Skinner will go in her to take command of the squadron on the coast.

The James T. Town, sloop of war, is to be fitted out and will sail in November, to be the flag ship of the African Squadron.

The Dale sloop of war at New York, is also to be fitted out for the coast of Africa.

Mediterranean Squadron.—A late London paper states that Com. Smith, with the U. States squadron, was at Malta on the 25th Sept. on which day Lord Ellenborough reached there in the steam frigate Geyser.

The Plymouth U. S. sloop of war arrived at Constantinople on 13th Augt. and was at Malta on the 15th Sept.

The Fairfield sloop of war arrived at Malta on the 11th Sept. from Palermo, Tunis, and Tripoli.

The Erie store ship, Lieut. Duke, has gone up to Norfolk navy yard.

The Oregon U. S. brig, Lieut. Johnson sailed from N. Y. on the 21st inst. for Chagres, via Carthagena.

The Falmouth, sloop of war, reached Pensacola on 9th inst. from Norfolk, via Vera Cruz, where she landed Gov. Shannon the American minister to Mexico.

Chinese Squadron.—The American and French men of war Brandywine, St. Louis, Cleopatra, and Acmene, have arrived almost simultaneously in the Chinese waters.

The U. S. steamer Union, Commander Bell, reached Pensacola on the 10th inst. from Vera Cruz, Texas. One of her boilers so injured as to prevent her proceeding to Vera Cruz, to which she was bound with Mr. Duff Green.

The Pioneer U. S. brig Commander Shaw, arrived at Hampton Roads on the 11th inst. in 58 days from Rio de Janeiro, bringing home seamen whose time of service had expired.

The Raritan U. S. frigate, at Bahia about the 6th ult. and was expected at Pernambuco on the 12th.

The French Navy.—The Courier Francais says that there are now building in the French docks yard, 23 ships of the line, 19 frigates, 2 brigs, 3 schooners, 10 transports, and 24 steamers, with power varying from 80 to 550.

Another Mormon Book.—We have omitted to notice as a convenient pocket companion,—"Evidences in proof of the Book of Mormon, being a divinely inspired Record, written by the forefathers of the natives whom we call Indians, who are a remnant of the Tribe of Joseph, and hid up in the earth, but come forth in fulfillment of prophecy for the gathering of Israel, and the re-establishing of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Together with all the objections commonly urged against it, answered and refuted.—To which is added a proclamation and warning to the Gentiles who inhabit America. By Charles Thompson, Minister of the Gospel."

These books can be had at the printing office, or of the author. He that writes a line in favor of truth does more than he that rules a nation.

Moh Law in England.—JAMES COCKBURN BELAMY, the lawyer who was lately tried in London for the murder of his young and beautiful wife, has been in danger of his life from the state of popular feeling in the vicinity where the parties lived previous to their visit to London.—On his return to the north of England, so firm was the conviction of his guilt, and so strong the feeling against him, that the shop-keepers refused to sell him articles of food. He was burnt in effigy, and his house pulled down, and he himself only escaped the roughest treatment by hiding in a cornfield. He has been obliged to leave the neighborhood.

♂ Mobbing, is as "catching" as the small pox. The old world, we perceive, has taken it the "natural way"—and if she is not very sick,—then all signs fail while the wicked rule.

THE POTATO ROT.

A writer in the Banzer Whig attributes the prevalent disease among potatoes to the old age of the varieties, which are most affected by it. He says:—"I have been formerly struck with the truth, that where the potatoe has been attacked with the rot, it has been confined, with few exceptions, to those varieties which have been propagated the longest, while those which have been recently introduced from the natural seed are as fair as a milk maid's cheek. The fact is, that most varieties are actually dying with old age, and like the hard winter which hastens the old man to his tomb, so the present season has been rife with all the elements necessary to quicken these principles of decay; as we have been visited with almost every extreme to which our fickle climate is subject."

So far as the observation of the writer has extended, the Chenango variety, which has been cultivated by farmers for a long series of years, has been most affected by the disease. The English whites, and long reds have not suffered so much, because they have less constitutional defects, but these "live, for some years, shown strong symptoms of decay."

An intelligent farmer of our acquaintance corroborates the opinion advanced in the above paragraph, attributing the disease to the constant replanting of the same seed. He says the distemper has become so fatal in its consequences in some of the Eastern States that the farmers call it the potato cholera. The farmers of Nova Scotia, who shipped large quantities of this root to Boston during the past season, have long been acquainted with the disease and call it the rot. It seems to pervade particular farms, and sometimes appears in the stalk like rust long before the potatoes have arrived at maturity, and on cutting open the young roots, the disease will be found to exhibit itself in black spots throughout the inside of it. At other times the distemper will appear after the potatoes have been harvested and buried or put into the cellar. The first indication of the disease which the farmer receives will be from an offensive smell arising from their decomposition. His only resource then is to remove them as soon as possible, as the distemper in few infects the whole body, no matter how large it may be. The progress of this distemper among the potatoes in Nova Scotia seems to have been somewhat singular. It would break out suddenly and spread from farm to farm and cellar to cellar, angling a few years, and then entirely disappearing for a time. The farmers supposing the epidemic was located somewhere about the premises resorted to white washing and cleansing their cellars but to no effect. At length the evil was discovered to be as stated above, in the continual replanting of the same seed. Like all other plants, the potatoe finally degenerates and runs out. The Nova Scotians now plant the balls and thus produce new seed, which during the second year arrives at maturity and full size. Such produce is proof against the rot and by this practice they were enabled to furnish seed potatoes to some of our New-England farmers for last Spring's planting.

The distemper with this indispensable plant seems not to be confined to this side the Atlantic, but has long been known to the people of Ireland, whose potato-eating propensities are so proverbial. From a gentleman from that country we learn that in 1816, the apple potatoe, which for several years previous was the favorite and most excellent of the many species then in existence in that country, exhibited symptoms of decay not unlike those already spoken of, and ceased to be a reliable portion not only of the sea-stock of the emigrant, but was seldom purchased for the more immediate use of the table. The result was that the farmers discontinued its cultivation, unwilling to lose their time and labor on seed which could no longer sustain the reputation of the stock; and this is still the custom there. It would hence appear that, either unable or indisposed to inquire into the cause and nature of the decay, they come at once to the root of the evil by rejecting the diseased seed altogether. On the subject of potatoes, Irish authority is not so very odd.—N. Y. Tribune.

♂ The present generation caps the climax for finding out reasons for every thing; only its own corruption;—that even if it be murder, is justified. Why not give God the glory, and acknowledge that a disease had been sent among potatoes? The Lord creates good and the Lord creates evil; yet, is there evil in the city and the Lord has not done it? If reasons were as plenty as blackberries, the judgement of God out-weighs them all. What a solemn reflection comes to the contemplative mind, when he looks back upon the self-sufficiency of passed generations, as well as the present. The men of renown the Pharaohs; the builders of Babel; the Chaldeans; the Babylonians; the Jews—where are they? Echo says where? Oh ye! oh ye! who speculate on the knowledge, power and judgements of God, know this, that the people and potatoes are struck with a rot, that will eventually consume them, as fire does dry wood in an oven.

The Last Century of Duelling.—(From a Chapter on Duelling, in Fraser's Magazine for May, 1840.) From the beginning of the reign of George I. to the present moment, it appears that upwards of two hundred leading duels have taken place, including, of course, four hundred principals and as many seconds. In three of these, both combatants were killed, in the others about eighty were killed, and about one hundred and twenty were wounded, one half of which number were desperately, and the other half slightly, and the remaining numbers escaped unhurt. It is estimated that in duels one-fifth part is killed, one-half, more or less severely wounded. Rather more than twenty trials in all have occurred, in which some were found guilty of manslaughter and four of murder. Two were justly hanged, and the others too mercifully imprisoned. In the catalogue of duellists, are found the names of York, Norfolk, Richmond, Sherrborne, Mercantony, Townsend, Exmouth, Talbot, Lonsdale, Lonsdale, Malden, Camelford, Pater, Castlerough, Balgrave, Pitt, Fox, Sheridan, Canning, Tierney, Burdett, Wellington, Londonderry, &c.; and after these a prodigious number of play actors, lawyers, clerks, shop apprentices, butlers, and a few dustmen.

What a picture of human depravity! What a monument of corruption! What a solemn warning to men of principle to beware!!! Suppose that some of our most renowned moralists should finish the picture by adding a list of American Duellists. They would embellish the bloody ground work with the names of a Barr, a Clinton, a Jackson, a Decatur, a Clay, with here and there a lesser speck of "Dust," showing their brethren of the "Red bud" and "fire fly," that on land and sea, and from the President down to the patriot of the penknife, we too were, et cetera, gentlemen of HONOR!

Dreadful Loss of Life near Sunderland, England.—Accounts from Sunderland give an account of an explosion in a colliery at Haswell colliery, about ten miles from Sunderland, which has caused the destruction of ninety-six human beings! It is said that at the time of the accident there were a hundred persons in the pit, and that only three or four had been saved.

Further Particulars.—This calamity appears to have been more a fearful than we first anticipated. The number of men in the pit at the time of the explosion was nearly 150. Only one man, it is said, has escaped alive uninjured. Upward of 100 dead bodies have already been brought to the bank. It is utterly impossible to describe the dreadful anguish of the surviving relatives.

One man was found unscathed, with his cap in his mouth, having placed it there in order to prevent the foul air getting into his mouth.

Several had their fingers closed in each other, and pressing on their mouths. Fifteen putters (boys and young men employed in taking the coals from the hewers to the bottom of the shaft) were in one lump—all clasped together. They had their clothes on prepared to ascend when working they are nearly naked.

The state of the relatives beggars all description. Each cottage had its dead father or brother, or both.

Three men at the bottom of the shaft were saved. The shock was so great that the roof fell from the bottom and the further progress of the shaft was stopped.

These men thus providentially rescued were the first who brought the intelligence to the bank; the explosion was not heard by those outside the pit. The men who asked the cause of the dreadful accident say that the state of the pit must have been known to some persons; but it does not appear that any complaints had been previously made.

One boy had his bones sticking out of his thigh; many had their bones broken, some very much scorched, while others, to all external appearances, were uninjured. The "after damp" is generally fatal to those who escape the immediate effect of the explosion.

The three men saved are John Thompson, wagon wayman; John Hall, hewer; and—Coats, putter. These three were at the bottom of the shaft when the explosion occurred.

From the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.
CITY OF NAVOJO, Ill., Sept. 14, 1844.

DEAR SIR:—I chose to take a route by land from Quincy to this place, and left on the morning of the 12th, in a wagon with a pair of horses which I had chartered for the purpose. The first 12 or 15 miles of the route towards Warsaw is the most beautiful undulating prairie, and of superior capabilities for farming. There are a few miles of country somewhat broken into ridges and ravines covered with timber, scarcely settled with people from Tennessee and Kentucky, with a sprinkling of natives of New England. There is very little appearance of enterprise or improvement on this part of the way; there are two small hamlets of very little consequence, called Bear Creek and Lima; we also passed Bear Creek, a stream perhaps as large as Mill River, in Springfield. Seeing a sign over a log cabin, of Cafe and Beer, I went in, and notwithstanding the unpromising appearances outside the interior was arranged with the utmost neatness, and the clerk and beer which the lady of the house gave me was excellent. I certainly shall lay no claims for shrewdness in promptly making up my mind that she was a Yankee. Mrs. Jackson told me she was a native of Rutland County, Vermont. Her husband was a house joiner, and was at work a few miles on the way to Warsaw. I had no difficulty in making up my mind, from her remarks, that she had made an almost fatal mistake in leaving the green hills of their native State; for, of the emigrants they left behind them, scarcely one could be found here. I have much reason to believe that this was one of thousands of instances of persons who would return with alacrity to the places they have left, if it was in their power. After passing over for 8 miles of level prairie, I arrived at Warsaw at 1 o'clock. Warsaw like Quincy is built on a high bluff, and approaches the Mississippi by a road of very steep grade. It is a place of considerable business, but is indifferently built.

You will remember that Warsaw was the scene of much excitement and alarm during a part of the time of the troubles with the Mormons in Nauvoo, and particularly after the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith in the Carthage jail. There was considerable reason for alarm, for if the Mormons had not been quieted by the assurance of Gov. Ford that the guilty murderers should be brought to justice, they would most probably have taken the matter into their own hands, and there was no force available under the control of the Governor, that could have prevailed against the well-organized and well-armed Nauvoo Legion.

A boat arriving while I was stopping for dinner, I dismissed my "land-craft," and took passage to Nauvoo by water. I arrived here about sunset, and located myself at the "Mansion House," kept by Joe Smith up to the time of his death, and by his widow until a week past. It is now kept by Mr. William Marks, (a leading Mormon.) Mrs. Smith having moved into a very commodious house on the opposite side of the street.

Designing to make the best of the short time I could remain here, I immediately informed Mr. Marks that I was a stranger from "Yankee land," visiting Nauvoo for the purpose of learning every thing about the place and the people that circumstances would allow, and that he should lay me under great obligations if he would give me in the first place a horse and carriage and driver, to see what I could of the city, and the Temple now building; and after that to answer all my questions which he might not consider his department.

Mr. Marks very readily expressed a willingness to aid me in my enquiries, and instead of sending his son, went with me himself.

Although the dusk of the evening was rapidly coming on, I soon saw that I was in a City. I had not before by any means acquired an adequate idea of the extent and population of the city of Nauvoo, nor of the size, style, and superior workmanship of the Temple, so far as it is advanced; but determined to look at the whole by daylight, I returned to the Hotel. I was introduced during the evening to Mrs. Joseph Smith Senior, Mother of Joe, and talked with her unreservedly of the affairs of the Mormons, and of the horrible lot which resulted in the death of two of her sons, on whom she had for a long time leaned for support. Mrs. Smith is born in Massachusetts, is 63 years of age, and her maiden name was Lucy Clark.

Her father kept for several years the tavern in Montague, known afterwards as the "Gun Tavern," and afterwards kept public house in Keene, N. H. She, also for a time, before her marriage, lived with a relation in South Hadley, and when she found that I was familiar with no place where she had lived half a century ago, she expressed great satisfaction, and made many enquiries about persons some of whom are now living. I gave her all the information in my power, and she became so engaged that she was unwilling to suspend her conversation when it became time to retire for the night.

This morning, Mr. Marks took his horse and wagon quite early, and carried me again to the Temple, and quite to the rear of the city. I saw and talked with the Architect, who showed me all the drawings and plans of the Temple, and explained them as much as I had time to spare. I also saw and conversed with several of the workmen; and particularly with the stone-cutters and sculptors, and mounted the ladder and went on to the topmost part where they were laying the walls, and after all, I do not feel competent to give you an intelligible description, but will do the best I can.

I will in the first place say that the ground plot has no rival for beauty and eligibility for the site of a city in any other town on the Mississippi river, and I have seen no spot that resembles it near as much as the ground on which the city of Washington is built. The river at the northern end takes a sweep, and by the time it gets to the lower part of the city it describes an ellipse. The front on the flat alluvial part embraces perhaps one-third of the city, contains the principal part of the stores and the most of the public houses. This embraces Main street, which is a broad avenue 1 1/2 miles long, and several parallel streets, and others crossing them at right angles. The city then rises an easy grade to the level of the prairie, say 150 feet above the river. On this elevation the Temple is situated and shows to the very best advantage; back of this the city still extends at least a mile, and the whole comprises an area of perhaps 4 square miles. You will not suppose that all this ground is completely built upon; yet it is nearly as closely built as the rest of the city. Comparing it with an I like that may be called a "city of distances"—with this difference—that at the rate the city of Nauvoo has progressed for five years past, it will very soon go ahead of its "illustrious predecessor" in the number and compactness of its population. The buildings are in general well built, a good portion of brick or stone; some of them are capacious and costly.

The Temple is situated relatively much as the City Hall is in Washington, and is a magnificent structure so far as it is advanced. It is 123 feet long, 28 feet wide, and the walls 57 feet high. The materials are white lime stone which are quarried on their own ground within a convenient distance. There are 30 plasters projecting about 15 inches from the walls, the bases of which are wrought to represent the rising moon in its first quarter, and the capitals which measured 5 feet high and 6 feet wide at the top, represent the meridian sun, the whole executed in the most elaborate style, and indeed, the workmanship throughout is as well done as any thing in the United States. I speak with confidence, for I have seen and examined all the best specimens of stone cutting and masonry in this country. There are to be circular windows between each pilaster and midway between the upper and lower story windows, so finished as to represent stars. The whole is to be surmounted by a splendid dome. In the basement is the baptismal font, 13 feet long by 10 feet wide, standing on the backs of 12 oxen—4 looking south, 4 north, 2 east and 2 west.—These are very handsomely carved of wood. I should not have known the nature of the material, if some lawless rascals had not defaced them by breaking off parts of the horns, &c. Two of the walls are now up for the roof, and the work is going on with great vigor. There are on the Temple and at the quarry 140 men employed, besides numerous teams.

Mr. William Weeks, a native of Martha's Vineyard, is the architect, from whose kindness I had most of the statements I have made.

Nauvoo contains 10,000 inhabitants and has an organized military force of 4,000 armed men. There have been within a year at least 12,000 people residing within the city.

I have a mass of facts in relation to the ceremonies of the Mormons and their history; also some circumstances in relation to the war that have not been made public, which, if I can get time to arrange, I will give you.

Truly Yours, S.

Fatal Tragedy.—We were shown a private letter yesterday from a gentleman in Arkansas, to a friend in this city, in which it is stated that a Mr. Pickard, well known in this city, and his son a young man about 21 years of age, were killed in an affray on the 18th inst., at Miller's Bluffs, on the Ouachita river, Arkansas. Mr. P. had been engaged in business for some time at Miller's Bluffs. He had been for many years a Commissary of one of the wards of the Municipality, and was a veteran of '14-'15. We will probably get the particulars of this unfortunate affair in a few days.

[New Orleans Pic.]
The New York True Sun says: We understand that a sale of India shawls, on the 24th, by Messrs. Foster & Livingston, several shawls sold as high as $650 and $500; others at $400, $300, &c.

The Courier Francais states that the hopes entertained as to the cutting of the isthmus of Panama cannot be realized.—M. Garelli has found that the isthmus lies between the two oceans, not merely to the height of ten yards above the level of the sea, as was stated, but to 125 yards; so that instead of a single trench, a canal with 60 locks would be required.

Translators are certainly great bunglers. It is now made evident, by the example of the Rev. Bishop O'Quinn, that the passage in Scripture which has hitherto been rendered "a little wine for the stomach's sake," should read in English "a good deal of brandy for the stomach's sake."—[N. Orleans Crescent.]

A horse forty-two years old.—This horse owned by O. Mauran, of 72 Wall St., New York, is a great curiosity. Mr. Mauran drives him into the city almost daily from Staten Island, and he can now travel a mile in less than four minutes. He is as active as a colt, and as strong as an ox. The oldest horse on record in the British Museum was 52 years. This is believed to be the oldest horse in the United States.

A dray was driven to the store of F. E. Filley, on Wednesday evening, soon after dark, and a load of twenty-five pigs of lead was taken from a pile near the door, and carried off. The thief has not been discovered.—Republican.

Church Burning.—The Catholic Church at Guilford, Canada, has been burned down. The Hamilton Journal, a Radical paper, says, that it was burned intentionally by Orangemen in revenge for the celebrating the reversal of O'Connell's sentence. The Journal offers not a shadow of proof of this atrocious charge.

Hon. Anson Jones is thought to be chosen President of Texas.

COMMUNICATIONS.

To the Editor.—Sir: Permit a stranger to say a word or two in favor of your pleasant city. I learn from your people much that never gets abroad. First, instead of broil and contention, jarrings and strife, as some, who have gone out from among you, are trying to make the world believe, you are all peace, almost a Millennium; in fact I never saw so great a union.

Second, instead of Gen. Smith's widow, (Emma,) being cut off from the church, she is as good standing as the ever was, and minute to stranger, the same noble disposition. Truly, the church seems more united since the death of Gen. Smith, than when it was here last year. Your Union is almost a miracle; and there seems to be a spirit thrilling through the bosoms of all Nauvoo—let also tongues say what they may, we will carry out Joseph Smith's measures, in union, now and forever. "If you do, God is with you." Yours respectfully, PHILADELPHIA.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CITY COUNCIL.

At the last meeting of the City Council, among other business the following ordinances were published:

AN ORDINANCE CONCERNING SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS AND OTHER PURPOSES.
Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the city council of the city of Nauvoo, that if any person shall sell or give away or dispose of, to be drunk in this city in less quantities than one gallon, any spirituous or intoxicating drink or liquors, except in cases of sickness, they shall pay a fine for each and every offence, of not less than twenty five, and not more than four hundred dollars to be tried before the Mayor.

Sec. 2. And be it further ordained that all ordinances or parts of ordinances, or private grants concerning spirituous and other liquors, are hereby repealed.

Sec. 3. And be it further ordained that if any person shall be convicted before the Mayor, of drunkenness in this city, he, she, or they shall be fined twenty dollars.—This fine may be paid in labor upon the public street or other public works of this city, at the discretion of the Mayor.

This ordinance to be in force from and after its passage.
Passed Nov. 9th, 1844.
DANIEL SPENCER, Mayor.
W. Richards, Recorder.

AN ORDINANCE CONCERNING A SLAUGHTER HOUSE IN NAVOJO.

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the city council of the city of Nauvoo, that Newel K. Whitner and George Miller, are hereby authorized to use the barn and yard of P. P. Pratt, for the purpose of slaughtering cattle, hogs, and other animals for supplying the Temple hands and the city with meat, until the first of April next.

Sec. 2. This ordinance to be in force from and after its passage.
Passed Nov. 9th, 1844.
DANIEL SPENCER, Mayor.
W. Richards, Recorder.

COMMUNICATED.

DIED.—On the 14th of September 1844, at the residence of Nathaniel Marston, in Olenia, Henderson county Illinois—a stranger by the name of Rufus Wright. He had been to Nauvoo, and was on his return to the State of New York. He said he had a brother in Oneida county by the name of Moses Wright; also, a son in Rochester by the name of John.

NATHANIEL MARSTON.
—At Macedonia, Oct. 23d, after an illness of 3 months, of pulmonary consumption; Eliza Antoinette, daughter of Joseph E. and Harriet Johnson—aged 11 months and six days.

CONSUMPTION.—Wear complaints, Asthma, Bronchitis, hoarseness in children, whooping cough, pneumonia or weakness of the Breasts, Chronic coughs and all diseases of the Pulmonary organs.

NATURE'S OWN PRESCRIPTION.
A purely vegetable and highly approved compound preparation of Pruan's Virginiana or Wild Cherry Bark, approved by the College of Pharmacy, recommended by the Medical Faculty, and universally acknowledged the most valuable Family Medicine ever discovered.

No Quackery!—No Deception!
The Physician may boast of his skill in many diseases, the Quack may puff his wonderful cures, but of all the remedies ever discovered for the diseases of the Pulmonary Organs, it is universally admitted that nothing has ever proved as successful as that unrivalled medicine—Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which has effected some of the most astonishing cures ever recorded in the history of Medicine.

Read what it has done!
A Surprising Cure.—Mrs. Martha Wilson, a poor but highly respectable member of the Methodist Church, was also afflicted with Consumption in its worst form, and considered by all her friends, past recovery. A bottle of this Balsam was procured to her, which relieved her immediately. This circumstance being made known to the members of the church, the purchased several bottles for her which relieved her entirely. The same society have purchased over FORTY bottles for persons in indigent circumstances, and positively assert it has not been used in a single instance where it has not given surprising relief.

We, the undersigned, members of the Darbin Benevolent Society of the Methodist church have examined the above statement of Mrs. Wilson's case, hereby certify it is in all respects true, and earnestly recommend Dr. Wistar's remedy to all who are afflicted.

Foreign News

From the New York Tribune.
FROM CANTON DIRECT.

The ship Robert Fulton, Capt. Drinkwater, arrived yesterday from Canton in 127 days. We extract from the Hong Kong Register the following items:

An ordinance has been passed to protect destitute seamen and other persons in the colony of Hong Kong, and to prevent masters of merchant vessels and others from leaving seamen and other persons in a destitute state in the colony, under a penalty of $1,000 for each offence.

The Robert Fulton touched at St. Helena, but there was nothing of any interest there. The ship Cynthia was in Port; she reports having seen the wreck of the ship Godolphin in the Straits of Foulas.

CHINESE PRINTING.—The Chinese have always done their printing on the stereotype system, never using separate types. The Register, in relation to this subject says:

Whether the Chinese will ever abandon their stereotype system and adopt that of movable types, is an interesting question. They are, it is true, exceedingly tenacious of old habits and customs. Yet we have seen with astonishment, during the period in which they were for the first time brought in contact with European improvements in the art of war, that they manifested the most eager desire to adopt them. They have learned more in the art of engineering and casting cannon, in this short space of time, and have learned it more practically and more cheerfully, than the Turks have permitted themselves to learn in a century. We cannot therefore but augur important changes from the friendly intercourse which is likely to grow up between the most ingenious and the most industrious of Asiatics, and the European mind. The stationary character, which has so long marked the people of China, there is every reason to believe will be broken up, by the contemplation of European models of excellence, and we think that many years will not elapse before the Chinese adopt the European mode of printing, and set their skillful artisans to cut punches on steel, which shall surpass in beauty every thing that the Europeans have yet been able to achieve. Possibly within less than a quarter of a century, Canton may have its Wilson and Figgins, and Caslon, and foundry of type may become as much an article of traffic in the Empire as they are in England.

SPAIN.

The elections have terminated. The general results are not yet known, but it is believed they would be entirely favorable to the Moderados. In the capital the deputies and senators of that party had been returned, and by larger numbers than ever before recorded their votes for candidates. If the statement of the Opposition can be depended on, this is not difficult to be accounted for without supposing the popularity of the Government. They say that the Ministry made up the electoral lists as they pleased, putting on persons who would vote for them without regarding qualifications, and striking off all persons likely to record adverse suffrages.

In some of the provincial elections the Carlists have been successful—at Salamanca, Segovia, and other places—and at many other elections have run the Moderados very close. This display of their numbers appears both to have surprised and alarmed the Government, and a force of 7000 men, under General Villalonga, which was at one time destined for the invasion of Morocco, has been ordered to march for Navarre to keep the Carlists in check.

The Progressists scarcely appear to have taken any part in the elections. At Barcelona only 700 votes were recorded for Narvaez, the highest candidate—a proof either that public feeling was suppressed by military force, or that the electoral lists were reduced to a mere nullity. This inaction is dangerous, as it shows how deep rooted must be the discontent of a large proportion of the Spanish population.

ITALY.

The imperial family of Austria has gone to reside for a time at Trieste—probably to watch over affairs at Italy, and especially at Rome, where the sovereign Pontiff, deaf to the advice of Austria, Naples, and Tuscany, refuses all concession to that popular discontent which displays itself in perpetual conspiracy against his government.

The attempt made by the Italian revolutionists who had taken refuge at Malta and at Corfu, to enroll bands of adventurers in Albania, in order to organize an other expedition against the Roman States, had, we hear, completely failed.

Marshal Subassiana has gone to Venice to watch the movements of the Duc de Bordeaux, who had arrived there on the 23rd of August. He had received divers well known French legitimists, who had repaired to that city to attend him in that part of his progress through Europe. He had also distinguished himself in swimming, having several times passed without resting, from the Molo to Lido, a distance of three miles.

SWEDEN.

Popular disturbances have been occasioned by the rejection of the measure of reform recently discussed in the Diet—and there were riots on the 23 and 24th of August.

TAHITI.

Additional information has been received from the South Seas—all of a melancholy nature, but widely differing in detail. The Paris Maitre of Wednesday contained the following account:

"The government have received the following intelligence from Tahiti, of the date of April 24th:—After having vainly endeavored to bring back to their obedience the rebels who made the attack at Paravani, Governor Bruat went out to meet them at Mahahina, where they had made themselves entrenched, defended by 3000 men, and three pieces of cannon. On the 17th, Governor Bruat landed with 441 men of all arms. The rebels were taken with the bayonet, the enemy having 102 men killed, their colors taken from them, and their cannon spiked. The next day we destroyed their works, and carried away their arms and ammunition. On our side we have to lament the loss of two officers—M. Nansouty, capitaine de vaisseau, and M. Segniet, of the artillery. We had besides fifty-two men wounded."

VALUABLE INVENTION.

The following account of a new machine for cutting, or rather gathering sheath, which has just been invented in Australia, is very curious, and the results may be most important. It is communicated by Governor Grey, of South Australia, to the Royal Society of England, under the date of Dec. 13, 1843. He says—

"The colony continues to prosper; and the only event which has created any sensation is the complete success which has attended the operations of a newly-invented reaping machine, invented in the colony. This machine reaps, threshes, and winnows, all at the same time, and this at the rate of nearly an acre an hour, the machine requiring to be attended by two men, and to be pushed by two horses. The corn is at once taken from the machine (which stopped for the purpose when it is filled) and put into bags for exportation. The only sum charged for this operation is 10s. per acre; the sowing, saving of seed, and labor, and, consequently, of expense, is very great. The inventor of the machine anticipates that next year the whole of the operations will cost much less than 10s. per acre. I have seen the machine at work, and was quite satisfied as to its success. You will say—but we shall soon make such a machine in England when the principle is known. It is, however, based upon a peculiarity in this climate, and could, I think, only succeed in a similar very dry climate. I must now give you a description of this invention. It is something like a cart pushed forward with two horses, instead of being drawn. In front of the machine is a very large steel comb, which is pushed forward and seizes the straw of the wheat, as an ordinary comb seizes hair. As the machine is moved forward, the straws are by the motion drawn through the comb until the head, or the part containing the grain, is caught in the comb and dragged towards the mouth of the machine. From the peculiar dryness of this climate the wheat sheds very easily—that is, the corn or grain falls very readily out of the husk; indeed so much so, that wheat cannot be reaped here in the usual manner without considerable loss from shelling. As soon, therefore, as the head of the wheat is caught in the comb, the grain is as it were, combed out, and falls down the comb to the mouth of the machine. This part of the head of the wheat which does not get through (which is too fine to admit it, until the grain has fallen out) is ultimately dragged up to the mouth of the machine, where it is knocked off by an apparatus like that of the ordinary threshing machine; whilst the rapid advance of the machine creates a strong breeze, by aid of which the corn is winnowed. The straw is left standing. So much of it as is required for manure, &c., is mowed, and the remainder is burnt. The machine, though perhaps not applicable to the gathering of grain in a damp climate like that of Great Britain, must be quite as applicable in Canada, the United States, South Africa, and other dry countries, and in Australia, and if it answers the expectations formed of it, it will overcome the only difficulty that exists in growing wheat to almost any extent in those countries—that is, the difficulty of cutting, earthing and preparing it for the market."

The earlier operations of wheat growing, namely, ploughing and sowing, may be performed by very few hands, and at a trifling cost, but to cut and secure a great breadth of wheat in the short time that elapses between the ripening and the shedding of the grain, has hitherto been next to impossible in countries where hands are few and labor dear, and when got in, the cost of threshing and preparing for the market, has, in general, run away with all the profit of growing. If wheat can be gathered and threshed in dry climates at a cost of 10s. an acre, which is not more than 3s. or 4s. a bushel on the abundant crops grown in virgin soils, there is no limit to its cultivation in such countries as Australia, South Africa, British and Independent America, or even in the hot and dry countries on the shores of the Mediterranean.—Liverpool Times.

Latest From the River Plate.—We are indebted to the politeness of Capt. W. S. Wadge, of the brig Amazon, at this port from Buenos Ayres, for the following information:—The Amazon left Buenos Ayres on the 19th of August. Hides were high, and the supplies of the article from the ports on the North side of the River Plate were cut off almost entirely in consequence of the cattle having been driven back into the interior by Rivera's troops to prevent supplies from reaching Oribe's army which still maintained its position outside of Montevideo.

On the 1st of August the Flour that had been in bond at Buenos Ayres was allowed to be exported to all ports not in possession of the enemy, on payment of 12 per cent. transit duty.

About 15,000 bbls. of American Flour which had been locked up for about a year, were sold at about $4, silver, and exported to Banda Oriental and all places on the river Uruguay and Parana, but none admitted for consumption at Buenos Ayres. This amount of Flour, although sold and of bad quality, will diminish the demand for new arrivals.

Admiral Brown, who has been commanding the Argentine Squadron, has retired, and Capt. Anthony Toll, a native of Spain, has been appointed in his place with the rank of Commodore. It is understood to be the intention of the Argentine Government to declare the port of Montevideo to be under strict blockade by sea, which must accelerate its fall. This measure will much interfere with American Commerce, as the principal articles landed there now are flour and provisions of the production of the United States, for which there is no demand at Buenos Ayres. Vessels ordered off must, therefore, make losing voyages.

The army of the city of Montevideo was in a very weak state. Gen. Paz, the only General in whom any confidence could be placed, had proceeded to Rio de Janeiro with the hope of procuring assistance from Brazil, which, however, is very improbable. Brazil would be divided into half a dozen new Republics the moment war commenced, and this is well understood at Rio de Janeiro by the government. Gen. Rivera was on the confines of Brazil with 1200 men. The estimate of his force may be put down at about 8,000, and that of Gen. Oribe at 13,000.

The provinces of the Argentine Confederation were quiet, but a strike was being carried on with the provinces of Mendoza, Tucuman and Cordova. The amount of duties collected at the Custom House during the last year exceeded that of any year since the formation of the Republic and the country was prosperous.

The U. S. ship Boston Commander Pendergast, was at Montevideo on the 15 of August.

Loss of Brig Mentor, of Boston.—We are indebted to Captain Caron, of the ship Adirondack, for the following intelligence:—The brig Mentor, Capt. H. F. Merrill, sailed from Bath, Maine, on the 1st of October, loaded with lumber bound for Guadaloupe. On Sunday, the 6th, in lat. 40 30, lon. 65, encountered light buffeting winds, from the North and East, accompanied with a heavy sea. Toward evening the wind increased, and before ten o'clock P. M. a heavy gale set in, wind blowing from the Southeast; by 11 o'clock hove to under a close reef main-top-sail. The gale all the while increased, and before 4 o'clock, A. M. of the 7th, it blew a hurricane; every particle of canvas was blown off the brig, and a heavy topping sea making a clean breach over her. With difficulty the lumber lashings were cut away, and with the loose time, a seaman by the name of Peter Francisco, an Italian, was swept overboard.

By six o'clock, every spar was blown off the vessel. The fore and main mast were snapped off even with the deck. In a few hours the hurricane abated, leaving the wreck with eight souls on board entirely at the mercy of the waves. For thirteen days they were drifting about on the ocean.

A barrel of bread, some pork and a few apples were got out by cutting through the deck, on which the crew subsisted. While on the wreck they passed by a vessel of about 70 tons, bottom up, painted green.

On the morning of the 19th they saw a large ship standing toward them; it proved to be the Proprietor of San M. Captain Silver, bound for Sumatra, who immediately sent his boat and removed the unfortunate sufferers on board.

He paid them every attention humanity could prompt. In about three hours after the ship Adirondack, Capt. E. B. Carston, from Liverpool bound to New York, hove in sight and kindly took the sufferers on board and brought them to New York.

In about an hour after the removal of the crew from the Proprietor, the Adirondack fell in with the wreck of the brig, and passed her about 200 yards to leeward. She was completely water logged and every thing above deck swept clean off.

Description of the Capital of New Mexico.—Santa Fe is the only town of any importance in this province. Like most of the towns in this section of country, it occupies the site of an ancient Pueblo or Indian village, whose race has been extinct for a great many years. Its situation is twelve or fifteen miles east of the Rio del Norte, at the western base of a snow clad mountain, upon a beautiful stream of small mill-power size, which ripples down in icy cascades, and joins the river some twenty miles to the south-westward. The population of the city itself but little exceeds 3000; yet, including several surrounding villages which are embraced in its corporate jurisdiction, it amounts to nearly 6000 souls. The town is very irregularly laid out, and most of the streets are little better than common highways traversing scattered settlements which are interspersed with corn fields nearly sufficient to supply the inhabitants with grain. The only attempt at anything like architectural compactness and precision, consists in four tiers of buildings, whose fronts are shaped with a fringe of porticoes or corridors of the rudest possible description. They stand around the public square, and comprise the Palacio, or Governor's house, the Custom-house, the Barracks (with which is connected the fearful Calabozo), the Casa Consistorial of the Alcades, the Capilla de los Soldados or Military Chapel, beside several private residences, as well as most of the shops of the American traders.—Commerce of the Prairies.

Royal Proclamation.—Her Majesty has just issued a proclamation, of which Punch has been favored with an early copy:—Whereas, on each and every of our Royal movements, it has been, and as the customs of sundry weekly-disposed persons, known as 'Our Own Correspondents,' 'Our Private Correspondents,' and others, to write, and cause to be printed absurd and foolish language, touching ourselves, our Royal consort, and beloved babies—it is our will and pleasure that such foolish practices, (tending as they really do to bring royalty into contempt), shall be discontinued; and that from henceforth, all vain, silly, and sycophantic verbiage shall cease, and good, straightforward, simple English be used in all descriptions by ourselves, our Royal consort, and our dearly beloved children. And furthermore, it shall be permitted to our Royal self to wear a white shawl, or a black shawl, without any idle talk being passed upon the same. And further our beloved consort shall, whenever it shall so please him, change his round hat for a naval cap with a gold band, without calling for the special notice of the newspapers. And further, that our beloved child the Princess Royal, shall be permitted to walk 'hand in hand' with her Royal Father, without exciting such demonstrations of wonderment at the familiarity, as have been made known to me by the public press. Be it known that the Queen of England is not the Grand Llama; and further be it remembered, that Englishmen should not stimulate the vain idolatry of speech familiar in the mouths of eastern bondmen.—Victoria Regina.—Punch.

The port of Weymouth, N. S. has been made a free port of entry.
